The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 16, to insert:

Tender for the Great Lakes: For constructing, equipping, and outfitting, complete for service, a new steam tender for buoyage, supply, and inspection on the Great Lakes, $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Light-House Establishment," on page 19, line 9, to increase the appropriation "for supplies of light-houses" from $400,000 to $450,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred and seventy-five" and insert "six hundred and fifty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That necessary new auxiliary structures, at a total cost not to exceed $20,000, may be erected under this appropriation at established stations, no structure so erected to exceed in cost $1,000 at any one station.

So as to make the clause read:

Repairs of light-houses: For repairing, rebuilding, and improving light-houses and buildings; for improvements to grounds connected therewith; for establishing and repairing day marks and pier-head and other beacon lights; for illuminating apparatus and machinery to replace that already in use, and for incidental expenses relating to these various objects, $650,000: Provided, That necessary new auxiliary structures, at a total cost not to exceed $20,000, may be erected under this appropriation at established stations, no structure so erected to exceed in cost $1,000 at any one station.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 1, to increase the appropriation for "salaries of keepers of light-houses," from $720,000 to $730,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 23, before the word "Florida," to insert "and Indian River;" so as to read:

Lighting of rivers: For establishing, supplying, and maintaining post lights on the Hudson and East rivers, New York; the Raritan River, New Jersey; Connecticut River, Thames River between Norwich and New London, Conn.; the Delaware River between Philadelphia and Bordentown, N. J.; the Elk River, Maryland; York River, Virginia; Cape Fear River, North Carolina; Savannah River, Georgia; St. Johns River and Indian River, Florida, etc.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Life-Saving Service," on page 24, after line 6, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to establish a life-saving station at or near Nahant, Mass., at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Revenue-Cutter Service," on page 25, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one naval constructor in and for the Revenue-Cutter Service, who shall have the relative rank and pay of a first lieutenant in said service, as prescribed in section 2753, Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 15, to insert:

For constructing two revenue steamers, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, one for harbor service at Boston, Mass., to replace the revenue steamer Hamlin, and one for harbor service at Philadelphia, Pa., to replace the revenue steamer Washington, at a cost not to exceed $45,000 each, $90,000.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 22, to insert:

For constructing two revenue steamers of the first class, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, one for service in the Gulf of Mexico, to take the place of the revenue steamer Seward, and one for service at Charleston, S. C., and on the Atlantic coast, to take the place of the revenue steamer Colfax, $160,000; and the total cost of said revenue steamers, under a contract which is hereby authorized therefor, shall not exceed $160,000 each.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 7, to insert:

For constructing a revenue steamer of the first class, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for service on and in the vicinity of the Columbia River Bar, Pacific coast, $125,000; and the total cost of said revenue steamer, under a contract which is hereby authorized therefor, shall not exceed $250,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the amendment, in line 10, after the words "Pacific coast," by inserting "and Puget Sound."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, after the word "coast," it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting "and Puget Sound;" so as to read:

For constructing a revenue steamer of the first class, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for service on and in the vicinity of the Columbia River Bar, Pacific coast, and Puget Sound, $125,000; and the total cost of said revenue steamer, under a contract which is hereby authorized therefor, shall not exceed $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 26, after line 14, to insert:

For the purchase of six cophones, at not exceeding $500 each, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Engraving and printing," on page 26, line 22, to increase the appropriation "for labor and expenses of engraving and printing" from $455,000 to $475,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to line 23, on page 26, where the word "directions" should be "direction." I think the Senator will agree to that correction.

Mr. ALLISON. That is undoubtedly a typographical error.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made, in the absence of objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 27, line 7, to increase the appropriation "for wages of plate printers," etc., from $560,000 to $575,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state to the Senator having the bill in charge that I propose to offer an amendment to the paragraph just read, but I presume that the Senator prefers that the bill should be gone through with before amendments are offered upon the floor. If that is correct, I will withhold my amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I do prefer to have that course adopted, as I think I have some anticipation of the amendment to be offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, and I want, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, to make some further investigation respecting the plan of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply want it understood by the friends of the amendment that I am diligent in the matter, and merely withhold it for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. They will undoubtedly take notice.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the appropriations for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, in line 3, on page 36.

ERECTION OF TEMPORARY FORTIFICATIONS IN STATES.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator in charge of the appropriation bill kindly consents, in view of the near close of the day's session, to my calling up Senate joint resolution No. 129, which was introduced by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. The Senator from Georgia has prepared a substitute which will obviate, I think, all objections or criticisms which were made to the joint resolution in its original form.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have, as stated by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], prepared a substitute for all that portion of the joint resolution following the resolving clause, which I submit at the suggestion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], and several others who objected to some of the phraseology of the pending joint resolution, and I propose to present my substitute for the original joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 129) relative to suspension of part of section 355 of Revised Statutes, relative to erection of forts, fortifications, etc.

Mr. BACON. I now offer the substitute to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution and insert:

That in case of emergency, when in the opinion of the President the immediate erection of any temporary fort or fortification is deemed important and urgent, such temporary fort or fortification may be constructed upon the written consent of the owner of the land upon which such work is to be placed; and the requirements of section 355 of the Revised Statutes shall not be applicable in such cases.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will accept the substitute, so far as I have authority to do so.

Mr. BATE. Is that the original joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BACON. It is not.

Mr. BATE. I opposed that joint resolution, but I think this is all right.

Mr. BACON. I so understood, and one of the objects I had in presenting the substitute was to conform to the views of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. I am very much obliged to the Senator. I always want to stand up for the rights of the States.

Mr. PASCO. The substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia avoids all the objections hitherto made to the original joint resolution, and I think it is now entirely satisfactory to all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COST OF MAIL TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a document a paper prepared by James L. Cowles with regard to railroad transportation and the cost of transporting the mails, in order to use it before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

SUBLETTING OF MAIL CONTRACTS.

Mr. STEWART. I have here a statement, signed by a large number of persons acquainted with the matter, showing the evil of the subletting of mail contracts. I ask to have it printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. It is very short, being a simple statement of facts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Nevada? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4936) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies, reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 1, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 31, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BAILEY. Before the Journal is approved, I desire to suggest that I hardly think the Journal is quite full enough with reference to the decision on the point of order decided yesterday. The Speaker held, and in that holding I fully concur with him—and for the sake of the subsequent proceedings of the House I desire the Journal to show fully and exactly what the holding was—that if the resolution I had the honor to submit was a privileged matter, it was entitled to be disposed of at once, without any reference to a committee. I believe that was the holding of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The statement of the Chair is set out in full in the Journal.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not catch the reading of it in that way. If so, I am, of course, content.

The SPEAKER. It is embodied in full in the Journal.

Subsequently,

Mr. BAILEY said: Mr. Speaker, having examined the Journal, I find that the Speaker's full statement of the matter referred to is there. The Clerk did not read it, as it is not usual to do so.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—PATTERSON VS. CARMACK, TENTH DISTRICT, TENNESSEE.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK, on behalf of Committee on Elections No. 3, submitted the report of that committee in the contested-election case of Josiah Patterson, contestant, vs. E. W. Carmack, contestee, from the Tenth Congressional district of Tennessee; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the House Calendar.

On motion of Mr. KIRKPATRICK, by unanimous consent, the minority of the committee were allowed one week in which to present their views.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

And then, on motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 9378), with Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. At the time the committee rose last night an amendment was pending which, for the information of the committee, the Clerk will again report.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 15, page 44, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

"For the erection of new buildings at and for the use of the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., of the character and to the extent that the Secretary of the Navy may in his judgment deem necessary and practicable under the appropriation, in accordance with plans to be determined upon by the Secretary, and for the removal of such old buildings as may, in the judgment of said Secretary, be necessary to be removed for the convenient and suitable location and construction of the said new buildings, $500,000."

Mr. McINTIRE. Mr. Chairman, as I have at no time since I have been a member of this body inflicted myself in the slightest upon it, I will now, in view of the importance of the matter now pending, ask the indulgence of the House for fifteen minutes in addition to the five minutes to which I am entitled under the rule.

Mr. DINGLEY. On this question?

Mr. McINTIRE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McINTIRE] asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for fifteen minutes in addition to the five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman will confine himself, of course, to the amendment.

Mr. McINTIRE. Absolutely to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McINTIRE. Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak to the matter under consideration, I do so impelled by a consciousness that I would be derelict in my duty were I to remain silent at such a time. I approach the subject with a feeling that is a strange mixture of shame and pleasure; shame that my country has for so long neglected the school at which our naval heroes, the Sigsbees of the future, are to receive their first instruction in their noble profession; pleasure because of a hope—born of egotism, perhaps—that some word of mine may tend to raise this honorable body from its state of lethargy to a sense of the folly of the course it is pursuing toward the Academy at Annapolis.

That Academy, gentlemen, should be the nation's glory. As it stands to-day it is the nation's disgrace. I do not make this assertion carelessly, but base it upon a large and indisputable array of cold, convincing facts. These facts are not of my discovery. The knowledge of them is in the exclusive possession of no man or set of men. The Navy Department knows of them and has laid them before the proper committees of both the legislative branches of the Government. The officers of the naval arm of the service have been cognizant of them for years. The press has published them, and the people, gentlemen, read the papers.

We alone seem blind to the real condition of that institution, or, if seeing, do so without realizing what the effect may be of further withholding from the Academy that support which should have been tendered it long ago. I do not go so far as to charge criminal neglect against this body, but I utter only what is the simple truth when I say that that is the view held by men abler than I am to pass upon the matter, and that there is good ground for this opinion I think is shown in the official reports, as well as by the individual expression of persons competent to judge. That the cadets who in later years are to command our warships should have to abandon their quarters, or a portion of them, for fear they would tumble down about their heads is a sad and melancholy truth. But truth it is, as I shall show a little further on, and one of which even the most energetic of those who oppose an appropriation for the Academy somewhat commensurate with its needs can scarcely feel proud. The buildings in which the cadets are even now housed are none too safe, and if this spirit of procrastination is longer to prevail a day may come when we will repent in sackcloth and ashes our present ill-directed efforts at economy.

The Naval Academy is as much a part of this Government and as important a part as any institution of the Republic, and yet the scant attention it has received from Congress and the meager sums rant in the matter to the supposition that it was in reality an American edition of London's famous Blue Coat Charity School on a little cheaper scale.

Why the Academy has been treated in this fashion I for one do not know. Various reasons have been assigned, among them that the Maryland delegation in past Congresses has been slow to recognize its pressing necessities and that politics in one way or another has tended to retard its progress. I do not know about this, and I think that whether or not the delegation has been slow to see the wants of the institution is a question the agitation of which at this time would be profitless to the Academy. Personally, I have little knowledge upon that point, and I will not the more quickly accept the criticism because the Maryland delegation up to the present Congress happened to be composed almost wholly of Democrats. To hold up the mirror to reflect the sins of omission of which anyone has been guilty will count for naught now except in so far as it bears directly upon the question at issue.

This is my first term in this body, and never before have I had even a suspicion that the Naval Academy was in the disgraceful condition that it is to-day. But since I know the truth, I will not hesitate to plead with this House for a change in its ruinous course with reference to it, and I am proud to say that there is not a single member of the solid Republican delegation from the Old Line State who will not join hands with me, and perhaps go me one better, in this work of redemption.

And I further trust, and I can not help but believe, that you gentlemen, without regard to party or faction or section, will come nobly to the rescue when once you fully comprehend the enormity of our mistake in denying or delaying the succor of which the school at Annapolis stands so much in need.

In doing what I can to aid in turning the search-light of truth upon the miserable pile of antiquated masonry, rotten shingles, and hideous architecture on the banks of the Severn, I would first make a comparison between the treatment of the Naval Academy and that vouchsafed its sister institution, the United States Military Academy at West Point.

In doing so I do not wish the comparison to be considered invidious. Not one cent do I envy West Point of the many thousands of dollars that have gone year after year for the upbuilding of that great army training school. If it were practicable, I should favor enlarging our annual appropriation for it. But, while according generous treatment to this branch of the service, I should not forget that there is another arm which is equally, I might well say more, deserving of our consideration.

To my mind—and the thought is not original—the sea power is destined to be the most important means of defense of this nation. With good ships, and plenty of them, carrying the best of guns, with brave and intelligent officers in command, and Americans at the guns, Uncle Sam may feel secure to face, without flinching, every just and righteous cause. With such a navy ready for instant action and a small army trained to the highest efficiency, so as to form a nucleus for the great bodies of citizen soldiery that would spring up at the first call to arms, we might well rest ourselves in the sustaining knowledge of our invincibility. [Applause.]

Such a navy would be a source of safety and comfort to our citizens in foreign lands, while to the people of the great commercial ports and seacoast of our own country it would be a means of protection which we of this generation may not fully appreciate until a hostile fleet comes thundering at our doors. Nay, more, it would be, indeed, a guaranty of our country's peace so long as we conduct ourselves in conformity to the laws of God and the practices of just and honest nations, for, with the best ships that money can buy, with nothing wanting in the brain and brawn of their crews, and nothing lacking in the number and quality of weapons, no government would care to disturb our serenity except for good and sufficient reasons.

You gentlemen I see around me grown gray in the country's service must know all this, and I can hope but to emphasize a fact well recognized wherever good thought and sound judgment obtain among men. And yet, filled as you are with this knowledge, you still hold doggedly to a policy that you know is wrong, showering upon West Point the bounties of your table while allowing Annapolis to pick up the crumbs of cold comfort which the gentlemen of the Naval Affairs Committee grudgingly sweep to the floor.

These are facts, not fancies. And right here I shall read a few figures, culled from official sources, to sustain me in my position. They are contained in statements of the amounts expended on the buildings and grounds of the Military and Naval Academies, respectively, for construction, repairs, grading, etc., during each fiscal year from July 1, 1886, to January 31, 1898:

Fiscal year.	Military Academy.	Naval Academy.
1887	$140,520.00	$21,000.00
1892	65,672.70	99,875.83
1895	940,090.23	48,908.71
1896	58,451.25	30,960.00
1897	111,770.00	98,913.35
Total	1,752,088.03	523,260.76

During the fiscal year 1890 the sum of $90,000 was expended for the purchase of land adjacent to the Naval Academy, which is not included in the above statement.

Why you have treated the naval school in this way year after year I can not say. If it is because of the condition of the country's finances, I would respectfully submit that there is a broad inconsistency in this upholding of the appropriations for the military students and the scaling down of the appropriations for those for the Navy. And if you have never seen the matter in this light—which I grant is highly improbable—readjust your glasses and get the right view of things. Remember that the Navy is the bulwark of the country, and the nation that neglects its navy in these days will find itself at the mercy of another power when it is too late to remedy the mistake.

What is the feeling of the public upon this subject? The newspapers of Maryland, and especially those of Baltimore City, have given much publicity to the general condition of the Naval Academy and to the proposition to replace gradually the existing buildings with others befitting the importance and dignity of the institution. I have no doubt that the matter has been given wide circulation, and I would ask any member whether he has had one letter from a constituent urging him to use the pruning knife upon any amendment that might be offered to increase the appropriation with this purpose in view.

For myself I will say that the people of Baltimore City, a large portion of whom I have the honor to represent, are a conservative community who watch carefully the trend of national legislation, and are quick not to allow their Representatives to remain in the dark as to their wishes upon any important question; and yet I have not heard one word of protest against the effort to have given to the Naval Academy what rightfully belongs to it. The merchants, not only of Baltimore, but the country over, know that it is to their interest to have an efficient Navy to protect their property from foreign invasion; they know that there can be no efficient Navy without efficient officers and that there can be no efficient officers without the facilities to train them to efficiency in both a physical and mental sense.

And right in this connection I think it is proper to ask the members of this House if they know that fifty of the naval cadets, or 20 per cent of the whole number at the Academy, are suffering from an affection of the eyes caused by the poor light by which they have to study. That was the case a few weeks ago, and I can not say whether the number of cadets so afflicted has decreased or increased since. As one newspaper very truthfully remarks, "The sight of fifty naval cadets, robust, healthy-looking youngsters, equipped with eyeglasses is not a tribute to the lighting system of a school where it might be supposed that everything is done to promote the health of the students." I should like to ask the members of this body whether they are willing that the boys they nominate for Annapolis should suffer from the want of proper lighting facilities? I am sure you do not, and I am convinced that whether you vote for this amendment or not you will demand that some improvement be made in this regard at least.

You will realize how serious the condition is when you know that the imperfect lighting may cause the dismissal of a number of students whose eyes will not permit them to keep up with their studies, and among them are several who stand well in their classes, and whom the instructors think would make fine naval officers. Gas is still used, one burner for two boys to study by, and the gas fixtures are identically the same that were put in place more than thirty years ago. There should be a modern electric-lighting plant at the Academy, but there is not, and a story could be told in that connection that would mantle the cheeks of honest people with righteous indignation. [Applause.]

But bad lights are but a single item in the bill of complaint that might be lodged against the Naval Academy as it stands to-day, for the parsimonious policy of Congress has wrought sad havoc. I wish you gentlemen could find time to take a stroll through the old town of Annapolis, as I have done, along its quiet streets, beneath its spreading trees, past its quaint cottages of another century. I would have you go to the chamber in the statehouse where Washington resigned his commission of Commander in Chief of the Continental forces, to turn your thoughts to that noble man and to think of the pride he would have taken in seeing the country he did so much to make prospering and expanding under the blessings of God and the virtues of its people. Then quickly I would have you leave the chamber, cross the sward of State House Circle, and a moment later enter the grounds of the Naval Academy. Beautiful grounds, you say. Yes; well laid out and well kept, thanks to the care of the officers of the post. But the buildings you would never take to be the only naval school of the greatest nation of the globe. You could scarcely blame the Washington who laid down the sword but a few rods distant were he to appear in the flesh and repent having been the father of a country whose progress, taking its naval school as a criterion, must have been of the snail, if not the lobster, variety.

And John Paul Jones and Decatur and Perry, to say nothing of the later-day Farragut, were they allowed to talk, would not hold golden opinions of a nation which let the rising young exponents of a profession they helped to make glorious dig away for knowledge in badly ventilated garrets and buildings that have to be propped up to prevent collapse. No, gentlemen, the Naval Academy has not kept pace with the march of progress, and we alone are responsible.

Why, sirs, it is a marvel to me, when I see the conditions under which the bright boys down there are striving to prepare themselves for their life's business, that we have such a splendid set of officers as sail our ships to-day. Perhaps things were not so bad some years ago, but certainly the Academy has never been accorded that liberality by Congress to which it is entitled. The buildings seem to have been put up without regard for any idea that took into consideration the future importance of the institution. They were erected on a sort of "come day, go day, God send Sunday" plan, a plan for which some excuse might have been found in the earlier stages of life of the Academy, but which, continued as it has been up to the present time, is simply without the pale of apology.

Whenever the needs of the growing school became so urgent that the demand for covered space for the cadets could no longer be ignored, some kind of a makeshift structure was thrown up in which neither the art of the builder nor the skill of the architect was put to any pains, and the result was another addition to the unsightly group of rookeries which now form the larger part of the buildings. For some forty years this haphazard process has been going on, and the lamentable outcome is open to all who care for an ocular demonstration of the Government's grievous error. With no large appropriation for the school for thirty years, the officers in charge have had to do the best they could with what was at their disposal. When decay began to fasten itself upon this patchwork of framework can not be told, but it has eaten its way along until there is little left of the buildings but so many rotten timbers.

An illustration that may be cited to show that this is so is the old recitation hall, daily used by about 250 cadets, which was in last November reported by Superintendent Cooper to be liable to collapse at any time. In so much danger was it that the Superintendent begged the Department to take some action "to prevent a terrible catastrophe." The Secretary immediately wired Captain Cooper to vacate the hall at once. When the hall was later made the subject of an official inspection, it was ordered to be torn down, not only because of its unsafety, but also for the reason that its condition caused apprehension that other structures in the neighborhood might be endangered by it. Upon recommendation of the Navy Department Congress appropriated $5,000, to be immediately available, for a temporary shed for recitation purposes.

This shed is now in course of building. Pending its completion these 250 cadets recite in a loft or attic, with pieces of sail for partitions between the several classes. Each class has to recite in the lowest tone in order that the others may not be disturbed, and you can easily imagine that the course of instruction is much interfered with.

It would be a heavy task to point out in detail all the shortcomings of the Academy, for it may be said with truth that such a work would embrace the buildings, almost without exception, on the grounds. There are a few points, however, to which I should like to call particular attention. Take, for instance, the "new quarters," as it is called, the most impressive building of the group. Erected to tide over an emergency, it is in the same condition as the rest of the temporary structures, pressed into permanent use. Imposing as it looks, it is a poor building, and there is a suspicious unsoundness about everything.

Crowded to a degree that the health of the cadets is endangered, with a lack of conveniences for living and bad studying arrangements, and an air of rack and fast-approaching ruin visible on every hand, this building is anything but a source of comfort to the young men who are compelled to pass their days under its roof. There is no place for the proper inspection of the cadets, and some portions of the floor are so weak that the cadets have to adopt "route step" in marching to lessen the likelihood of a collapse.

The armory, the only place in which the cadets can drill in bad weather, is totally inadequate for the purpose. The walls are cracked, the floor is shaky, and the building as a whole has been declared unsafe. That this is so is evidenced by the fact that it had to be abandoned until it was propped up from the outside by heavy timbers. The foundations of the boathouse, built six years ago, are already tremulous. There is not accommodation for all the boats used, and the house is very badly located. This building has been condemned.

The gas works are unsafe and "not susceptible of improvement." These are a few of the defects. I might refer to the storerooms, which are in such shape that the paymaster has notified the Department that he will not be responsible for the safety of the articles in his charge; to the officers' quarters, and to the chemical and physical laboratories, in scarcely more complimentary terms, but it would consume too much time.

Instead I would simply direct your attention to the report of Superintendent Cooper on the condition of the buildings, and to bring to your mind the terms "disgrace to the nation," "in dangerous condition," "better than nothing," "capacity too limited," "unworthy of repair," "tumbling down," "unsightly and unsuitable," "walls cracked," and a host of other phrases descriptive of the structures.

I would also invite your inspection of the letter of Secretary Long, under date of January 8 of this year, on this matter, to the Committees on Naval Affairs of both Houses of Congress, and that of Assistant Secretary Roosevelt to his chief. In one comprehensive sentence Mr. Long gives pointed expression to the thought which I attempted to impress upon you a few moments ago. He says:

> It would be poor economy to construct at great expense a numerous fleet of modern war vessels, complicated in every feature, without at the same time making ample and generous provision for the training of a body of officers who shall possess the requisite skill to care for and handle them economically, safely, and, should national emergency arise, effectively.

This "requisite skill," I may add upon my own responsibility, if it is being attained at the Academy, is acquired under adverse circumstances, such as we have no right to enforce upon the students here.

Mr. Roosevelt, in his usual forceful style, points out that there is certain work which it is absolutely indispensable should be done now; confirms in every particular the statements, coming from official and unofficial sources, of the decrepitude of the Academy buildings, and then goes into details with reference to the scheme submitted by Superintendent Cooper for the gradual development of the institution on common-sense lines, indorsing the plan without qualification.

Annapolis is the natural abiding place of the Naval Academy, and it was a keen, far-sighted judgment that chose the site. In a State that forms a connecting link between the North and South; near the seacoast, and upon a sheet of water that offers splendid facilities for naval evolutions; in proximity to the capital of the nation, and at a point that is susceptible of strong defense in time of war; with no large city or excessive festivities to distract the thought of the students, the Ancient City defies competition based upon a test of true merit.

With the $500,000 which the present amendment calls for to start in this work of revivification and fitting appropriations in succeeding years the school will by degrees assume that dignity and standing which its character demands. Then, with West Point and Annapolis both in the best possible condition, equipped with the proper facilities for fashioning the brain and body, our Army and Navy will be officered by the best material that the world can command.

It is pleasing to me to note that men whose experience makes their opinion worth something are of one mind on this matter of developing the Naval Academy, if the words attributed to them by the press be recorded correctly. A commission composed of officers whose ability and judgment are not to be questioned inspected the Academy in 1895, and transmitted a report to the Senate. Nothing ever came of that report and its suggestions, and the reports of the Board of Visitors, recommending that something be done for the relief of the school, have been treated in the same manner.

The report of the commission was especially exhaustive. Every building and every foot of ground had been studied by the members, plans for the improvements contemplated were drawn up by a competent architect, and estimates made showing what it would cost to remodel the Academy. The plan, while calling for the expenditure of a large sum of money, about $6,000,000, was really not extravagant, and made the burden upon the Government light by extending the expenditure over a term of years. It was based simply upon the actual requirements of the Academy. But, as I say, nothing ever came of the recommendations, the matter having been allowed to drop until the imperative needs of the school were emphasized by the threatened collapse, which called forth the cry for help from Superintendent Cooper last November.

Rear-Admiral Matthews, formerly commandant of the Yards and Docks Bureau, who was president of the commission to which I made reference, is in accord with the view which I would ask the House to accept to-day. He says the plan, if carried out, would soon give the Government the right sort of an academy. Commander W. H. Brownson, formerly commandant of cadets at Annapolis, after pronouncing the school "a disgrace to the Government," proceeds to advocate a complete rejuvenation. Rear-Admiral Norton says the Academy is "a reproach" and should be attended to at once. Captain Crowninshield, Chief of the Navigation Bureau, says:

> If Congress does not attend to the Academy at once there will be no place where the future officers of the Navy can be properly educated.

Naval Constructor Dashiell says it is remarkable that the course of instruction has been kept up so well in the face of the existing difficulties.

I am glad to note, too, that Senators and Representatives, without distinction of party, have stamped the plan for the development of the school with their approval. Can we afford to hesitate in the face of the overwhelming, nondivergent, intelligent, and convincing mass of opinion that confronts us? Shall we longer sit idly by and allow the Naval Academy to languish when we know full well the inevitable result of such a course? Shall we not be held accountable by the people, to whom this school is an honored and loved institution, for our action to-day? Let us rise to the occasion like wise and patriotic men, and in doing so infuse new hope and energy in the breasts of our naval students, place one more act to our credit upon which to base the claim of the confidence of the people in their representatives, and show to the world that we have strengthened our protection in time of war and the means of prolonging peace. [Applause.]

During the delivery of the foregoing,

Mr. NORTON of Ohio said: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. This is a most important subject, and I think the gentleman is giving us valuable information for our action. I ask that the committee be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The committee will please be in order.

The time of Mr. McINTIRE having expired,

Mr. HARTMAN asked unanimous consent that he be allowed to complete his remarks.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the House desires to hear the gentleman further, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. McINTIRE resumed and completed the delivery of the foregoing remarks.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the gentleman from Maryland takes his seat, I desire to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do.

Mr. HOPKINS. Some suggestion has been made that if this amendment should be carried it means more money than is expressed in the amendment. I desire to ask the gentleman who has just addressed the committee whether this amendment contemplates the expenditure of any more money than is expressed in the amendment itself?

Mr. McINTIRE. Not at this time.

Mr. HANDY. What was that reply?

Mr. McINTIRE. Not at this time.

Mr. MUDD. The amendment does not provide for the appropriation of any more money than is stated in the amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. What expenditure does the plan contemplated by the Navy Department involve?

Mr. McINTIRE. The plan as contemplated by the Navy Department and recommended by Matthews contemplates the expenditure, in possibly a period of eight or nine years, of $6,000,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. How much by the pending amendment?

Mr. McINTIRE. Five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. MUDD. I will state in reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], that the amendment provides for no further expenditure of money and for no further contracts for the expenditure of money than that which is named in the amendment, $500,000. Of course the future will take care of itself.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the committee the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, for ten years an effort has been made to improve the grounds and reconstruct the buildings at the United States Naval Academy. They were unfit for the Academy in the first place, but we have been using the old buildings for years, patching them up and spending thousands upon thousands of dollars upon them in an effort to make them habitable and healthy. Still, sir, it is in evidence to-day that they are hardly habitable and are actually unhealthy. I have been a member of the Board of Visitors to the Academy. I have been on the subcommittee on Buildings and Grounds, and I tell you to-day that in my opinion many a cadet has died at the Naval Academy from typhoid fever because the Congress of the United States has not done its duty toward the reconstruction of this Academy.

The Academy to-day, as it stands, its buildings, and its grounds are an absolute disgrace to the American Government, and I know what I am talking about. Several efforts have been made by the Committee on Naval Affairs, at different times, to take initiative steps toward the rebuilding and reconstruction of the Naval Academy. All have failed. Why they have failed is not for me to say. Possibly in other cities of the United States there are business men who have a longing eye on the Naval Academy and desire its transfer to another location. I do not say that that is so, but I do say it seems to be the underlying spirit which has prevented the rebuilding of the Naval Academy and the putting of it into the condition in which it ought to be.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall favor this amendment. It is time that the initiative step was taken. It is time that the young men of our country who are sent there to learn naval engineering and take the course which is prescribed at the Academy shall have some provision to insure their lives when they enter the Academy. This can only be done by providing spacious and healthy quarters for their use, with proper sanitary precautions and grounds ample for naval evolutions and drills.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this step will be taken by Congress; for I believe if it is not taken, the committee will be in the same condition for years to come as it has been for years in the past and the reconstruction of this Academy be delayed for years. [Applause.]

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall take but a few minutes of the time of this House in urging the passage of this amendment. I made a personal inspection a short time ago of the buildings and grounds at Annapolis, and I wish to assure the House that the statements that have been made by Representatives on this floor in regard to the condition of those buildings and their unfitness for the use of this great Naval Academy have not been overdrawn. There was a time, in the days of old wooden ships, when the cadet at Annapolis could prepare himself for the duties connected with the naval service by acquiring knowledge merely of navigation and the handling of a few of the old-time guns.

To-day the man who goes upon one of our war vessels must be an expert in every line of scientific knowledge. He must be a man that is in the forefront of the inventions and discoveries of science in the world. A single disqualified or unfit commander of one of these great battle ships, for which we spend millions of dollars, can cause the loss to this Government of a great many more dollars even in a few minutes, to say nothing of possible loss of life, than all the expenditures that we can reasonably expect to make on this Academy.

Mr. Chairman, the time was when the Army of the United States was looked upon as our great arm of defense. The time was, in the days of wooden vessels of war, that a few months were all that were required to build up the Navy. It was largely recruited from our merchant marine; but our merchant marine has gone, and there is no longer a possibility of constructing vessels of war inside of one, two, or three years. The Army of the United States is no longer the one arm of defense upon which we must depend. The battles of our country in the future, the battles of our country at this time, if we are to have any, must be fought by the Navy of the United States.

It is absolutely necessary, then, that we should prepare in a proper manner the young men who are one day to become the Sigsbees of our future Navy. I have seen the dilapidated condition of these buildings, and I say it is a disgrace to this Congress that this great Naval Academy should be in the condition it is in. It is not a local matter; it is not a matter simply of the State of Maryland; not a matter that concerns the Representatives of that State.

It is our matter, your matter and mine, that this great Academy should be put in proper condition. We take out of our districts the pick and choice of the young men among our constituents to send them to Annapolis to get this training which is going to fit them for future usefulness; and it is a duty we owe to them that we should give to them, while taking this course of academic instruction, buildings that are safe in which to get an education which will in the highest and best manner possible make them the skilled handlers of the future navies of the United States.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a substitute for the pending amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to contract for the construction, at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., of a building suitable for use as an armory, at a cost not to exceed $300,000; a boathouse, at a cost not to exceed $300,000; a power house, at a cost not to exceed $100,000; four double houses for officers' quarters, at a cost not to exceed $60,000, and for grading, electric-light wiring, removing old buildings, and preparing plans, at a cost not to exceed $90,000; and the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated toward the construction of the public works herein authorized.

Mr. HANDY. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed to discuss this amendment and its substitute for ten minutes beyond the five allowed under the rule.

There was no objection.

Mr. RIDGELY. Before the gentleman proceeds, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. HANDY. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. I have been informed that this locality, Annapolis, is not as healthy a locality as are many others which might be made available for the naval school.

Mr. HANDY. I think the gentleman has been misinformed.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Of course he has.

Mr. RIDGELY. Can you give any statistics as to the sanitary condition, as to health reports, compared with other places?

Mr. HANDY. I have not the health reports with me, but the salubrious climate of that part of the country is well known by everybody living in this general section of the country.

Mr. LOVE. I wish to ask the gentleman a question for information, and perhaps I had better do it now and not interrupt him later. If I am correctly informed, the buildings are all in a dilapidated condition, and I want to know if the amount asked for is to repair these old buildings, said to have been poorly constructed in the beginning and not in keeping with the progress of modern architecture or present necessities; and if so, whether it would be wise to put this appropriation of $500,000 into the repair of old buildings that must necessarily soon be replaced by new ones?

Mr. HANDY. That is a pertinent question. The substitute for the amendment is taken word for word from a clause prepared by the Secretary of the Navy and submitted to this Congress. It does not provide for the repairing and patching up of old buildings. It provides for building several new buildings in accordance with a general plan. It differs from the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] only in this respect: His amendment appropriates $500,000, which is enough for the present year, and stops there. My substitute makes exactly the same appropriation for this year, but the Secretary of the Navy wishes to contract for the construction of three or four buildings, their total cost to be $850,000. I consider it wiser and more economical to give the Secretary of the Navy authority to make the contract to complete the buildings than to give him a lump sum of $500,000 (not sufficient to complete them) and tie him up with the provision that he must build them all within that sum.

Mr. BELKNAP. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HANDY. Certainly.

Mr. BELKNAP. Are these buildings that your amendment proposes to contract for the ones that are most needed?

Mr. HANDY. So says the Secretary of the Navy. The substitute I have offered is the substitute drafted by the Secretary of the Navy and submitted to the House. You will find in this Senate Document No. 55 a draft of a clause drawn by the Secretary of the Navy with the hope it would be inserted in the naval appropriation bill. I have offered that clause as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD].

Now, Mr. Chairman, this Government has two great schools, one at West Point and the other at Annapolis; one for the Army and the other for the Navy. The one at West Point is in the North and the one at Annapolis is in the South. The party controlling this House, the party controlling the Naval Affairs Committee at the present time, has allowed the Naval Academy at Annapolis to rot. The school in the South has been neglected; its buildings have been permitted to fall into absolute decay, until at last, in November, 1897, the recitation building actually was in danger of collapsing. They telegraphed, I believe, so great was the necessity—no, it was sent by mail—they sent a report from Annapolis to the Secretary of the Navy setting forth that the recitation hall in that institution, daily used by 250 cadets, was liable to collapse at any time, and recommended that immediate action be taken to prevent some terrible catastrophe.

The Department immediately by telegraph directed the Superintendent of the Academy not to use the recitation hall thus reported unsafe. The Department sent down an engineer, who made an investigation and such a report on the building that it has been abandoned and torn down. Congress appropriated $5,000 to put up a temporary shelter, which is being used for recitations. The general situation is so bad at Annapolis that another building is in such a condition that it has to be propped up by timbers to keep it from falling down. They had to abandon that building or prop it up. While the Naval Committee of this House has thus permitted the buildings at Annapolis to decay, the committee in charge of the Academy at West Point has been building it up and putting up good buildings there until the buildings of the Military Academy are all that can be asked for.

Mr. Chairman, I say now that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, as the committee stands here, is seriously to blame for having allowed this Naval Academy to run down in the matter of its buildings to its present condition. Yesterday the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs interposed objections to this matter because, forsooth, the amendment did not do enough. He wanted to wait, as I gathered from him, until he could bring in a measure that would do all that was necessary. His committee has for years had this situation before it. For years the gentleman from Maine has been very patient and willing, apparently, to let the buildings at Annapolis go to decay. But suddenly, when there is a bill here that is going to pass—the naval appropriation bill—and it is proposed to do something substantial in this bill for the Academy—suddenly he is not willing to do a little; he wants to wait to bring in a bill (which will not pass) that shall reorganize the whole affair and do a great deal. Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the gentleman from Maine wants that Academy to rot to the ground, so that he may have it moved somewhere up in New England?

This is a bill of most generous appropriation. This is a naval appropriation bill, actually appropriating millions more than the Department asks for. Yet in this bill, granting millions more than were ever granted before, the gentleman from Maine can not find a place to do anything for this Naval Academy at Annapolis. "Emergency," he says. "Emergency" required the authorizing of expenditures which can not be utilized for years. An "emergency" required, I presume, that the Naval Academy at Annapolis should rot further and further toward the ground. The gentleman had to have—I call the attention of the House to this fact—the gentleman had to have a dry dock at Portsmouth, N. H.; but he did not have to have a new building at Annapolis, Md.

We people of the Southern and Middle States do not object to all proper expenditures at West Point; but we have reached a position where we object to allowing the Naval Academy at Annapolis to rot in order—well, I will not say in order to accomplish any particular purpose, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] suggested that he had heard whispers that it was desired to move this Academy to some other place.

Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Navy has reported on this matter favorably. Every Board of Visitors for years has reported on it favorably. The Superintendent of the school, Captain Cooper, has presented a report showing in vivid light the necessities of the institution in the matter of buildings.

This substitute provides for three principal buildings. First, an armory. What does the Superintendent say about the present armory?

The armory, which was abandoned until supported by the erection of heavy timber props along the western wall.

Mr. Chairman, when the armory at the Naval Academy has to be "supported by heavy timber props along the western wall," there is certainly necessity for a new armory.

I provide further in this substitute for a boathouse. On this subject the Superintendent says:

The boathouse, which was declared unsafe for many of its original purposes, and as unworthy of repair.

Mr. Chairman, when the boathouse at the Naval Academy has come to be "unsafe" and "unworthy of repair," the time has certainly come for building a new boathouse. This House ought not to hesitate a moment in authorizing the expenditure.

It appears further by this report of the Superintendent that the main recitation hall is utterly gone—has been torn down. The Superintendent says:

The main recitation hall, which is now being demolished as a menace to life.

Mr. Chairman, all these buildings are dilapidated. Then the Superintendent comes down to cadet quarters. What does he say about them?

Cadets' quarters: This building is a disgrace to the nation and would not be tolerated in any self-respecting municipality—cheap, unsanitary, and in a state of decrepitude.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House, headed by the gentleman from Maine, although they knew from this statement of the Superintendent which was before them that the cadet quarters are in a building which is "a disgrace to the nation" and "would not be tolerated in any self-respecting municipality—cheap, unsanitary, and in a state of decrepitude," could not bring in any proposition on this bill for the erection of new buildings there.

Mr. HARTMAN. Probably they had not the consent of "the leading commercial nations of the earth."

Mr. HANDY. Oh, I hardly think we are going to wait for the consent of "the leading commercial nations of the earth." If we can only get the consent of one foreign State—if we can get the consent of the foreign State of Maine, we shall then be permitted to do this necessary work. We shall not await the consent of any other foreign country, save only Maine.

Mr. Chairman, it is necessary for us to meet this question in a generous spirit. For that reason I appeal to the House to substitute my proposition for that of the gentleman from Maryland. The purpose of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] is right; yet he feared to ask for enough. He feared a point of order, I fancy. He feared there would be a spirit of objection strong enough to overcome him. Mr. Chairman, as a friend of the Academy I would rather see my proposition adopted, even if you cut down the appropriation for this year to $300,000, with authority to contract for all these buildings, than the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland, which would give $500,000 this year, with no power to contract for buildings to their completion.

I can not close, Mr. Chairman, without making a reference to one of the remarks of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCINTIRE]. That gentleman evidently did what he could on this floor to help this amendment. But in effect and in fact he did serious injury to the proposition. Certainly if gentlemen on this side of the Chamber had heard one of his comments—sitting close to him I heard it—it would have done his proposition very serious injury. He attempted to make something of political capital out of this matter. He called attention to the fact that he and his friends in this Congress were very active, while the Congressmen from Maryland in past Congresses, being Democrats, had been less active in this matter.

Mr. McINTIRE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption just there?

Mr. HANDY. With pleasure.

Mr. McINTIRE. Let me say that the only proposition I have ever heard or the only effort which was inaugurated and not prosecuted was because of the opposition of a Republican member of Congress.

Mr. HANDY. I did not catch the gentleman's remark. What is that?

Mr. McINTIRE. I say that the only effort intended in the House seriously to rejuvenate the Academy was stopped by the opposition of a Republican member. That is to show that there is nothing sectional in this matter.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, if this proposition passes the House, as I think it will and think it ought, it will be because the Democrats sitting on this side of the House will be animated by a patriotic purpose and will join with those gentlemen on the other side who are in favor of doing justice to this institution. [Applause.]

The members who preceded the gentleman from Maryland on this floor in former Congresses were Democrats and the State of Maryland need not be ashamed of them or of any of them. The immediate predecessor, I believe, of the gentleman from Maryland who has just addressed the House was the Hon. John K. Cowen, equally as intelligent, as able, and as active as the present Representative from that district. It was therefore a mistake of the gentleman to try to make political capital by throwing a reflection on former Maryland Congressmen. I understand from his remarks now that he did not mean to do that and that such was not his intention.

The truth is, that the Academy has been kept down by the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives, with the gentleman from Maine at the head of it; and it has been kept out of this bill by the Republican members of the Committee on Naval Affairs. The ranking member on the Democratic side of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], was the first to get up on this floor and speak in favor of the Naval Academy. The Democratic members on the committee, so far as I know, are all in favor of improving this institution. The amendment, when it passes the House, as I think it will, will be passed because of the almost solid vote on the Democratic side of the House in favor of this patriotic proposition.

We are ready to treat with absolute impartiality and fairness both the Military Academy at West Point and the Naval Academy at Annapolis. We propose to treat both of them equally well and with due consideration, and to treat both of them just as they should be treated as institutions of this Government, important and necessary. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Chairman, I do not regard this question as at all a political one. Gentlemen on both sides of the House have spoken most earnestly in favor of the proposition, or substantially the proposition, that is now pending. It is not a question concerning any particular section of the country, either the North or the South. It refers to and is in the interest of every portion of our common land.

I am heartily in favor of the proposition to make an appropriation for the improvement of the buildings at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. Under present conditions this, in my judgment, is most necessary. It is a disgrace, the condition in which these buildings are permitted to exist at this time.

I am heartily in favor of improving the Navy in every respect possible, and also of increasing the appropriation for our Naval Reserve. It was a surprise and a matter of sincere regret to me that the amendment offered the other day to increase the appropriation for the Naval Reserve from $60,000 to $100,000 was defeated on this floor. There is no gentleman who has recently visited the Naval Academy who will not admit the desirability of prompt action in this matter. It is a necessity which all can see.

I had occasion recently to spend a Sunday at the Academy. There is a young man in the institution from Louisiana, a fine young fellow, with whom I am acquainted. I called upon him, and to my extreme regret and surprise he made his appearance with large goggles upon his eyes, showing that he was suffering from an affliction which affected his sight, and I learned then that not only he but that two score more of the young men in that institution were in the same deplorable condition, suffering from inefficient light in which they are compelled to pursue their studies.

One of the old buildings had to be abandoned, as it was about tumbling down. They have erected a temporary building to take its place, but it is a mere barn or shed and a disgrace to the American nation. It would not be tolerated a moment if people could understand the situation. I investigated the matter of the condition of these buildings thoroughly and carefully. I talked with the officers in reference to the same, and they called my attention to one of the larger buildings occupied by the young men, one side of which in winter is kept warm with the greatest difficulty, and as a result many of the students have suffered from pneumonia and other sicknesses; and I have not the slightest doubt that many of the cadets, the flower of our American youth, have contracted diseases there which have resulted in their death.

Gentlemen, no true lover of his country can but be proud of our corps of naval cadets. There is no sincere lover of his country who can but feel pride in the naval history of this nation. At the Naval Academy each man has a fair show. There are found there the sons of poor men and the sons of rich men studying alike side by side; bright, energetic young fellows undergoing a thorough and trying course of instruction, each young man striving to excel, and it is a shame and a source of sorrow that the American nation has been so negligent of the needs of this splendid institution.

I appeal, therefore, to the House—I appeal to both sides of this Chamber, to vote unanimously for a liberal appropriation to start these much-needed improvements at one of the very best schools in all the world. [Applause.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the future wars of this country will be conflicts with foreign countries, and the Navy will be the arm of the service upon which we must depend. I am glad and proud to say, Mr. Chairman, that our corps of naval officers, superb, gallant, and efficient, will be found equal to the highest possible expectations of the country. There can be no question but that the naval officers of the United States are very far superior to those of any other nation.

The war of 1861 was very largely internal, and while the Navy did its full duty, the nature of the conflict was such that the Army was brought more prominently before the country and the world. It is very probably owing to this circumstance that since 1861 the attention of Congress has been directed rather more to the military than to to the Naval Academy. For many years I was a member of the Military Committee, and it was one of my duties to prepare the annual appropriation bill for the Military Academy.

I have been several times a member of the Board of Visitors, and this, too, tended to familiarize me with the conditions and improvements at that place. It is only of late years that I have visited the Naval Academy, and I have been astonished to see how that important institution has been neglected. Speaking entirely from memory, I recall one appropriation of $900,000 to erect a new academic building at West Point, and the one torn down to make room for the present magnificent edifice was superior to any now in use at the Naval Academy.

I recall another appropriation of $125,000 for a gymnasium, another of $24,000 for bathrooms, $50,000 to improve the gas works, between $30,000 and $40,000 for sewerage, about the same sum for reservoir and waterworks, and nearly every year we appropriated a considerable sum for quarters for officers and soldiers. Never having been on the Naval Committee, I did not know until I looked into it that while these liberal appropriations were being made for the Military Academy, so little was being done for the Naval Academy.

I give below, in parallel columns, the amounts expended for buildings and grounds at the Military Academy and the Naval Academy during the last twelve years. It will be seen that during that time there has been spent for the Military Academy three and a half times the amount spent for the Naval Academy:

Expenditures for public buildings and grounds at the Military Academy and the Naval Academy from 1887 to 1898, inclusive, as prepared by the Department.

Year.	Military Academy.	Naval Academy.

There is no possible reason for this discrimination. The law provides for the appointment of precisely the same number of cadets at the Naval as at the Military Academy. It is true that the vacancies to be filled in the Navy are much fewer than in the Army, and I understand that it was for that reason that the course was extended to include two years' sea service, the effect of which would be to reduce the annual number of graduates to about two-thirds what it would be if the graduation occurred at the end of four years, as it does at the Military Academy.

The necessity of fewer graduates at the Naval Academy justified the officials in exacting a much higher grade of efficiency than is required at the Military Academy. And this, exacting as it does a closer and more intense study, should have caused Congress to increase the comforts and facilities of these young men, rather than the reverse, as has been done. It is these young men, Mr. Chairman, that we are educating to become the defenders of the honor and prestige of this great nation upon the sea.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I can not doubt but that this amendment will receive the favorable consideration of this House. There is no question but what it will meet with the highest approbation of the country. We see the reports of the Secretary of the Navy, the reports of the various Superintendents of the Academy, and the reports of the Boards of Visitors year after year insisting and demanding that this question shall receive the attention of Congress.

Something has been said about the healthfulness of that locality. The only want of healthfulness has been occasioned, as I understand from the medical officer's reports, by the unsanitary buildings and other unsanitary conditions, and in their reports they appeal to Congress to provide for the Naval Academy with the same measure of the generosity and liberality that have been extended to the Military Academy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I speak of these things from actual observation. I largely contributed to the passage of the measures which placed the Military Academy buildings and grounds in the condition in which they now are; and when I visited the Naval Academy and saw those inferior, unsanitary buildings, I could not conceive how this discrimination had arisen until I recalled the great eclat given to the Army by the war of 1861–1865, which brought it so much more prominently before the country, and I realized that as having enabled the Military Academy to secure the appropriations which have put it in its present superb condition.

I appeal to Congress to vote for this amendment and to give to the Naval Academy that which is essential to the comfort and health of the young men of our land who are sent there by members of Congress, and who, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BELKNAP] has said, are striving with most commendable zeal and energy to fit themselves to become officers, to defend the honor of our country.

I thank the House for its attention. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I ought to make even an effort to speak, after the withering arraignment which the distinguished gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] delivered, in occupying the time which he solicited of me. I suppose I ought to be sufficiently annihilated to keep quiet, but I want to call attention to just one or two facts. One of the facts is that the gentleman is the first person who has ever brought a sectional charge before this House in connection with the Naval Academy. I attribute a great deal of it to his intense feeling. I did not know that he was so intense a Southerner. As a matter of fact, I did not know he was a Southerner at all. I had an idea that Delaware was sort of betwixt and between. But he has seen fit to arraign me, as chairman of the Naval Committee, as being responsible for permitting the Naval Academy to rot, and he has intimated very strongly that I have done that because I live in Maine and because the Naval Academy is in Annapolis.

Now, I want to give to the gentleman, who is somewhat fresh here [laughter], a little information. I want to inform the gentleman that when he made that charge and put it on a sectional basis he was attempting, in what I regard as not a gentlemanly way, to make an assault upon a present member of the committee, which was just as applicable and more applicable to other gentlemen, concerning whom neither he nor anybody else would ever think of asserting a prejudice against the South. The gentleman probably does not know that during the fifteen years I have been a member of the Naval Committee I have only had the good fortune to be chairman of that committee for five years. Two years of that time that committee was presided over by a very distinguished gentleman now deceased, the Hon. Mr. Cox, of New York, and no man suspects him of having been prejudiced against the South.

For six years of that time that committee was very ably presided over, with my constant and hearty cooperation, by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, Hon. Hilary A. Herbert, who was never suspected of prejudice against the South. For two years of that time that committee was presided over by the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. CUMMINGS, who certainly has never been suspected of prejudice against the South. So I dismiss that whole business as claptrap unworthy of being injected into the discussion of a business matter before this House. I am ready to take the floor, responsible for my action or my inaction.

I am ready to be arraigned by any man on this floor at any time he sees fit on the ground that I am a native, a citizen, and a member from the State of Maine, but I think that there might be some little relevancy to debate on this floor, and that gentlemen might restrain their exuberance somewhere, either within the domain of fact or the domain of argument; and if the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] derives any great satisfaction from his explosion in my direction this afternoon, I am glad to say that he has it without my envy.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Was that explosion internal or external?

Mr .GAINES. It was from the outside. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple business proposition. It was not at all necessary for a gentleman to get up here to demonstrate the fact that the buildings at the Naval Academy are in bad shape. There is no doubt about it. The Naval Committee are in no wise opposed to a proper restoration of the efficiency of those buildings. The only question before this committee is as to what is the best and most effectual way of proceeding. The Committee on Naval Affairs and the subcommittee on the Naval Academy and Marine Corps has pending a comprehensive proposition; and I will state that my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], is a member of that subcommittee.

We have pending in that committee a comprehensive proposition for an entire reorganization of the ground plan at Annapolis, involving such a change in the location of the buildings and the reclamation of a portion of the water front as would require the moving of nearly every building at that Academy. Some gentlemen say why have we not acted upon it? The fact that I am standing here to-day, at the end of nearly a week, in my effort to get through this House the largest, most liberal, and most comprehensive appropriation bill for the Navy in all its departments that has ever been submitted to Congress, ought to convince every member of this committee that my committee has been busily engaged during these exciting times, in which we have been the center of the demand for legislation, and in which we had been at work as no other committee has.

Now, we have before us a measure intended to be taken up and considered as soon as we get this measure out of the way, and one or two others. It is a comprehensive plan, reported upon by several boards of officers and recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, which involves an expenditure mounting up to a million of dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I ask for five minutes.

Mr. HARTMAN. I ask that the gentleman's time may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Maine be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I thank the gentleman. I shall not use so much.

As I stated before, the committee have this comprehensive plan before them, but we have not been able to carefully consider it. It seemed to the committee, and it seems now to me, that it would be wise for that committee, or some other committee, if the Naval Committee does not attend to it—but it has not been referred to any other committee—to look over that plan and to come into the House with something like a comprehensive way, at least, of dealing with the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy in regard to expenditures for the Naval Academy. These propositions stand by themselves. The committee at present do not know just exactly how far they coincide with other plans that have been made. We do not want to appropriate money to tear down some particular building at that Academy and erect upon its site an expensive new building that would have to be removed if we carry out the general plan. That would not be a wise policy.

Now, I want to disclaim any feeling about this amendment whatever. I have no interest in the question at all, as I have said, and it is no matter of pride of our committee. We do not stand upon appropriations in the bill. We are not personally bound by them. They are the recommendations made by the Committee on Naval Affairs, in good faith, after careful consideration—recommendations to this House in the exercise of its wisdom and judgment to determine.

Mr. STEELE. Could not the difficulty be avoided by providing that this money should be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not think that we would be fully guaranteed on that point. If the gentleman from Indiana means that he thinks it wiser for us to make appropriations and put them in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy for him to expend in pursuance of such plans of general reorganizations that are without limit of extent or cost than it is for Congress to do what it has done in regard to the Military Academy and what the House insists on doing in regard to every public building of the country, that is one thing; but our committee thought, and so far as I know the belief now of that committee is, that Congress in both branches would certainly expect to be consulted in a general reorganization of the building of that Academy.

Mr. HANDY. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HANDY. I wanted to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, we can not hear what is said.

Mr. HANDY. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Maine, in response to the difficulty that seems to be in his mind, that the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Roosevelt, has written the following. He says:

Accordingly the immediate action recommended—

And that recommendation is embodied in my substitute—

Accordingly the immediate action recommended is to do certain work which it is absolutely indispensable should now be done, but to do it in a way that will make it when done fit into the accompanying general plan for the buildings as a whole. If in the long run Congress rebuilds the Academy in accordance with this general plan, then the work which I propose to have done at once can be regarded simply as the essential first step toward this general plan.

Mr. SOUTHARD. All predicated on this general plan.

Mr. HANDY (reading)—

If the general plan is never adopted, then this first work is simply work which it was imperatively necessary to do anyhow.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I thank the gentleman for emphasizing on my mind something with which I was before perfectly familiar. That does not answer the fact that no general plan has ever been authorized by Congress. The plan to which these gentlemen from the Navy Department refer is a general suggestion that was gotten up by certain gentlemen who manifested a great public interest in it, and who had certain drawings made, and we have them here in a public document. I do not know that that is the best plan that can be adopted; I know that one of the plans has been favored by quite a number of officials who are interested in the Academy, and I know that many modifications have been suggested as necessary. There is no general plan that has been authorized by anybody exercising any power in this Government.

Now, if the House, without knowing what this general plan is, knowing nothing of the suggestions, desires to authorize somebody to spend $500,000 for carrying out this general plan without knowing just what it is, I have no desire to restrain the action of the House in any direction it sees fit to go. But there is no plan formulated; there has been one sent to our committee and is under consideration there, but it has not been reported on, and up to the present time neither the House nor the Senate nor the public is aware as to what extent that plan goes, what it would involve, or whether at the conclusion of the rebuilding the result would be precisely what it wanted.

Mr. CANNON. May I ask the gentleman from Maine a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I hope it is not coming out of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman have in contemplation that the committee at an early day will take this subject up and investigate it?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It was the intention of the committee to proceed to the consideration of this and one or two other important matters just as soon as we could get rid of the appropriation bills. We shall do so. We are not anxious for the task, and if the House thinks it is wiser to delegate this whole matter to the Navy Department and relieve us of all responsibility in the matter, of course it has the right and the power to do it. I want to disabuse the mind of anybody here of any impression that I or my committee have any particular whim or desire about this matter. We have simply acted in accordance with the ordinary business principles that govern all the committees of the House. We brought our bill in here without this great appropriation because of the reasons I have stated. If the House thinks it is wise and best to put it in, of course it will do so.

Mr. McINTIRE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will.

Mr. McINTIRE. The gentleman speaks of having a plan in the committee now that is known as the Matthews plan?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am not familiar with it, although I have seen it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I will say for my colleague that during my service on the committee he has been heartily in favor of action toward the rebuilding of the Naval Academy. The great trouble has been that no action whatever has been taken. For ten years this subject has been mooted in the Naval Committee, and nothing definite has come from it. The rickety buildings are there still, and the defective sewerage and all the buildings are in just as bad order to-day, if not worse—for patching them, I believe, makes them worse—as they were ten years ago. Now, it is true that we have plans in the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs for the rebuilding of that Academy. But if we formulate a bill and it passes the full committee, we have no assurance whatever that we can get it before the House.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Chairman, we would like to hear what the gentleman from New York is saying, and if we can have this Cuban junta near me dissolved, I think we can hear. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will be in order and please cease conversation.

Mr. CUMMINGS. We have no assurance that we can get such a bill before the House under the rules as they are to-day, and secure a vote upon it. This matter, it seems to me, is imperative. The Secretary of the Navy has undoubtedly considered several plans of improvement. He undoubtedly has some systematic plan within his mind to-day. I do not know but that he has sent such plans to our committee; but for one, I am willing to trust John D. Long. [Applause.] I have served in this House with him, and I know him to be an honest and conscientious public officer, of good judgment, and one whom of all others I would choose to select a plan to reconstruct this Academy.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. How can the gentleman think so when Mr. Long comes from way down in Massachusetts, where, as the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] thinks, there is such hostility to the Academy and the South?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I know no section in this country. [Applause.] I love Louisiana and I love Massachusetts. The injury of one is the concern of all, and I stand by the country every time, without reference to States. [Applause.] I do say that this House has before it now a practical proposition. If it fails to take advantage of this opportunity, it is my opinion, expressed after careful consideration, that it will be at least five years before you do anything for the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. To which proposition does the gentleman refer?

Mr. CUMMINGS. To the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment as it now stands involves an appropriation, an immediate appropriation, of $850,000. This appropriation is not based upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy. It is based upon a suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy, predicated on the carrying out of certain plans embodied in what is known as the Matthews report.

In 1895 the Board of Visitors at the Naval Academy adopted a resolution and suggested certain plans for the entire remodeling and rebuilding of the Naval Academy at Annapolis. It involved more than the rebuilding. It involved an expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars in reshaping the grounds and dredging, making a basin for the reception of torpedo boats, etc. This new plan was in accordance with a previous suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy, one that has been repeated from time to time. The same suggestion, I think, is found in the report of the Secretary of the Navy for this year. This is the language:

Attention is invited to the unanimous resolution of the Board of Visitors of the Naval Academy—

And I wish to say that this suggestion involving this plan was made so late as 1895. The plan has not been under consideration or advisement for any great length of time. It was reported in 1896, less than two years ago.

Attention is invited to the unanimous resolution of the Board of Visitors of the Naval Academy, in which the board calls attention to the obvious fact that the irregular methods of constructing buildings upon the Academy grounds have been wasteful and unsatisfactory, and recommends that in future different construction obtain here, especially in conformity with a general plan previously adopted.

This plan, as I understand it, involves the expenditure of a large amount of money—I do not know exactly how much, but I have been told not less than $6,000,000. Now, I venture to say that all the buildings upon the grounds of any one of our older educational institutions—I do not care which one you select—from its very inception until the present hour never cost anything like $6,000,000. This is a large expenditure of money. A plan of that kind should be well considered before it is adopted. And I do not believe that Congress desires to place this matter in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy or anybody else without some previous instruction.

Mr. McINTIRE. Does the gentleman believe there can be more capable hands than those of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I am not going to decide that question, and am not going to express any belief on the subject. I believe it will be the desire of Congress to have something to say about any comprehensive plan that may be adopted for the entire rebuilding of this important institution.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said that the preliminary work of this improvement, before the buildings are commenced——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I ask that the gentleman be granted three minutes additional.

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The preliminary work of this improvement, before any buildings are commenced, involves an expenditure of about $400,000, according to these plans. And I want to call the attention of the House to the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy in an official communication he made to the committee on the 27th of last December. He calls attention to what ought to be done in the first instance. This is only in the nature of a suggestion and is coupled with an "if"—"if these plans shall be adopted."

What we need at once is an appropriation as follows: $150,000 to construct the line of sea wall on the river side and for dredging and filling in as necessary. The use of the material dredged to fill in will provide necessary extension of the parade ground, etc.

Mr. McINTIRE. Does the Navy Department ever demand anything? Does it not simply "suggest" all the way through?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I do not say the Department has demanded anything; I do not say it has recommended anything. I say it has not done so. I say these are merely suggestions predicated upon the adoption by Congress of the plan which was submitted by the Board of Visitors.

Now, in a communication from the Secretary of the Navy to the committee, he says, after reciting that some improvements there are absolutely necessary, which we all admit:

In order to place the matter in such form that it may be directly considered and acted upon if approved by the committee, I have caused to be drawn and inclose herewith, a draft of a clause suitable for insertion in the pending naval appropriation bill providing for certain of the appropriations which are most urgently needed if—

if the plans proposed shall be adopted.

It will thus be seen that the recommendation of the Department is predicated entirely upon the adoption of this comprehensive plan looking to the rebuilding of this whole institution. Previous to that the ground must be reshaped and prepared for the construction of those buildings. There are a large number of buildings proposed—I think not less than twenty-five; I have a list of them here. They are all mentioned and located upon the plan sent in with the report. I wish I had time to read a list of them.

This work involves a large expenditure of money. Probably a good deal more than $6,000,000 will be necessary in order to carry out these recommendations.

And now, Mr. Chairman, we propose, simply on a suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy, to make an immediate appropriation of $850,000, which he must assume is to be expended in the direction which has been previously suggested.

Farther on he says:

This appropriation, if authorized, will provide for the construction of three new buildings—an armory, a boathouse, and a power house.

No quarters are provided for the officers or for the students; nothing of the kind is contemplated, apparently.

Mr. McINTIRE. If the gentleman will permit me, I do not want to do injustice to him, and I am sure he does not want to do injustice to himself. Will he allow me an interruption?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Certainly.

Mr. McINTIRE. Does not this same Secretary say that this should be done in accordance with the plans, and he asks immediate action in that regard?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Certainly; I have not disputed that.

Mr. McINTIRE. That is right. There is no "if" about that. There is no quibbling, nothing uncertain, but a positive and direct statement as to the necessities of the institution.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The only plan suggested is a comprehensive one involving the expenditure of money—an expenditure embracing many millions of dollars.

But, as I have just read, Secretary Long, as I have said, recommends the construction of the armory, a boathouse, and a power house. Then he goes on to make suggestions that if the plan be adopted further appropriations should be made to extend the buildings as they may be needed hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I ask a few moments longer.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I move that the gentleman have another minute, if that will enable him to conclude.

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The Secretary proposes an armory to cost not over $300,000, a boathouse to cost not to exceed $300,000, and a power house—all of these being important buildings, Mr. Chairman—to be constructed in accordance with the plans, involving the appropriation which has been already suggested, and the preparation of the ground at a great expense.

Now, it seems to me, and I wish to say in this connection that I have no objection to any amount of appropriation that may be suggested for carrying out any plans which may be devised by Congress for rebuilding the institution, but it seems to me a sensible way for us to pursue is to proceed in an orderly, systematic, and businesslike manner. That is the only course we should undertake to pursue. Let us first have a plan on which to proceed and then make reasonable appropriations to carry that plan into effect.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 3720. An act authorizing cities and towns in the Indian Territory to secure, by condemnation or otherwise, lands necessary for public improvements; and

S. 3729. An act making further provision for a civil government for Alaska.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 439) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Letcher Stevenson, widow of the late Brig. Gen. John D. Stevenson, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KYLE, Mr. VEST, and Mr. BAKER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 1181) granting an increase of pension to Carrie F. Bissell, of Pueblo, Colo.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 73. An act granting a pension to William L. Grigsby, of Belvidere, in the county of Thayer, Nebr.;

S. 178. An act granting a pension to Susan A. Paddock;

S. 431. An act granting a pension to Ann M. Madden;

S. 655. An act granting a pension to Harriet R. Matlack;

S. 1181. An act to increase the pension of Ann E. Botsford, widow of Eli W. Botsford, late of Seventeenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers;

S. 1825. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert P. Wild;

S. 2290. An act granting a pension to Caroline A. Slocum; and

S. 3178. An act granting a pension to Olevia S. Washburn.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding I desire to ask that the committee may allow me five minutes in addition to the five to which I am entitled under the rule.

Mr. SIMPSON. I ask that the gentleman from Washington be permitted to occupy the floor for ten minutes at this time.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Speaking to the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. My remarks, Mr. Chairman, will not be altogether foreign to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The gentleman from Maine can rest in my discretion in that matter, I think.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will trust the gentleman not to abuse the privilege of the committee.

Mr. SIMPSON. He will not do that.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. But, Mr. Chairman, I can not have the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to assume that my remarks are to be within such lines as he would regard as altogether appropriate and fitting to the occasion. But it is no intention of mine to abuse the courtesy of the committee; and if I shall transgress what the gentleman from Maine thinks the proper line within the consent which has been given to me, it is his duty, his privilege, to make the point of order against me, for I do not want any favors extended to me. I seek only my rights on this floor.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment has for its purpose the increasing of the facilities by which a certain class of the youth of this country may be educated and the lessons of patriotism instilled within them.

There has never been a civilized nation in the history of the world where there was not an effort made, wherein schools of this character were not only encouraged, but always supported with the most prodigal generosity. We have it symbolized in the accredited history of ancient Greece that even after Æschines was banished from home and took up his residence in Rhodes the first lecture delivered by him was upon the patriotism of the student. We recall that the student, in the Arcadian groves of Greece, watching the sunlight on the statue of Mennon, murmured upon his lips the closing words of the oration of Demosthenes against Philip—"my country must be saved if I shall live."

It is then not inappropriate at this moment that I ask this honorable committee if we are not surrounded with conditions that make it not only appropriate but most onerous upon us that we do something to instill a patriotism into the youth of this country, when we behold how the youth grown up in the past generation have become so debased, so lacking in patriotism, so lacking in decency that one of them, calling himself a banker, should address a letter to the President of the United States—our President, irrespective of our party—calling upon him for an answer as to "why should the mere loss of 250 lives be of consequence enough for him to unsettle all the stable values of this country by irritating Spain to conflict." [Cries of "Oh!" "Oh!"]

When we, sir, keep in view that the public press brings us from a credible source that there have been here in Washington a flock of these vultures wheeling around the head of the President, biding their time to feed upon his patriotism; when we shudder at their offense in an hour when he sought to take matters in his hands as the Chief Executive to come to the rescue of the immediate necessities of the country whose destinies we desire to espouse, that these "patriots" dared to confront the honorable President with the threat on Sunday night that if he took drastic action which would affect their securities they would present their obligations against the Government payable in gold and take $50,000,000 of gold out of the Treasury in one day, thus weakening the financial vertebræ of the nation, that wriggling she would fall.

These creatures who say they are patriots are "neither men nor women, neither brutes nor human; they are ghouls." [Applause on the Democratic side.] Added to this, this banditti of bankers have assumed that in a crisis like this they may impose upon the susceptibility of charity or the weakness of an emergency and now demand that the honorable President of the United States shall sell the liberties of the Island of Cuba to them for $200,000,000 and allow these men a mortgage upon the tax facilities of Cuba, and in order to guarantee and indemnify them for the fund they shall pay this nation is to pledge to them its credit and honor. God forbid that these men who would coin dollars from the breath of a dying nation and distill interest percentages from its dripping blood should ever succeed in our country in an hour like this. [Applause.]

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, what attitude the honorable President of the United States shall take upon this matter. I hear from his friends—for it is not my honor to know him personally—that he is a Christian man. If that be so, as I hope it is, he is not the man who would mortgage these prostrate people, with their outstretched hands beseeching our aid, their faces drenched in tears, their bedraggled garments bespattered with their sacrificed blood. Surely the President is not the man who would put these people in bondage, into the hands of those who would hold them as a ransom and use them for the purpose of increasing dollars to private fortunes. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I then rise to say that the substitute to this amendment becomes appropriate in an hour like this, when it becomes the duty of this great American House to instill patriotism where we see it is both waning and debased. I do not know how far, gentlemen of this House, these men may come; but, as God helps me, if one of these harpies dares come within the portals of this building to lure by their familiar arts or influence any man in this House to their nefarious and dastardly schemes, I will brand him where he stands and demand that he be kicked from the portals of the Capitol. [Applause.] He shall not proceed here as long as I am in this House; and I pledge you, my friends, I am coming back to execute my promise. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman in allowing this expression. I remarked a moment ago, sir, that I did not know what attitude would be taken by the President or his followers. I do not; but if it shall ever come that in a weak moment we shall ever yield to conditions such as I am told are now being considered, patriotism is dead, statesmanship a thing of the past, the grandeur of our nation worse than "the glory that was Rome and the grandeur that was Greece," because there will be none to sing her songs, save in a requiem to disgrace and dishonor. [Applause.] I do not know whether the question is before you now or not, gentlemen, but if it is, as heaven shall witness, you have thrown at your feet to-day, in the twentieth century, the same question that was thrown at the feet of the first, "Will you take Barabbas or Christ?" If it shall be the thief, I myself say it shall be the thief crucified and not glorified by this American House of Representatives. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I move to close all debate on this paragraph and amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I should like five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move, if possible, to close debate in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine moves, pending the recognition of the gentleman from Indiana, that debate on this paragraph and amendments be closed in five minutes.

Mr. HARTMAN. I move as an amendment ten minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I do not care for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana moves as an amendment that debate be closed in ten minutes.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending paragraph and amendment will be closed in ten minutes. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I am not surprised at the remarkable exhibition given by the gentleman who has just taken his seat. His evident desire for notoriety has not failed to impress both sides of this Chamber. He has seized upon some wild rumor, one of the thousand of wild rumors that are now being circulated, and made it the text for a foolish and unnecessary speech. This is not the first time that the gentleman has intruded himself upon the House, and sought to intrude himself upon the country. [Laughter.] He is one of those irrepressible patriots who seem to be determined to have gore.

Now, I suggest that this whole Spanish problem is very easy of solution. There is no necessity for this House voting $50,000,000 to carry on war. It is all folly to be scouring the markets of the world to find battle ships and equip them to enter upon a conflict with Spain. There is a much easier and much safer way—except for the Spanish people—of bringing the entire matter to a triumphant conclusion. I suggest, and I do it with all seriousness, that the best way to make an end of this whole affair is to harness up the gentleman from Washington and turn him loose upon Spain. [Great laughter.]

Mr. BRUCKER. Do it with a million umbrellas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I venture to predict that if we do this thing the Spanish flag will be wiped out of existence on the Western Hemisphere in a much shorter space of time than by the exercise of all the military and naval power of the Federal Government. [Laughter.] There is no need of any umbrellas. All we need in the world is the gentleman from Washington, and he will not require any help in an undertaking of this character. There is, however, an objection to this plan. There is one consideration that should restrain us. We are a Christian nation. We should not engage in a war of absolute extermination. [Great laughter.]

Imagine, Mr. Chairman, what an awful condition we would be in if, having "cried havoc and let slip the dogs of war," we should then find it impossible to choke off the ferocious gentleman from Washington, and he should persist in his warfare until the Spanish nation should be blotted entirely off of the face of the earth. [Great laughter.]

Now, sir, in all seriousness, I utterly deprecate and despise this cry for war which we have heard on that side of the Chamber. Do gentlemen stop to reflect for a moment what it means if we should enter upon hostilities?

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I can not yield, as I have only five minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman has had his time extended to ten minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that if war comes with Spain it will be an unnecessary war [hisses in the gallery]—a war which we could have averted.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I demand order in the galleries.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the hot-headedness of men in public life shall force the President of the United States to put Spain into an embarrassing position by an imperious demand for instant concessions which her proud spirit will not permit her to accede to, they, and not the President, will have to bear the responsibility. If public men in Congress would simply restrain their impetuous natures and keep their hands off the President, he would be able to accomplish in a very short space of time by the arts of diplomacy and without a conflict the independence of Cuba.

Spain started out, sir, with the idea of the absolute subjugation of Cuba, without qualifications or conditions. This Government made firm and diplomatic representations to Spain until she withdrew Weyler and offered a system of autonomy, and she has continued to yield to the diplomatic representations of this country until she has absolutely given up everything except the independence of the island. Indeed, sir, her last proposition shows you that she would give what would be absolute independence, with the sole reservation that her flag shall fly over the island and that she shall be permitted to appoint its Captain-General. What is this but practical independence, with merely nominal control by the Spanish authority?

Now, on the other hand, the Cuban insurgents started in with the cry of independence or death. They refused to accept any compromise whatever. Nobody is more anxious, sir, to see the Cubans independent of the Spaniard than I, but I would regret if we should have to sacrifice American lives in order to achieve that result. Now we hear, however, that the Cuban junta in New York say that the insurgents are willing to raise and can raise $100,000,000 in order to purchase their independence. It appears, therefore, that we have brought these two antagonistic forces thus far together by the exercise of the judgment, the diplomacy, and the exalted patriotism of the statesman in the White House. [Applause.] And I believe if we will give him a fair opportunity to carry out his purposes——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana (continuing). He will bring us to a triumphant conclusion without shedding an ounce of American blood. [Great applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hope we will now have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I regret sincerely that I have been limited to the time given me, for I hope to speak sincerely upon this question. For I say to you that no man in all this land has his heart more deeply interested in the Naval Academy than I. To-day almost the hope of my life is centered in the Navy of the United States. I regret and I blush for shame that I am compelled to digress from the interests of that Naval Academy and reply for one single instant to the man upon that side of the House that voices the language of the President, coming as his adviser, to speak in the language of Spain.

I believe, sir—and I am proud to know that there is a little patriotism left on the other side of the House—that when the hour shall come, they will resent the insults to the party of Americans represented on the other side. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak on the subject of this bill alone and its necessities. Twice in every year for more than fourteen years I have been upon the naval grounds, and the state of facts I have seen there was such a disgrace and a shame to the flag of my country that I could scarcely contain myself from violating the confidence placed in me by the men in charge and letting the world know the condition of affairs there.

Out of that Naval Academy have come the brightest men, the greatest geniuses, the bravest men, the truest patriots that God ever gave to any flag. To-day they stand between you and the menace to the nation. The men confined within the walls of that Academy are now being, by the negligence of the Naval Committee, permitted to breathe the noisome air and to die, to become diseased and brought on the retired list even before they graduate, solely because of the absolute imbecile negligence of that committee.

I challenge the chairman of that committee to say that he has ever presented any plan for the reorganization of that institution. I appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], and I challenge him to say if he has ever even put his eyes upon it. You and I know that that plan has never been considered and never will be, under the rule and management of the committee as it is constituted, until Gabriel shall blow his trumpet.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman is entirely and utterly mistaken. The Naval Committee six years ago were considering plans for the rehabilitation of that Academy. What I complain of is that they never fructify, they never produce fruit, and here is an opportunity to do it without the committee.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I am glad to know that they have been for six years engaging the attention of the committee. They will be six years more, under the rules of this House. You know you can not bring a bill in here; you know you can not get it considered. The occupant of the chair is opposed to this; he is from the State of Maine, and by the nod of his head or the movement of his hand no bill making an appropriation can ever see the light of day.

Now, gentlemen, here is an opportunity. If you have any patriotism left on that side of the House, you will join with us and let us do this thing. Wait! You have been pursuing a waiting policy, your President is waiting, you are waiting now, while the worst flotilla that ever started out under the flag of any nation is pushing its nose toward the city of New York, and may throw their shells into New Orleans.

Wait in your imbecility; wait in cowardice; wait in that humility, and in obedience to greed and avarice; wait with the blush of shame indelibly stamped on your brows forever. To-day, here is your opportunity. The man who refuses to vote for this appropriation does not deserve to stand on the floor of this House; the man who refuses to act and splits hairs upon this occasion would split hairs upon the nation's honor and wait until the doom of the nation's death. [Applause.]

I regret more than words can express that the limit of time stifles my voice upon this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Delaware to the amendment. The Clerk will report the substitute again for the information of the committee.

The Clerk again read the substitute.

Mr. DINGLEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Is this a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD]?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. The gentleman has properly stated it.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANDY) there were—ayes 82, noes 98.

Mr. HANDY. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine and Mr. HANDY.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] will be substituted in my place as one of the tellers.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 108.

So the substitute to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANDY) there were—ayes 89, noes 56.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On March 23, 1898:

H. R. 7541. An act to require certain writs to be directed to and executed by the marshal of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 7344. An act granting a right of way through the naval station, New London, in the State of Connecticut, to the Norwich and Worcester Railroad Company;

H. R. 101. An act to correct the naval record of and grant an honorable discharge to Thomas H. Holden, of Pawtucket, R. I.; and

H. R. 2477. An act to relieve John McCarthy from the charge of desertion.

On March 25, 1898:

H. R. 4698. An act for the relief of W. E. Judkins, executor of Lewis McKenzie.

H. R. 6542. An act for the relief of Eldred G. Davis.

On March 29, 1898:

H. R. 6079. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

On March 30, 1898:

H. R. 8618. An act for the relief of the sufferers by the destruction of the U. S. S. Maine in the harbor of Havana, Cuba; and

H. R. 6358. An act authorizing the Nebraska, Kansas and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

On March 31, 1898:

H. R. 3737. An act granting an increase of pension to Orlando J. Hopkins.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARINE CORPS.

Pay, Marine Corps: For pay of officers on the active list: For 1 colonel commandant, 1 colonel, 2 lieutenant-colonels, 1 paymaster, 1 quartermaster, 1 adjutant and inspector, 4 majors, 2 assistant quartermasters, 20 captains, 30 first lieutenants, and 13 second lieutenants, $180,360.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I move to amend by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, having had during my past service in this House nothing apparently but the kindest and most courteous associations with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], I was somewhat at a loss to understand what particular motive animated him in his effort to create an excitation of the risibilities of this House by making me the special subject of his most elastic, reverberating, and perplexing remarks. [Applause.]

The gentleman took occasion to observe that if one desired to come to the rescue of Spain, far from appropriating $50,000,000, he would advise that the gentleman from Washington be substituted. To that extent it will be admitted that "the gentleman from Washington" at least has the qualification of firing his own gun at his own pleasure and whenever he sees the enemy in sight. Unfortunately for the gentleman from Indiana, if Spain has been casting her eye to his record or the record of the other side of the House, she would certainly not expect him to come to her rescue, but rather, in her charity, seek that he should declare first his own independence. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

From day to day, Mr. Chairman, we have watched that singular restlessness with which the gentleman, like a caged lion, would pace up and down the aisle in front of the Speaker, each day coming to our side and promising that in the next hour he would no longer chafe beneath the yoke of the Speaker of the House, but would rise in his might and dispatch him with an army of words. [Laughter.] But for some reason when the Speaker would cast his ferocious eye at the gentleman, he would wilt like a leaf in the summer heat. [Laughter and applause.]

Day after day, I have never a doubt, his beseeching constituents have been trying to persuade him to take the muzzle from his mouth and the shackles from his limbs; but fearing, Mr. Chairman, to move in the direction that common decency, justice, and independence would require, he thought it would be an appropriate thing to turn upon a gentleman who never offended him, trusting that he might infuse into the House some sense of spontaneous humor and be known hereafter as a wit. [Laughter.]

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, whether the President of the United States has selected the gentleman as his fidus Achates, as his good friend and defender on this floor, but certainly if such is the case, then, as an humble adviser of the President, I would suggest that he join in the prayer of Cæsar to be delivered from his friends. [Laughter and applause.] If it should come to pass that the President should receive, as some people in certain quarters hope and others fear, his political death, then those who may write his obituary, if the gentleman from Indiana continues in the course he has been pursuing, may content themselves with the elegy, "Too Much JOHNSON." [Loud and continued laughter and applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets to be compelled again to call the attention of visitors in the galleries and the officers in charge there to the fact that manifestations of applause or disapproval on the part of occupants of the gallery are not in order. The Chair hopes he may not have occasion again to call attention to this subject. The committee will be in order. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] has been recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] on this occasion, as on all others, has served simply to amuse the House rather than to instruct it. It has not heretofore, nor do I apprehend that it has on this occasion, fallen within his province to utter anything worthy of more than a cursory and passing notice. There are some men who get into political power not so much because they have any of those sterling qualities which make it proper to invest them with such power, as because of a to them happy combination of circumstances which serve only to show one of the weaknesses of our republican form of government. [Applause.]

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The gentleman may withdraw his plea of guilty.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman from Washington on this occasion, as on all others, has absolutely failed to rise to its height, and if there is any man on this floor who might be expected to insult a great public crisis by injecting into it as he did in his first speech a lot of blind and claptrap matter, tending to darken rather than illumine the situation, one would naturally suppose that the gentleman from Washington would be that man.

Now, it is hardly necessary for me to deny any accusation made against me by the gentleman from Washington. Therefore I pay myself, I admit, no very high compliment by undertaking to repel certain things which he has attributed to me. But his intimation that I have paced the floor of this House with a pent-up feeling for war——

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Not against Spain.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Liable at any time to explode, is as far from the truth as any other thing that the gentleman has stated on this subject. I have realized, sir, from the start that the danger to the nation was in the hot-headedness of those men who never stop to reflect into what they are liable to precipitate the country. I have never had the least desire for hostilities. My voice has been and still is for peace; not for peace at any price, but for honorable peace, and for exhausting the last reasonable alternative before embarking in war. Whether my views were popular or not I have not stopped to inquire.

I have had no hesitancy in recognizing in the person of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] one of those ferocious statesmen who are determined to have war, no difference what may be the cost or what may be the result. His intimation that I have ever been laboring under the yoke of the Speaker of this House, or of any other man, is so entirely foreign to my nature, as known to my colleagues upon this floor, that it refutes itself without any answer from me.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, with grace and thankfulness to any yoke, whether imposed by the White House, by that Chair, or by my own conscience, that leads me to stop in these troublous times and calmly think before I take any step in a perilous crisis. The intimation that I have ever said that I would ally myself with the explosive element on this floor which, regardless of consequences, would precipitate a conflict that would result in the shedding of precious American blood is absolutely and unqualifiedly false.

The mere fact that it has been stated in a spirit of levity or ribaldry, of which the gentleman alone is capable, will not prevent me from giving it a flat denial. I am opposed to war—war with its disastrous consequences, war which involves a vast expenditure of public money, which involves burdens of taxation to be paid by the people, which involves the issuing of paper money, which involves a period of wild speculation——

Mr. KELLEY. What is the matter with the gold standard?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. War which, while it affords opportunities for exalted patriotism and heroic devotion to the flag, at the same time opens up an arena for the cormorants who always prey upon the Government and seek to take advantage of its necessity. I am opposed to that condition of affairs which would sacrifice the flower of American manhood, which would put women into garments of mourning, and which would torture our unhappy ears with the wail of the orphan. I am opposed to war not only because of that which accompanies it, but because of that which follows and succeeds it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, Mr. HARTMAN, and Mr. LEWIS of Washington asked that the time of Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended five minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I made the request, or joined in it.

Several MEMBERS. Make it ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The time of the gentleman from Indiana is extended five minutes in accordance with the request of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am opposed to war, because I know that its evils follow it, and that it is always succeeded by a season of depression and reaction. The bubble of speculation must burst; the currency must be contracted; the debts that have been incurred must be paid, and during all this period of time those great administrative and legislative reforms in government, by the passage of which alone can the happiness and prosperity of my countrymen best be secured, are to be postponed and held in abeyance.

I infinitely prefer peace. I make bold, sir, to avow it. I will say here to-day that I believe in going to the extremes of magnanimity before precipitating the country into war. The nation is powerful enough, it is great enough, to afford to do this thing. I would go to war only as a last resort, as a dire necessity, when every expedient to avert its horrors has been tried and has failed. I would not sacrifice American blood except our quarrel should be a just one.

I should want to go into the conflict conscious that we had done everything we possibly could to avert it, knowing that the sound of the first gun would bring every American citizen, North, South, East, and West, regardless of party, color, or religion, to the support of the flag; that our action would carry with it the moral support of the civilized world, for he who believes, sir, that the moral support of the world is to be ignored in a conflict between two great nations advertises himself to humanity as a man who knows nothing of those influences which, in a time of international conflict, tend powerfully toward victory.

When I sat down a short while ago, Mr. Chairman, I was attempting to make before this House and the country, if indeed the country will heed a voice so feeble as my own, a statement of the fact that by the steady policy of diplomacy, the sensible, honest, patriotic course of the President of the United States, we were gradually bringing these two antagonistic elements together; that Spain had come down to the point where she was willing to abandon possession of Cuba upon a mere nominal consideration, and that the Cuban junta, authorized, I doubt not, to act for the insurgents, had declared that they could and would raise a hundred million dollars in order to purchase their independence.

I was attempting to enforce upon the House that these were concessions, harbingers of a settlement, and that it would be better to allow the President, conscious of our continued support, to move firmly and steadily forward, never backward, until by the process of diplomatic art he could make apparent to Spain without danger of incurring her resentment or rejection the demands of the American people, and that thus she would decide to yield independence to Cuba.

I insist, sir, that we have forced the Executive to precipitate action just at this time. I fear that the ultimatum has been too abruptly presented at Madrid. I dread Spanish refusal and consequent hostilities.

I believe, too, that if this House had been as patient of late as it has been heretofore, and if the Senate had been as reasonable as heretofore, and if we had all given to the President ample time to press our views upon Spain along such lines as would enable her to accept them without subjecting her to too great mortification, that thirty days from this time would not have elapsed until Cuba would have been an independent state. Spain knows she can not conquer the insurgents. Her unfortunate experience has amply satisfied her of this. She fully realizes that if she persists in her efforts to do so it will be likely to involve her in war with this nation.

The leading nations of the earth also recognize these facts. If the President was given time he would be able to bring upon Spain the earnest and powerful advice of most of these nations to submit to the inevitable without further war. Gentlemen may talk about the influence of the bankers and of the monetary and business interests of the world as bitterly as they please. They may, if they desire, stigmatize those who desire to maintain peace as being animated solely by a regard for commercial interests.

Before God, sir, I will not arraign upon this floor any influence, monetary or otherwise, that can make for honorable peace at this critical juncture of our affairs. If those who are interested in Spanish bonds, whether here or abroad, can prevail upon the Spanish Government to yield peacefully, I shall not reproach them with the statement that they are actuated by selfish motives in so doing.

I say again, that if the President has sent an ultimatum to Spain, and if that ultimatum is a demand that she shall instantly evacuate Cuba, you will excite the Spanish pride, you will increase the Spanish resentment, you will leave Sagasta in a condition where he is not able to make the concession. The chances are that you will have war. You will shed American blood.

You will expend millions of money. True, you will achieve

Cuban independence, but at what a cost. Stop and reflect a minute, and do not, I beg you, longer hamper or interfere with the President in the wise and patriotic course he would still pursue. Do not be too impetuous, too abrupt. Spain can reach by an incline the height which she can not and will not attain at one bound.

The gentleman intimates that I am speaking as a representative of the President. That is not true. I was not in favor of his nomination. I would not favor it again under similar circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I should like to have five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am not his mouthpiece. I am not even in his confidence. No man on this floor has greater reason to feel unkindly toward him than I have. Why, he is quite well aware. But this is not a personal matter. It is a subject which concerns the country, and I hesitate not to declare that his whole conduct throughout has been marked by the exercise of that good judgment and exalted patriotism which entitle him to the confidence and respect of the people—North, South, East, and West—without regard to party ties. He should not now be abandoned. We should rather continue to give him our earnest and undivided support.

Shame on any man on the other side of this Chamber who dares to make party capital out of this matter, as the gentleman from Washington attempted to do, as will plainly appear when he allows his remarks to go to the country as he made them.

Mr. OGDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me.

Mr. OGDEN. I want to know——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. OGDEN. I want to know whether the proposition is that this Government shall force the Cubans to pay $100,000,000 for their independence?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I will answer the gentleman that this Government had better allow the Cubans to pay $200,000,000 to acquire their independence than that one drop of American blood should be unnecessarily shed. [Applause on the Republican side and hisses in the gallery.]

Mr. OGDEN. We stand by the old declaration, "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute."

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I say to gentlemen who have hissed the remarks that I have uttered——

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. No gentleman on the floor did so. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I desire to inform the honorable gentleman from Indiana that no hisses were from the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It does not make any difference to me whether I am hissed or whether I am not hissed by the galleries. It is not personally a matter of importance to me whether my course is approved, nor is my reelection a matter of concern. I declare my convictions, whether my views are approved or disapproved in this House. I believe before God that they are right, and I only wish that I had declared them here on an earlier occasion, when it might have arrested the attention of the country, instead of deferring it to this time. I delayed speaking in hope that some more conspicuous gentleman would say as much as I now say.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I rise to say that if it is true, as the gentleman from Washington stated, that the hisses were from the galleries, that a repetition of the offense ought to be the occasion of clearing the galleries.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that while the present occupant of the chair is in the chair he does not propose that the galleries shall hiss any member on the floor, no matter of what party he is or upon what subject he is speaking.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Or cheer, either. We have had cheers from the galleries for a week, and I object to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I shall not be deflected from my course either by manifestations of approval or disapproval. My judgment is not infallible, I admit, but I endeavor always to reach a judgment that is right, and once having reached a conclusion which I believe to be just, I am not in the habit of consulting the expediencies in making it known. I believe we are standing on the verge of a volcano, and I sincerely hope that the ultimatum of the President will not strike so suddenly that it will arouse such a resentment as to provoke a war, thus making it impossible to secure the independence of Cuba by further diplomatic and peaceful agencies.

But if war does come, every beat of my heart, every impulse of my nature, every effort of which I am capable will be thrown into the scale in behalf of a speedy and vigorous prosecution and a victorious conclusion of that war. If it turns out that the President's ultimatum is indeed rejected by Spain, I hope to God that the Representatives of the American people on this floor, the Senators who represent the sovereign States at the other end of the Capitol, will pause and see where we are tending; will see the necessity of upholding the arms of the President if he sees fit to still further proceed in the matter upon the counter proposals which it is said Spain may proffer to him.

I am told by those who have consulted with him that he is anxious and concerned; that he has declared that he feels it is a solemn duty he owes to the country to avert war.

Let no man mistake the temperament of the American people. They are not all for war. The unthinking, the unreflecting, favor it. Many men of good sense and judgment appear also to think it advisable, but there is a great conservative sentiment in the country that is opposed to hostilities except as a last resort. They desire Cuban independence, but they believe in the President and are at his back. I warn gentlemen that it is not the temporary applause of the multitude that they should seek. They should rather endeavor to deserve the calm and deliberate approval of our countrymen, which is certain to be conferred, when the war cloud has passed away and the danger is gone, upon those who fearlessly perform their duty at this time.

I appeal, sir, from the jeers with which my remarks have been greeted; I appeal from the hisses of the gallery, where I do not look for inspiration, and whose occupants can not be relied upon to do the fighting if war ensues, to the cooler, calmer, more impartial judgment which my countrymen will pass upon my utterances when the time for retrospection and the making up of their ultimate verdict shall arrive.

That time, sir, will assuredly come, and garlands will be placed upon the brows alone of those who have been willing to stand inexorably against the sentiment that would precipitate a bloody conflict before patiently and earnestly exhausting every expedient to avoid it.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that the solidity of the Democratic party and the Populist party upon this floor in support of the Administration, an exhibition of patriotism that has not been paralleled in the last quarter of a century, may be continued unto the end.

I trust the resolution offered the other day by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] will not be construed by the country as a pure effort at party advantage. I trust that it was not intended as a party measure. The matters here involved are beyond all consideration of party. The Democratic members and the Populist members have stood patriotically for the country. They have stood by the President. They have been taken into his councils and have manifested and exhibited a spirit of genuine Americanism. Why should they abandon him now? Do they not prefer peace to war? Do they want to——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move to close debate on this paragraph, so that we may make some progress with the bill. Gentlemen understand that the five-minute discussion can go right on upon the next paragraph.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think the gentleman's proposition is not a fair one, in view of the time which has been occupied on the other side. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman so as to provide that debate be closed on the pending paragraph in twenty minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph may be considered as closed.

Several members objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

The amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi was agreed to; and the motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine as amended was adopted.

Mr. BAILEY and Mr. LEWIS of Washington addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is recognized.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Washington can proceed now, and I will follow him.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman from Texas, but by his graciousness I will proceed now.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, it is needless for me to say that I have listened with much gratification to the very eloquent remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON]. If that distinguished gentleman fancies for a moment, as I gathered from his remarks he did, that any assertions I made were intended to be purely personal to him, to that extent I certainly disavow them.

But the gentleman from Indiana will admit that in the brief remarks which preceded his first speech I made not the slightest reference to him—delightful as might have been that occupation under other circumstances. In his reply to me he abandons his personal assault, and has found it agreeable—to satisfy what inclination or to gratify what purpose I know not—to forsake the pleasant ribaldry passing between us and to turn the discussion to one of more serious import. I am not inclined to depart from his precedent, nor shall I violate the serious dignity of the House, which demands that a question so momentous and portentous should be confronted and disposed of with a gravity becoming our high position in a nation and according to the great trust which has been reposed in us.

Mr. Chairman, there is but one remark of the distinguished gentleman which I feel the slightest necessity of adverting to. He has seen fit—upon what authority I can not conjure or devise—to assert on the floor of this House that I am for war irrespective of the causes and indifferent to the justification. I dispute the distinguished gentleman's assertion. I deny that any remark that has ever fallen from me on this floor can justify a statement of that sort. It is born of the gentleman's desire to calumniate now when it is wholly unnecessary.

I do assert, Mr. Chairman, that the only attitude I have ever occupied here, one which I feel has been consistent with right and honor and justice—one which in the future I can with satisfaction and confidence occupy—is one that demands universal justice and universal freedom. [Applause.] I have never uttered a word inconsistent with this position. No one can join more heartily than myself with the distinguished gentleman in his glowing recitation of the monologue of Aristides which I observe he has paraphrased from Homer.

I realize as well as he that the barbarous cruelties which are born of war far surpass the depictation of any man's tongue or the delineation of any man's pen. But there is an hour in which God comes to the earth through His humble servants, crying out through His ambassadors and demanding universal justice to His children [applause]; and while all of us deprecate and abhor the cruelties of war, yet if an hour should come to this country in which the honor of the nation is to be preserved, the salvation of her citizens wrought out, the glory of her past to be maintained, and if this can be done only by war, then there is no alternative left us if we are a brave and honorable people. [Applause.]

I for one deplore any such necessity. I say heartily to the gentleman from Indiana that if there are any measures on foot looking to a peaceful solution of this question, measures that shall give to Cuba liberty and to this nation honor, I am ready to cooperate in such measures. I deny, however, that I have at any time undertaken to make a party question of this issue, or that there has fallen from my lips any utterance which any just man can attribute to such a purpose. I do not know what object the distinguished gentleman from Indiana has had in making that charge.

In conclusion I will say, before yielding the floor to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], that I am for peace when peace can come with liberty and with the blessing of God; that I am not for a peace which means the sacrifice of any humble and dependent human being, the disgrace of my people, the dishonor of my country, or the humiliation of her flag. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, with the personal controversy between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] I have nothing whatever to do. The House knows each of these gentlemen well enough to know that each is worthy of any foeman's steel. I know too the standing of the gentleman from Indiana in the counsels of his own party and before the country well enough to know that what he has spoken has been spoken with deliberation and is entitled to be considered almost as authoritative. When he stands here and says that the President of the United States is trying to reconcile the misunderstanding between this nation and the Spanish Government upon a basis which will compel the Island of Cuba to buy its liberty from the butchers of Spain, we are justified in supposing that it is for that purpose that the House has been denied an opportunity to vote on a resolution which declared that the Cuban patriots have fairly won their independence. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me? I know he does not want to do me an injustice.

Mr. BAILEY. Assuredly not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman from Texas will remember that I stated positively I did not speak by the authority of the President of the United States; and the gentleman is equally mistaken in saying that "I knew" or "believed" that there was a proposition pending to purchase the liberties of the Cuban people.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I was very guarded in the statement I made. I said that the gentleman from Indiana, standing high in the counsels of his party, was in a position to talk upon this subject in such way as to entitle his statement to very great weight on this floor, and that when he made the declaration that the President of the United States was about to adjust the differences between the two nations, we were justified in believing that he spoke with a knowledge of the facts; and I know that the gentleman from Indiana does not speak as possessing personal knowledge when he is ignorant upon any subject. He is not in the habit of doing that.

I believed on yesterday, and I know to-day, that the policy of that side of the House is to delay a decision of this question in the hope that the rich and powerful interests of this and other nations will compel the struggling patriots of Cuba to buy the freedom that they have fairly won with their courage and by their sword. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I owe the Republican party no kindly offices; but I will venture to warn it that if its leaders agree, and it sanctions an agreement, to compel any people under the sun to buy that liberty which God has given to them, it will never outlive the odium which will be fastened upon it by the outraged sentiment of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, liberty is not a purchasable commodity. [Renewed applause.] There was a time in this Republic when no man in high station would have suggested that one nation could sell it, or that another should be compelled to buy it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is a birthright of men; and it is their duty to assert it, though war be necessary to its assertion. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

I am myself, Mr. Chairman, as averse to war as any gentleman who occupies a seat on that side of the Chamber. We know, and you know, that a war will benefit the party in power, and yet, knowing this, we have twice during the present session of Congress, walked up to the altar of our country and made a willing sacrifice of our political advancement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask that the gentleman from Texas be permitted to control the remaining ten minutes on this side of the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the extension of the time of the gentleman from Texas for ten minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. And yet, Mr. Chairman, with a knowledge that we were pursuing a policy to the advantage of our political opponents, and to the injury of ourselves, we have done all you have asked us to do; and we have asked you to do more than you are willing to do. In all the history of this Republic, no party has ever acted more patriotically or more unselfishly than the Democratic party has acted during this crisis! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This war could have been avoided. Six months ago, if you had done as we urged you to do, as we entreated you to do, if you had recognized the right of those struggling patriots to fight for the independence of their own country, there would have been no war, and the Republic of Cuba would to-day be an established fact in the history of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

A MEMBER. And the battle ship Maine, with all the accompanying lives of American seamen, would not have been sacrificed.

Mr. BAILEY (continuing). And that unfortunate disaster, which has horrified humanity and humiliated the American people would never have occurred. [Applause.] The great battle ship which bore the name of a sovereign State of this Union would still be upon the high seas, flying the flag of this great Republic; and the more than 250 brave seamen, many of whom now sleep fathoms deep beneath Cuban waters, would have been wearing the uniform of the nation which they honored with their courage and sought to defend with their lives. [Prolonged applause.]

You refused to act, and the progress of events has simply intensified the situation. The longer you postpone doing the right thing, the more certain it is that war, and war alone, will extricate you. In trying to allow Spain to complete her reconquest of Cuba, you will make it absolutely necessary that you shall intervene in the cause of freedom. There may be time still to avert a war. Within the last forty-eight hours a representative of the Cuban Republic has said to me that they do not desire us to engage in war with Spain; they only ask us to recognize their independence, and thus give them the credit and standing to which they are entitled among the nations of the earth, and with their own strong arms and their own brave hearts they will achieve their own independence. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

They prefer that course, and I sympathize with the spirit which prompts them to prefer it. Any people worthy to be free desire to achieve their own freedom, and if the Cuban people sought their freedom through American intervention, I should doubt their ability to maintain it when it was given to them. They hope to have a national history. They hope to have national heroes. They hope to teach their children, who, in turn, will teach their children and their children's children, how Cuban patriots wrought out the problem of Cuban freedom. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Is there a man who does not sympathize with that lofty sentiment? A representative of the Cuban Republic said to me, with great frankness and feeling:

We do not seek to involve the United States in a war with Spain. It is unnecessary. Give us a recognition of our independence, so that we can obtain arms and heavy artillery, and in thirty days we will put an army of a hundred thousand Cuban patriots in the field, and in thirty days more the flag of Spain will be trailing in the dust of Cuba.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

That is their spirit. Why do we not meet them in it?

War! You invite it with all its horrors, which I know as well as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] does. I was raised in a section that witnessed its desolation. My father and my kinsmen came back from the battlefields rendered historic by the courage of those who wore the blue as well as of those who wore the gray. When they turned from Appomattox, where they had left everything except their honor, on every hand they witnessed the horrors and desolations of war.

Where they had left happy homes they found charred and blackened ruins. What had once been a peaceful dwelling where a busy housewife plied her daily care, where little children trained its vines and played in peace, there were only ashes. They came back to find their social system subverted, their industrial condition changed, their fortunes gone, and many of their bravest and best had fallen in that unhappy strife. They remember all this, but it has not conquered their resentment against wrong and injustice. A one-armed Confederate veteran manifested their spirit when he said to me a few days ago, "I had rather take this other arm and lay it by the side of one that fertilizes the battlefield of Shiloh than to see my country insulted or the freedon of a brave people denied." [Applause on the Democratic side.] We do not want war. We have twice offered you the opportunity to avoid it. But, Mr. Chairman, we might as well be bold. If it takes a war to free the Island of Cuba, my voice, and the voice of those with whom I have the honor to act, is for war. Our motto is: "Cuba free, without a war if possible; Cuba free, with a war if necessary." [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted by order of the House. If there be no objection, the informal amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will read the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates: For 1 sergeant major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 leader of the band, 1 drum-major, 50 first sergeants, 150 sergeants, 220 corporals, 30 musicians, 120 drummers and fifers, and 2,499 privates, and the number of enlisted men authorized as above for the Marine Corps shall be exclusive of those undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such confinement, and for the expenses of clerks of the United States Marine Corps traveling under orders, $509,888.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, I am induced to trespass upon the attention of the committee for a few minutes by the remark of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] that if Congress had recognized the Cuban patriots as belligerents this war would have ended long since. This prediction of what might have happened if something had been done that was not done leads me to claim the attention of the House briefly.

Belligerency means what? That the Government recognizes two parties in a contest as engaged in a war for supremacy. That would not relieve this Government from its obligation of strict neutrality between them. It would have to maintain it the same as it has been doing. Not a gun, not a man could go to help the Cuban patriots under belligerency that can not go to-day. They could have had no aid nor assistance more than they have had during this time that the Government has been watching these movements.

This Government made England pay over $15,000,000 for not observing strict neutrality after she had recognized the belligerent rights of the Confederates in our civil war, and we should have involved ourselves in the danger of a war long before this had belligerency been recognized. Spain would stop an American vessel to overhaul it to see if it had contraband of war, and the doctrine of this Government, proclaimed and maintained in the second war of independence, was that the flag protected all over which it floated and no right of search could be permitted to any nation.

A chance shot would have opened all the bloody drama of a war long ago, in my judgment; and my prediction is just as good as the prediction of the gentleman from Texas that the war would have been ended.

Belligerency, therefore, would have been of no advantage to the patriots on the Island of Cuba. I have regarded this question from the first, Mr. Chairman, as simply resolving itself into one thing in the end.

When the day should come when this Government would feel justified in its own right and position on this hemisphere, in view of the public sentiment of the Christian world, to recognize the independence of Cuba, then it would become our duty as American citizens, our duty to the country and to the common cause of liberty and the rights of humanity, to maintain and declare the independence of the patriots of Cuba; and that would be a warning to Spain that she must withdraw her control over Cuba, and if it was not done it might then be the duty of this Government to intervene with military force.

There was a time when the Spanish flag floated over more of this hemisphere than the flags of all other nations, and she had on this continent more territory than any other nation. But she has lost it all. Cuba and Puerto Rico is all of this mighty possession that is left under her flag. The day is soon to come when Cuba must be free; and it is only a question of time. I would say to gentlemen you can have war any day. That question will keep. No danger of losing the opportunity. [Laughter.]

That seems to be the trouble with our impatient friends on the other side, that they are afraid of losing a chance for war. [Laughter and applause.] Mr. Chairman, when the time comes for the recognition of the independence of Cuba, and I think it is near, if war must come as a result, I think a little delay of the war would be better. If we are to begin the war in the rainy season in Cuba, what would be the effect? The men sent to Cuba, not acclimated, would, most of them, find a grave in the island in the rainy season, the same as the Spanish soldier.

The climate has killed more Spanish soldiers than the arms of the patriots, and will continue to do so. God Almighty is on the side of the patriots in Cuba, and their salvation will soon come through the aid of climatic influences. It is impossible for a nation to bring soldiers enough 3,000 miles over the ocean to conquer a brave people, though they may be comparatively few in numbers as our fathers proved in the Revolution. From reliable information from two hundred and fifty to sixty thousand Spanish soldiers have been sent to Cuba.

Mr. GROW. If the House will indulge me for a couple of minutes, I shall be through.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROW. Spain has sent of her sons already 250,000 or 260,000 to Cuba, and to-day, by the best information that can be obtained, there are probably not to exceed 30,000 fit to take the field. How long would it take her to conquer Cuba?

The climate has done its work and will continue to do its work; and when the rainy season is over this year, Spain must send reenforcements again, as she has done every year heretofore, or abandon the contest. In view of that state of things, the executive department of our Government can, by negotiation, settle the question in a short time, so that Cuba shall be an independent nation, and the great Republic will welcome the patriots of Cuba as a sister republic.

In the war between England and Spain, before our Revolution, England attempted to wrest Cuba from Spain, and then of the men from Connecticut and Massachusetts who under the British flag attempted to take Cuba, of all who landed upon the island, only a small remnant returned to their homes. The climate did for them what the climate has done for the Spanish soldier and would do for ours in the rainy season.

In conclusion, I think the time is near at hand when this Government should recognize the independence of this people as a sister republic struggling as did our fathers for the great principles of our own Declaration of Independence. When that is done, this Government must be ready to see to it that recognition secures the independence of this people. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to answer the argument of the gentleman from Texas, but I feel a very strong degree of sympathy for him. When a man has been for nearly a year trying to play a game of small politics on the question of war and has failed every time, and has finally made an exhibition of himself in a futile effort in that direction unparalleled in the history of this body, it is a matter that becomes pathetic. I rose to point out one or two absurd statements constantly repeated in the newspapers and which found an echo in the voice of the gentleman from Texas.

He warns this side of the House that if the President attempts to force the Cubans to buy their freedom, hell will break loose in about fifteen seconds on the Democratic side. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Nobody proposes to force the Cubans to buy their independence. It is like "a tale told by the idiots, full of sound and fury, and signifying nothing." There is no such proposition by, to, or from the Administration, and the whole idle tattle of this character in the newspapers has been just so much folly and nonsense, and yet statesmen, leaders of a great division upon this floor, rise and solemnly warn the Republican side of this House that if the President drives Cuba to buy her independence, they will go to work to prevent it!

Nobody has attempted it. It is an idle dream of somebody and talk in the newspapers. Again, what does the gentleman know about how far matters have progressed between the United States as the intermediary source of diplomacy and Spain and Cuba on the other side? The gentleman says he is in close touch with the Cuban junta; he says he has their confidence, and I am glad to hear it.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not in close touch.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is what the gentleman said.

Mr. BAILEY. I invite them to come to my house, and I would do it one hundred times.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am delighted to hear it. I am as anxious as the gentleman from Texas that Cuba shall be free. Has any man connected with the Cuban junta intimated that the President of the United States has interposed any condition that Cuba shall pay——

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Ohio speaks of the "Cuban junta." I know nothing about it. I have conferred with the representatives of the Cuban Republic in my house.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Has the gentleman heard from "the representatives of the Cuban Republic in my house" that the President was trying to force them to pay for their independence?

Mr. BAILEY. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then what was there in what the gentleman did say——

Mr. BAILEY. You asked me a question. Now let me finish my answer. Every man knows, and the gentleman from Ohio knows, that I did not pretend that they had told me that or that the President of the United States had told me that. I took the statement from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Then the gentleman drew a very erroneous impression from my remarks.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Indiana said nothing of the kind. The gentleman said something to the effect that the Cubans had a right to be allowed to buy their independence.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The gentleman from Texas said yesterday that he believed that it was so, and says he knows it to-day.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand that the gentleman from Texas did say that yesterday he believed the President of the United States was trying to force it upon the Cubans, and to-day he said he knew it. Now, I rose simply to say that the gentleman is wholly mistaken. If he had such information from an authoritative source, he ought to make it public. The time has come in this country when misunderstanding of what is going on is doing more harm than the views of people who do understand.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield for a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; if it is a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman state that he believes from what he knows that it is not in contemplation by the President of the United States in the negotiations now going on to treat of a money consideration for the freedom of Cuba?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is too contemptible to answer. There never was such a thought ever entered into the head of any man connected with the Administration.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is not there an intimation of that kind in the negotiations at Madrid?

Mr. GROSVENOR. What have we to do with the negotiations at Madrid? I say the purchase of Cuba by the Government or the suggestion of its approval is a story told by "an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing." There never was anything in it, and this is only done to fan anew the flame that seeks for political advantage upon this floor by springing so-called questions of privilege that make the author of them ridiculous in the sight of common humanity.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended ten minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LENTZ. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. LENTZ. I see in the newspaper that forty-five members on that side of the House met two or three evenings ago and held a caucus, intending to vote for a resolution for the independence of Cuba. Were they seeking our political advantage or their own political advantage?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I heard something of that kind; but I heard something better than that. Yesterday, when the scheme to promote a political advantage was sprung here, with the awkwardness of a Fourth of July boy burning firecrackers, I noticed 178 gentlemen put their names down on the right side of the organization of party and party concord. [Applause.]

Mr. LENTZ. Will the gentleman answer about the 87 members who did not vote on that side?

Mr. GROSVENOR. How many on that side of the House did not vote?

Mr. LENTZ and several others. Not one.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There were only two gentlemen on this side who did not vote, and those two gentlemen had a good right to vote as they pleased. We were able to defeat the machinations that sought to stampede this House into disorganization. [Applause.] Now, let me close what I have to say on this subject. The exact fact is, that two Republicans refused to vote to sustain the Speaker, and every other man on this side who was present and not voting was paired. That is the exact fact. Two men, answering to their own consciences—and they had as good a right in that respect as I had—declined to vote to uphold the Speaker. How many gentlemen on the other side voted to override the Speaker, confessing at the same time that he had ruled according to law? How many?

A MEMBER (on the Republican side). Every one.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I could name a good many of them myself.

Now, in conclusion, the Administration of this Government to-day is as anxious for the freedom and independence of Cuba as any gentleman on the other side of the House. [Applause.] There is not one man, from the President down to the humblest member on this floor, who will ever, without the consent of the Cuban insurgents, ratify, agree to, or approve any settlement of the Cuban question that does not involve absolute independence for Cuba [applause]; and there is not a gentleman on the other side of the House who knows this fact better or from a more direct source of information than does the gentleman from Texas, because he has had the fullest opportunity to learn the fact; and he knows it is unjust to the President to intimate that he to-day knows that the President is trying to force Cuba to buy her independence.

Mr. Chairman, this movement will go forward. The Republicans of this House, the Republicans of the Senate, and the loyal people of the United States, Republicans and Democrats, are in favor of the independence of Cuba. But they are in favor of avoiding war if it can possibly be done consistently with the honor, dignity, and glory of the American name. [Applause.]

Do you think that this great party in power to-day is going to be unfaithful to a trust which, as the gentleman from Texas intimates, will, if properly discharged, bring glory to the Administration? Will the Administration now in power run away from the most brilliant opportunity that any Administration since the days of Abraham Lincoln has had to establish itself and its party in the praise and honor and glory of a mighty people? [Applause.] Any gentleman who thinks so does not understand the man at the head of affairs. He may be persistent in his purpose, because he understands that purpose. He may be going more slowly than many of us think he ought to go.

I sympathize to a great extent in that feeling myself, but he is going in the right direction. Nothing has been lost to this country. The journals of the civilized word this morning have spoken with stronger terms of indorsement than ever before of the attitude and action of the people of the United States, and in that connection one and all of the English-speaking journals put it forward as the cardinal idea that Cuba must be free, and that we would make her free. [Applause.]

As the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said "war will keep." Diplomacy may go slower than we think it ought to go; but when we know it is going in the right direction, guided by the right sort of hands, inspired by the right sort of hearts, there is no danger that the people of this country are to be betrayed by their rulers.

Let us stand together and cease this attempt at political capital. [Applause.] It is unworthy of a great political party; it is unworthy of any gentleman who wants to be the leader in this House or the next. He can not climb the ladder by attempting to go up a rope of that character loosely suspended from the top.

There is something more than temporary political advantage to be considered in this matter. There is statesmanship, there is honor, there is integrity. There is glory in the right direction. Cuba will be free, and Cuba will be free by the intervention of the United States. I would not give one cent for a declaration of independence unaccompanied by a further declaration. What nonsense it would be to declare the Island of Cuba independent and then let her starve to death!

What sense would there be in declaring a nation independent that has not a gun-making shop, has not a ship, has not a piece of artillery, so far as I know? The thing to do in the case of Cuba is to exhaust all that honest diplomacy can do to achieve her liberty and independence, and, failing in that, stop not at the halfway house that the gentleman from Texas is talking about—not only declare that Cuba is independent and shall be free, but accompany that declaration with an army and a navy to make our declaration worth something. [Applause.]

Mr. CUMMINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS]. Will the gentleman from New York permit the Chair to put the request for unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio have five minutes additional?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from Ohio for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, this mighty demonstration and organization of war—what does it mean?

Mr. GRIGGS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. GRIGGS. I desire to ask the gentleman, would not the recognition of the independence of Cuba, followed by the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine, be sufficient?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, does the gentleman ask that question in earnest? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GRIGGS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Because the Monroe doctrine has no application whatever in a case like that. So I beg the gentleman will not trifle with the subject with which I am dealing. What is the Monroe doctrine? What means the mighty demonstration of war that is being made in this country? What does it mean when every arsenal of whatever kind or shape, when every navy-yard and every appliance in the country is working by night and by day, irrespective of price, to forge the engines of war?

What does it mean, I ask the gentleman? What is the United States going to do? Is it going to make a "shilly-shally" declaration that the Cubans are free, and then let them go to the devil, in the clutch of the Spanish nation? [Applause on the Republican side.] Is that the idea of gentlemen?

Let me tell the gentleman that behind the efforts of the Administration, that knows what it is talking about, behind the mighty demonstration of loyalty that comes up from the people of this country, behind the mighty impulse of the people, who know what they are doing, and they are ready—they are preparing now—to carry into force the declaration they made, the declaration that may be demanded from us, not only that Cuba is free and independent, but that we have been charged with her defense, and propose to see that she shall be forever free hereafter. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

What does it mean that we have abandoned our own shipyards and have gone abroad to buy, with a profusion of expenditure, the ships of war of other nations? What does it mean that every preparation that can be determined upon as rapidly as possible is being made, and being pushed forward with expedition?

My countrymen, you have not been betrayed by your Administration or deceived by it. [Applause on the Republican side.] That Administration is in touch with the highest inspiration and the best motives of patriotic citizens throughout the whole land; and if the people—with the help of the Democratic party if we can get it, or without its help if we can not get it, but we will get it—I say with the help of the Democratic party, without their engineering and paltry, demagogical speeches on the floor of this House, in due time—at an early time, too—the people of this country will shout in praise of a Republican Administration which will carry into execution the power, the will, and the edicts of the American people. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I would ask if it is possible, by unanimous consent, or by any other process, to obtain an armistice long enough on this question in order to enable us to proceed with business on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is hardly a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There seem to be a great many men on the floor who are more desirous of declaring war than of getting ready to declare war. I suppose they want to declare it with their voices, and if it were done now, we certainly would be able to present a strong front on this floor. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BAILEY. Let the "stormy petrel" from Maine rage for a while and then we will get on with the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I wish to give notice that at the conclusion of these remarks I shall ask the committee to go on with the bill. [Hisses on the Democratic side.] Let gentlemen hiss if they desire to. I enjoy it just as much as I do their cheers or applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. OGDEN. Everybody is in order but the gentleman from Maine.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that the gentleman's remark is in order.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GROSVENOR, generally observes the decencies of life in debate, but on this occasion he has failed to do so.

Mr. QUIGG. I call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that the gentleman from Ohio has just left his seat. I am sure that he would prefer the gentleman from Ohio to be in his seat, to hear what the gentleman is about to say.

Mr. BAILEY. I will take great pleasure in waiting, for I want him to hear this.

Mr. QUIGG. I was sure the gentleman would prefer that course.

Mr. BAILEY. And until the gentleman from Ohio returns I will allow the gentleman from New York to proceed.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, it affords me great pleasure to note the fact that gentlemen on this side of the Chamber have voted to recognize the independence of Cuba. It gives me additional pleasure, sir, to be assured by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that the other side of the Chamber favor the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba. There ought to be no politics in such a crisis. "A plague on both your houses." Behind you stand the American people. They are not asking you as Republicans whether you will recognize the independence of Cuba, nor are they asking the Democratic party on this floor whether they are in favor of it. They ask your action as Americans without regard to party, appealing, as they have a right to appeal, as American citizens to an American Congress. They point, sir, to the fact that with every day of delay thousands of little children, thousands of women and other reconcentrados of Cuba are dying of starvation. Every day hundreds of deaths are heaped upon the heads of this Congress because of its policy of inaction.

I said yesterday that Weyler's order was still in force. If the newspapers are to be believed, Blanco is about to revoke it. But while I speak it is still in force, Mr. Chairman. This order includes not only Cubans, but American citizens as well. I saw in Matanzas an American citizen who, two years ago, was worth $200,000. He had an estate 6 miles up the Matanzas River. He married his wife in Amherst, Mass. When Weyler's order was issued his plantation was destroyed and he was driven within the trocha of Matanzas with the other reconcentrados. Ah, sir, here was the initial step for intervention by the American Government. It was at that time that not only a protest but a peremptory order should have been given to Spain. She should have been told, "You can drive your own people into these pens if you see fit, but keep your hands off from American citizens." [Applause.]

These American citizens were driven into this pen. The consul at Matanzas, Mr. Brice, told me with his own lips that he had reported this to the State Department, where the report has remained buried to the present hour. This American citizen and his family are still penned in at Matanzas, and are saved from starvation by the $50,000 Congressional appropriation.

At Sagua, sir, Consul Barker told me of an American citizen who, refusing to obey the order of Weyler, was murdered, his plantation destroyed, his cattle killed. The consul sent to the State Department the affidavits of seven eyewitnesses of the murder, and that report has remained buried in the State Department out of sight of the light of day.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat, the American people want no politics here in Congress on this question. [Applause.] They demand action as Americans. They demand the action of an American Congress; and so far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I shall vote with any party and with every party that will support a proposition to end this war and give freedom and independence to Cuba. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You will not do as they did yesterday—vote against a resolution because it comes from the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CUMMINGS. One word more, Mr. Chairman. If this is not done, and a dishonorable course is taken, let the Navy Department paint its ships in black, let the Almighty drape the heavens, and let the American people sit down in sackcloth and ashes, for there is one thing worse than war, and that is national cowardice. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized on a motion to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, when my attention was called to the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] was absent from the Chamber, I had proceeded so far as to say that he generally observed the decencies of debate, but that he had signally failed to do so to-day.

The theory is that we are all equals here, and no man with a proper respect for himself or a proper respect for this forum will permit himself to stigmatize the statements of his fellow-members as "jargon and the gabble of an idiot." Perhaps I do not repeat the gentleman's exact words. I do recall, however, his use of the familiar quotation from Shakespeare that "it is a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not quite that, if the gentleman will allow me. I used the proper quotation, and not what the gentleman is saying. The quotation is "Like" or "as a tale told by an idiot;" not that it is a tale told by an idiot.

Mr. BAILEY—

And why should all this difference be
'Twixt tweedledum and tweedledee?

[Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, if it is a tale told by an idiot, I refer that respectfully to the gentleman from Indiana, who——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BAILEY. Let me finish my statement—whose reputation for fairness, in spite of his partisanship, is as much above the reputation of the gentleman from Ohio as an eagle is above a glowworm. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. While the gentleman smiles, it is as one who would twist a knife under my ribs. The gentleman must not misquote me.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman not only said it once, but he repeated it; he declared in commendation of the President that he had brought the parties to this dispute so far toward an amicable understanding that the Cuban junta had agreed to pay a hundred million dollars and Spain was about ready to accept it. Do I state him correctly?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Substantially correctly, but there was no intimation with it, if the gentleman pleases——

Mr. BAILEY. I should like the reporter's notes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman must take my remarks in their entirety. That is the way to get at my true meaning. There was no intimation at all on my part that the President had forced or compelled anybody to offer anything for Cuban independence.

Mr. BAILEY. Did the gentleman use the words "that the President had brought them to it?"

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Possibly; but if you will take my remarks entire, you will find, as I said, that it was simply by virtue of negotiations——

Mr. BAILEY. If the gentleman explains that very much more, it will not be worth talking about——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That it was in the spirit of compromise.

Mr. BAILEY (continuing). Because the very point of what he said was that the President, great and wise—and I have made no criticism against the President up to this time—that the President, great and wise, in the exercise of his patience and his forbearance, had almost solved this question, or at least had proceeded so far in the solution of it that the Cuban junta had offered to buy the freedom of the island and the Spanish Government was entertaining the offer. And if the gentleman did not assert that as being to the credit of the Administration, then I am totally mistaken in my position.

But the gentleman says I am substantially correct. Then what I quote him as saying is, that the President has brought the high contending parties in this bloody drama to the south of us almost to an understanding.

But the gentleman from Ohio says that the proposition that Cuba is to buy its independence of Spain "is a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury." I commend his quotation, with my compliments, to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON]. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

If there is an idiot here, it is not on this side of the Chamber, but on that, and I suspect that the idiot is not the member from Indiana, but the member from Ohio. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Now, Mr. Chairman, how carefully did the gentleman from Ohio protect himself. He declared that there had never been any such proposition, and yet a little further on he says that it is absurd to say that the President or any man on that side of the Chamber will ever consent to a proposition for the purchase of Cuba that does not involve its independence. How do you know, if it has not been discussed among you?

Mr. GROSVENOR. We are all intelligent enough, I think, to know. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BAILEY. Did the gentleman use the word "honest"?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. There was a tribe in the biblical days that stood upon the corners of the streets declaring their honesty and thanking God that they were not as other men were, and yet that same tribe are to-day more despised than any people of whom the Bible tells us.

The most dishonest man is he who boasts of his honesty and stands in sore need of a testimonial in favor of it. But the gentleman from Ohio then proceeded a little further to reveal the attitude of his party. Of course the President of the United States will not negotiate the purchase. Of course Congress will not be asked to ratify it. But if, after this Government has withheld first the recognition of belligerency and then of independence, the Cuban patriots are driven to make terms with their Spanish oppressors, Congress will be told that the representatives of the Cuban Republic have made to the representatives of the Spanish Government a proposition which has been accepted and that the whole matter then has passed from our hands.

It then becomes a closed incident, and nothing remains except, I presume, to arbitrate the destruction of the Maine, and that bloody deed, the most disgraceful in American history, will be closed by arbitrating the murder of our sailors and the destruction of our ship. Is that your policy?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask a moment more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may be allowed to continue his remarks five minutes more.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to continue his remarks ten minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Before the gentleman proceeds, may I ask him a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I want to get at the gentleman's real position. Of the two alternatives, which would you prefer—a voluntary purchase of their independence of Spain by the Cubans, or their independence obtained through war by the United States?

Mr. BAILEY. I have no objection to answering. Mr. Chairman, I never will compel or agree that the Cuban people shall pay one dollar for their liberty to a nation which has starved their wives and children. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Just answer my question. How far will the gentleman go in order to prevent the Cubans obtaining their independence from Spain by voluntary purchase?

Mr. BAILEY. I did not hear the gentleman exactly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. To what extent did the gentleman say he would go in order to prevent negotiations for the voluntary purchase by the Cubans of their independence from Spain?

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman states his question adroitly, but not fairly. My answer is this: If you will recognize the independence of Cuba, there is no power on earth that can compel them to negotiate with Spain for the purchase of their freedom.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That is not an answer to my question. You have said as between two alternatives you would not permit Cuba to purchase her liberty of Spain. Now, how would the United States Government prevent Cuba purchasing her own liberty if she desires to do so?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I have answered that question, and my time is running. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I have always tried to be respectful to my political opponents; but for the last two or three weeks I have never taken this floor to make a statement but gentlemen on that side have tried to drown my voice. I have believed that their sense of justice and common decency would restrain them from doing so; but it has not done so, and yesterday I felt provoked to call them the Speaker's "servants," and I now think I ought to have said I believed them to be the Speaker's "menials." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Since I have been a member of this House I have never interrupted any man by a jeer or any attempt to drown his voice, and I think that in common decency and fairness I ought to be exempt from the interruptions that I have been subjected to whenever I have attempted to occupy the floor within the last three weeks.

To return to my controversy with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], I have here his exact statement, which I will read:

When I sat down a short while ago, I was attempting to make before this House and the country, if indeed the country will heed one voice so feeble as my own, a statement of the fact that by the steady policy of diplomacy, the honest, patriotic course of the President of the United States, we were gradually bringing these two antagonistic elements together, that Spain had come down to the point that she was willing to abandon possession of Cuba upon a mere nominal consideration, and that the Cuban junta, authorized, I doubt not, to act for the insurgents, had agreed that they could and would raise $100,000,000 in order to purchase their independence.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to a speech delivered on the 20th day of May, 1897, almost a year ago, by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], in which he plead then, as he pleads to-day, for time; time for the Republican party to solve this question. Almost a year ago! How much more time do you want, while the spirits of the starving men, women, and children are revisiting their wasted places? How much longer must we wait while the Cuban patriot looks into the pale and hungry faces of his wife and children, and then looks toward our own great and free land and on his bended knees begs the God of nations to send him relief?

How much longer must these patriots, who are struggling as our forefathers more than one hundred years ago were compelled to struggle, wait before the American Congress will send them a message recognizing that their heroic struggle has attracted the attention and commands the approval of a liberty-loving and free people at their very doors? [Applause.] I shall ask the Clerk to read what the gentleman from Ohio said one year ago. It sounds so much like what he said to-day that it will be the best answer that I can make.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Clerk will read.

Mr JOHNSON of Indiana. I would like to have the gentleman from Texas, when he gets through, answer the last question that I put to him.

The Clerk read as follows:

Let me say to the gentleman that the Republicans of the United States were born and raised in sympathy with Cuba—free Cuba. It was a Republican President who, against the protest of the Democratic party, sought to relieve Cuba of her troubles long ago. And it is the Republicans on this floor who feel a genuine and honest sympathy for Cuba. And when the right time comes, in the right order of things and upon their own motion, they will be found voting not only for belligerent rights to Cuba, but they will be found demanding liberty and national independence for the men of Cuba who have suffered. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BAILEY. They applaud. Will a man stand up and say that you have ever voted for the recognition of belligerency? And yet General GROSVENOR said you would do it. Is there a man among you that ever voted for Cuban independence? And yet General GROSVENOR said you would do it. While the Republican party has been waiting and praying for wisdom to solve this momentous problem, 300,000 men, women, and children have starved to death in this unhappy island. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not a fact that even prior to that speech every Republican on this floor had voted to recognize the rights of belligerency for the people of Cuba, and did not your Democratic President refuse to execute the orders of Congress? And did the gentleman from Texas introduce any resolution to drive forward that scheme of liberty and justice?

Mr. BAILEY. My answer is that every Democrat, with a very few exceptions, voted for that resolution when there was a so-called Democratic President; they voted for it then and they have voted for it every time since. How is it with your side? You voted for it when you did not have the President, and you vote against it when you happen to have the President. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Ohio boasts of a united party. Are you united? If so, what meant that caucus of reconcentrados that assembled in the Library building yesterday afternoon? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask that it be unlimited. I hope the gentleman will not forget my last question before he sits down.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I asked the gentleman a bit ago which alternative he would prefer, that the Cubans should voluntarily purchase their independence of Spain, or that they should achieve it through war with the United States. His answer was that he would not permit the Cubans to purchase their independence—that was the substance. Now, I ask him how far he wants the Government of the United States to go in order to prevent the Cubans from voluntarily purchasing their liberty of Spain?

Mr. BAILEY. An examination of the reporter's notes will show that I have answered that question twice; the third time would not make the answer any more emphatic, and I desire to occupy the brief time I have by recalling the fact that when we were making provision for the starving inhabitants of Cuba less than a year ago, the gentlemen on that side told us that war could wait, but famine would not; that we must first relieve the hunger, and then we would take up the question of independence.

We tried to force this House to couple with its provision a recognition of the right of this people to fight for their own independence. We believed then as we believe now that if our policy had prevailed Cuba would be free and the grave crisis that now threatens the peace of two nations would have been averted. But a practically united Republican majority taunted us with opprobrious epithets. They declared that we were disregarding the appeals of humanity and the cries of famine; that we were delaying the sending of provisions to men who starved while we played the many-sided game of politics. They promised that when the starvation had been relieved they would meet and would decide the question of belligerency and independence.

There is your record. There are the words and the promises of the gentleman who assumes to speak for this Administration. You need not answer me; but you must answer the exasperated people of this country. Have you kept your promise? Have you voted for belligerency? Have you voted for independence? Perhaps many of you have been anxious to do it. I have been told that a large number of you held a caucus yesterday afternoon. I am told that you appointed a committee to wait upon the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAILEY. I will not ask the House to indulge me further. I leave that committee to make its report from the President to the next Republican caucus of reconcentrados. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed, if all the arguments in favor of and opposed to the pending amendment have been exhausted.

The motion to close debate was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the informal amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mileage: For mileage of officers traveling under orders without troops, $8,000.

Mr. LENTZ. I move to amend by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, several remarks have been made which I think ought to be taken up, and I begin by taking a remark of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] that we ought to hold up the hands—or the arms, rather—of the President at this time. I submit to all fair-minded men that the arms of the President of the United States can not be held up, because they are now tied behind his back by the money power. [Applause on the Democratic side, and derisive cries on the Republican side.]

I thank you for that derision, gentlemen on the other side. I will answer you by the words of my friend from Ohio, General GROSVENOR. You have already had an answer from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to your groaning in answer to his most eloquent plea for Cuba. You on the opposite side are playing and singing a different tune to-day from what you did on the 6th of January last. On that day my friend General GROSVENOR was for war, and now he, too, is saying, "Wait, wait, wait." On that day he condemned his own party and read to you from the St. Louis platform of June, 1896, on the Cuban question. We are now well along in 1898.

General GROSVENOR was twitted for having abandoned the St. Louis platform on the civil service, and he answered you then and defended himself with sneers and taunts as to your record on the Cuban question. He read to you the declaration of the St. Louis platform on that subject, and I repeat it, reading from his speech of the 6th of January, when he stood before you and asked you how you liked it.

From the hour of achieving their independence the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other American peoples to free themselves from European domination. We watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the Cuban patriots against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty.

The Government of Spain having lost control of Cuba—

In June, 1896, gentlemen, you said the Government of Spain had lost control of Cuba—and being unable to protect the property or lives of resident Americans—

You said that, too, in June, 1896—

or to comply with its treaty obligations—

You said that, too, in June, 1896—

We believe that the Government of the United States should actively use its influence and good offices to restore peace and give independence to the island.

You said that, too, in June, 1896.

Yet when our friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] introduced his resolution yesterday, you spent half a day in technical quibbles against the recognition of the independence of Cuba. Talk about taunts and sneers on this side! I want to say to you, gentlemen of the opposition, that the truth is not in any plank of the St. Louis platform. "Actions speak louder than words."

If you meant what you said in 1896, why did you not prove it yesterday by your votes for the independence of Cuba? Almost two years ago you put before the people that solemn declaration I have just read. You, above all men, gentlemen, ought to have honor enough to defend your President, to whose loyal support we came by joining with you in giving into his hands $50,000,000 of the money of the people—a thing unprecedented in the history of this country. We gave it to him with our godspeed, that he might use it like a thunderbolt to strike the chains of oppression from the bleeding limbs of starving Cubans, who have suffered more at the hands of Spain than did any pioneer at the burning stake of fiend or savage. We helped you to put into force and effect your St. Louis platform on Cuban independence and the protection of the lives and property of American citizens, but you have not been manly or candid enough to accept our aid.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that all debate on this paragraph be now closed.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] may be allowed to proceed for five minutes further.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman from Ohio desires to go on for five minutes more in explanation of his amendment, I am willing.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine move to close debate at the expiration of five minutes?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Yes; I modify my motion in that way.

The motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine as modified was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will again recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Chairman and my friends on the other side of the House, let me remind you of another factor which ought to make your Americanism blush, if you had any Americanism left in your composition. The chief representative of that effete and barbarous Government called Spain stood in your capital city by virtue of your courtesy, and in a confidential communication to his Government said that the Chief Executive of 75,000,000 American people was nothing but a "low politician!"

Following that, when you sent your flag on a battle ship—the Maine—smiling with friendship into the harbor of Havana, what did the Spaniards do? They received and placed a generous, patient, and charitable visitor, bearing the olive branch of peace, in a position which was designated by themselves and best suited for the cowardly crime of the assassin. Did they receive and place our battle ship in a position such as we provided for the Viscaya at New York, or in such a position as the one in which they would have placed one of their own great war ships? No; not at all. They are not the men to do a thing of that kind.

What are the circumstances in the case? They are well known to our people, and the country will demand full reparation for it. Those who have investigated the condition of the wreck tell us that they found a certain wire "which looked as if it did not belong to the ship." They were not able to trace it from under the wreck of the Maine, or to follow it to the shore of the harbor, but you can place your own interpretation on the testimony upon that point. What is the indication? It indicates the connecting link between Moro Castle, under the control of Spanish arms, and the mine under the bow of the steamer Maine which destroyed that great vessel.

Is it not very peculiar, Mr. Chairman, that this particular wire, which was entirely under the control of the Spanish authorities, should be the one to connect the submarine mine under the Maine with the mainland? They have many other wires to other mines, but the evidence shows that this was the only one that seems to have been touched. I say it was a very plain case of design and treachery such as no civilized nation has ever perpetrated in the history of the world. Aye, sirs, the annals of barbarism and the cruel traditions of savagery may now be destroyed and forgotten, for they have all been surpassed. On such evidence as that embodied in the report in regard to the destruction of the Maine there is no court in this land that would not have found the accused guilty of the foul crime of assassination and condemned him to be hung as a murderer in the first degree, the vilest and lowest degree of infamy.

They say it was an "accident!" They say it was not murder! Ah, Mr. Chairman, it was the foul act of a miserable assassin that blew into eternity the lives of 266 American seamen. "Wait," "Wait," "Wait," they say. "Let us take the matter coolly and considerately," they say. We are to wait, according to this theory, until the last Cuban patriot is starved to death. I say that your policy of waiting is a policy of stupidity. It is a policy of cowardice.

It is about time that this country, with its 75,000,000 people, should be heard once for all in defense of American citizenship, once for all for American patriotism, once for all for national honor. With an area equal to all of Europe, with more gold, with more silver, with more coal, with more iron, with more corn, and more wheat, and more of everything that goes to make riches, and more of all these rich and great conditions of life than all of Russia, Germany, France, England, Spain, Italy, Austria, and all other European nations combined, shall we be heard or shall we remain impotent? Some of you on that side of the House say that this country is not great enough and powerful enough to demand justice for the struggling Cubans; but I say, and every one of my associates whose creed is the Chicago platform, declares that they shall be free and independent as a people who have so fairly won their liberty by their own exertions. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Cubans request us to take but one step—they request us to acknowledge their independence; and if, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania says, it will do no good, it certainly can do no harm to recognize them and their independence. If Spain wants to declare war for that, let her make the most of it. In the name of the American manhood which fought and won in every war in which the American people have ever engaged, let us now, when we are three, ten, and fifteen times as strong, engage, if need be, in another war and avenge the lives of the American patriots who now sleep a restless sleep in Cuban soil. Cuba must be free. Those 266 American citizens can not and shall not sleep their eternal sleep in the land of tyrants. The money power shall not dictate the policy of American manhood. I protest against it in behalf of ninety-nine out of every hundred of the Democrats, as well as the Republicans, in the great State of Ohio. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For commutation of quarters to officers on duty without troops where there are no public quarters, $4,000.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The question of liberal, aye, bounteous, appropriations for the increase of the United States Navy is one that addresses itself to every dictate of sound judgment and every impulse of lofty patriotism. Under the complex conditions of modern civilization and international intercourse it seems that the necessary condition of peace is a thorough and adequate equipment for war; and under circumstances such as those that now confront us, and in the solemn and momentous situation in which we find ourselves to-day, the voice of everyone, irrespective of political lines or political affinities, must favor the placing of the American Navy on such a footing as will enable it to successfully cope with any navy upon the broad expanse of the ocean. And it is probable that this proposition has never been more forcibly emphasized nor the attention of the country more sharply directed to this truth than at the present hour.

Conditions are such now with reference to our relations to the Government of Spain that at any moment we may either choose or be forced to make a test of our naval strength upon the high seas. But it must prove a source of universal gratification, Mr. Chairman, to the hearts of American people to know that if we do so choose, or are thus forced, it will be in one of the most righteous causes upon which the smile of God has ever rested. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The history of Cuba for fifty years has been the history of a people vainly struggling for freedom. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the hour is now here when Cuba must be free. [Applause.] The pledge of the American people, the will of God, decree this. [Applause.] You can no longer forestall this conclusion, gentlemen. And while I have been highly edified at the exalted exhibition of virtue and courage upon that side of the Chamber, I want to reassure you, gentlemen, as to the attitude of this side so far as I am individually concerned. You will see this question settled, see it settled by the Republican party, voicing the highest aspirations of the American people, see it settled as honor dictates, see it settled as the highest dictates of conscience and of manhood demand. [Applause.]

And in my humble judgment, Mr. Chairman, Cuba must be free, not by purchase, not by the payment of two hundred millions, or less or more, in gold, but free by the diviner right of having purchased her freedom by a higher price than gold—the blood of her patriotic sons, shed in the most cruel, the most inhuman, the most infamous war that has ever befouled the pages of history. If these results can be accomplished by peaceful negotiations, well and good; but accomplished they must be, or the voice of the American people go unheeded. And if to accomplish them there must be an appeal to the most solemn and terrible of all tribunals, as Longfellow sings of the Building of the Ship, so will the undivided voice of the American people say to our noble President and to our gallant Navy which he shall thus commission:

> Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee,—
> Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
> Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
> Are all with thee,—are all with thee!

[Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Through the action of Americans.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The Clerk began the reading of the next section.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to address the committee?

Mr. DOCKERY. No; I was just going to indulge the hope that we could now proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I thank my friend.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is a probability that in the near future we may have graver matters to consider even than this.

Mr. LACEY. I call the gentleman from Missouri to order. He has no right to insist on going on with the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HANDY. Where is the Clerk reading in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is reading line 14, page 47. The Clerk will proceed.

In the office of the adjutant and inspector: One chief clerk, at $1,540.80; one clerk, at $1,400.52;

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I asked a question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. I asked it respectfully and in all seriousness and candor. I will read the question and the reply:

Mr. GRIGGS. I desire to ask the gentleman, Would not the recognition of the independence of Cuba, followed by the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine, be sufficient?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, does the gentleman ask that question in earnest?

Mr. GRIGGS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Because the Monroe doctrine has no application whatever in a case like that. So, I beg the gentleman will not trifle with the subject with which I am dealing. What is the Monroe doctrine?

Had not the gentleman intimated that I was trifling with the serious subject which he was discussing, I should have nothing to say in reply. But I desire, Mr. Chairman, now to inform the all-wise gentleman from Ohio what the Monroe doctrine is, in the exact language of the President who first declared it, and thereby acquit myself of the charge of trifling with this question.

Mr. Monroe said:

We owe it therefore to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere, but with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have on great consideration and just principles acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or of controlling in any manner their destiny by any European power in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

[Applause.]

That is the Monroe doctrine willingly furnished by the humble gentleman from Georgia to the omniscient gentleman from Ohio.

The gentleman from Ohio is a lawyer, and he ought to know that the language of Mr. Monroe, "and whose independence we have on great consideration and just principles acknowledged," has direct application to the situation which would follow the recognition by us of Cuba as an independent State. This is the reply of the gentleman from Georgia to the question of the gentleman from Ohio, and if the gentleman from Ohio is satisfied the gentleman from Georgia is. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I appeal to the committee. There has been exceedingly wide latitude, and I hope we will be able to make a little progress with the reading of the bill.

Mr. DRIGGS. I hope so, myself.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I know this is very much more useful than the naval bill!

[Mr. SKINNER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It is obvious that this committee has no particular business duty toward the United States, and I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The motion that the committee rise was then agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill making appropriations for the naval establishment and had come to no resolution thereon.

[Telegram.]

MILWAUKEE, WIS., March 31, 1898.

Hon. JOHN L. MITCHELL, Washington, D. C.:

The business people and conservative elements of the country at large are in favor of peace if same can be maintained with honor to our flag, and believe that overt acts or expressions of hostility on the part of the United States should be avoided. If Spain should force war upon us, the situation would of course be entirely changed, but war should be deprecated except as a last resort after all diplomatic efforts have failed. Any reasonable concessions on the part of Spain should be met in a conciliatory spirit.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I present a petition from the committee on philanthropic labor of the Religious Society of Friends, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

BALTIMORE, March 31, 1898.

To the Senate of the United States:

The committee on philanthropic labor of the Religious Society of Friends (Park avenue), representing 3,000 persons living in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia, would respectfully petition that measures contemplating forcible intervention in the dispute between Spain and her colony, Cuba, shall not receive the support of the members of your body.

Believing that war is an unnecessary and most cruel as well as ineffectual method of settling disputes, and that conciliation and arbitration accomplish far better results, and are more in accord with the spirit of the closing years of this century, we are much concerned at the warlike spirit manifested by our Senators, and would urge that they give loyal support to the President of the United States in his wise and patriotic efforts to maintain peace, and commend our Senators to those principles of justice, peace, and universal brotherhood which become a Christian people.

O. EDWARD JANNEY, Chairman.

II. What part of the $50,000,000 appropriated for the public defense by Congress at its present session has been allotted, through the War Department, for the construction of fortifications and the furnishing of guns for the defense of the harbors and cities and towns on the seacoast of Georgia? with specification of the said fortifications and guns for which said provision has been made.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and is hereby, instructed to report on or before the 5th instant a bill for the recognition of the independence of the Republic of Cuba.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

CONSULAR REPORTS ON AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolution No. 325, offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. It will be read:

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CHANDLER was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if it is not incompatible with the public service, to send to the Senate the copies of the reports of the consul-general and of the consuls of the United States in Cuba referred to in the resolution of the Senate adopted on February 14, 1898.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to gratify the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. Therefore I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I invoke for it their deliberate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reference of the resolution is asked to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

Mr. CHANDLER. I submit a resolution which I ask may go over until to-morrow.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, directed, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate what information, if any, has been received at the Department of State concerning the present condition of the reconcentrados in Cuba; and to send to the Senate copies of all such reports from consuls, vice-consuls, and commercial agents of the United States in Cuba as may shed light upon the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over, at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

SANITARIUM FOR PULMONARY DISEASES.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4190) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a permit to the American Invalid Society, of Boston, Mass., to occupy and use 160 acres of land, being part of the abandoned Fort Stanton Military Reservation, in New Mexico, for the purpose of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have the Senator from New Hampshire indulge me just a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none; and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not understand what became of the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLEN. I understood from what was said here yesterday that the resolution was to be taken up for consideration to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was referred by request of the Senator who introduced it.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New Hampshire himself asked that it be referred?

Mr. CHANDLER. The junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] yesterday said that the Committee on Foreign Relations desired that action should be deferred on any resolution of this kind for a short time, and the Senator gave notice that he would move to refer the resolution which I offered to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Being desirous of gratifying the Senator from Maine and acting so far as possible in accord with that great committee of this body, which has the most important interests now in charge, I myself moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And introduced another.

Mr. CHANDLER. I also offered another resolution, which is in condensed form the resolution of the House of Representatives which was adopted on the 14th of February. That resolution has gone over until to-morrow, so that the subject is within the control of the Senate. In due time I have no doubt the Senate will hear from the Senator from Nebraska upon this new resolution of mine.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will permit me just a moment, I will state that I have no desire to be heard any further than I have already been heard; but the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] was so urgent yesterday about the passage of his resolution, having criticised with some degree of spirit the junior Senator from Maine for a failure to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations, that I had no doubt his resolution would come up this morning for discussion, and we would be at liberty to vote on it. I myself was prepared to vote on it, and I was surprised when I was told that the Senator from New Hampshire had acquiesced in, if he had not himself requested, the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The point that struck me most is, What change has come over the condition of affairs since yesterday that has induced the enthusiasm of the Senator from New Hampshire to ooze out at his finger ends? That is, Is there any change in the condition of the Cuban question to-day from what it was yesterday; and if so, in what respect? If it were necessary and urgent that we should pass the resolution yesterday, do not that urgency and necessity exist now?

Mr. GALLINGER. I now ask that the bill in which I am interested be read.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 4190) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a permit to the American Invalid Society, of Boston, Mass., to occupy and use 160 acres of land, being part of the abandoned Fort Stanton Military Reservation, in New Mexico, for the purpose of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases; and it was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire simply to state that during the last Congress a bill was passed through the Senate granting to this charitable society the abandoned military reservation of Fort Marcy, at Santa Fe. That bill failed to get consideration in the House. There was some objection by the citizens of Santa Fe to the establishment of the proposed sanitarium in that city. I have asked in the bill about to be considered that the Fort Stanton Military Reservation, which is entirely abandoned and the buildings going to decay, shall be granted to this society, which is a purely charitable organization. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office have stated in letters which are in my possession, and which I desire to have printed in connection with this debate, that the Department thought 160 acres would be sufficient, and the Committee on Public Lands, in their discretion, have changed the bill so as to provide that it shall not be an absolute gift, but simply a permit to use 160 acres of the reservation. I think that will answer every purpose of the society, and I trust that the bill may pass without objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much land is there in the reservation?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a large area. There are 10,249 acres.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much can this institution use?

Mr. GALLINGER. They could use, I think, a larger tract than 160 acres, because I apprehend their policy will be to build cottages and allow the people whom they send there through the charitable funds contributed by the society to do something perhaps in the line of agriculture. I had wished that it might be at least 320 acres instead of 160, because the land is practically valueless, and the people at Fort Stanton want the enterprise to be established. But I have not felt like asking it in opposition to the expressed views of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the fort been entirely abandoned?

Mr. GALLINGER. Entirely so; and the buildings are rapidly going to decay, as appears by a letter from a citizen of Fort Stanton, which I shall have printed in connection with the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Secretary of War state that it has been abandoned?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir; all those facts appear of record.

Mr. COCKRELL. And turned over to the Interior Department?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir; it has been turned over to the Interior Department.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire what institution the sanitarium is to be in charge of?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state to the Senator from Louisiana that the title as well as the body of the bill explains that it is the American Invalid Aid Society, of Boston, Mass., a society that has in its membership such men as Rev. Edward Everett Hale, Dr. Charles R. Nichols, Solomon Schindler (who is at the head of the Hebrew charitable societies of Boston), Hezekiah Butterworth, and other well-known citizens of New England; Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, and other leading women of Boston are also greatly interested in the work. The society has already done a great deal of work and expended considerable money. They have sent hundreds of poor people to the Rocky Mountain region at the expense of the society, many of whom have been cured of consumption and other forms of pulmonary diseases. They propose to continue this beneficent work, but they would like such a degree of recognition on the part of the Government as to have permission to use a part of this old and abandoned military reservation, the buildings of which, as I said, are tumbling down. That is all they ask.

Mr. CAFFERY. Are the invalids to be treated free of charge?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir; absolutely so. The society has already spent a great many thousands of dollars in this charitable work.

Mr. CAFFERY. How long are they to continue in possession of the reservation?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a permit, and it can be revoked if it is not used.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. COCKRELL. One moment. This permission can be revoked at any time?

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a permit to the American Invalid Aid Society, of Boston, Mass., to occupy and use 160 acres of land, being part of the abandoned Fort Stanton Military Reservation, in New Mexico, for the purpose of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases."

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask permission to print in connection with the passage of the bill a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and a letter from J. N. Cox, a resident of Fort Stanton, N. Mex.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the order will be made.

The letters referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 9, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference of your committee on the 25th ultimo for views, of a copy of S. 462, "Granting to the American Invalid Aid Society, of Boston, Mass., the abandoned Fort Stanton Military Reservation, N. Mex., for the purpose of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases."

In response to the reference, I inclose herein a copy of the report on the bill by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under date of the 8th instant.

He has detailed the facts relating to the reservation, which embraces an area of 10,249 acres, and on which there were thirty-eight buildings when it was placed under the control of this Department.

He has also expressed the view that it is not presumed that it was intended to grant this entire tract of upward of 10,000 acres to the association named. He has accordingly recommended an amendment to the bill so that it shall grant 160 acres of the reservation, to which no valid claim has attached, together with the buildings thereon, to the association for the purpose specified, and has suggested the addition of a clause thereto for the protection of any possible valid claims that may have attached to any of the lands in the reservation.

As thus amended the Commissioner has no objection to the passage of the bill.

I concur in the report.

Very respectfully,

THOS. RYAN,
Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS, Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1898.

SIR: I am in receipt by your reference for early report in duplicate and return of paper, of Senate bill No. 462, "Granting to the American Invalid Aid Society, of Boston, Mass., the abandoned Fort Stanton Military Reservation, in New Mexico, for the purpose of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases."

In reply I have the honor to report that the Fort Stanton Military Reservation, situated in Lincoln County, N. Mex., was established by Executive order of May 12, 1859. It was placed under the control of the Interior Department December 30, 1895, with thirty-eight buildings, for disposal under the act of July 5, 1884 (23 Stat., 103).

The lands in this reservation have not been surveyed, but the estimated area thereof is 10,249 acres.

The buildings were appraised in 1896, with a view to their sale at public auction under the law, but action thereon was suspended, with departmental approval, in view of the fact that said buildings, constructed principally of stone and adobe, could not be sold to advantage, if at all, to be pulled down and removed from the reservation, and also, because legislation was then pending in Congress to grant the reservation and buildings to the said American Invalid Aid Society.

The legislation referred to was Senate bill No. 2503, with the identical title and intent as the bill under consideration. Said bill was submitted to this office for report, but before report was made thereon the same bill, amended so as to substitute "Fort Marcy" for "Fort Stanton," was submitted for report, and upon this amended bill a favorable report was made by this office May 4, 1896. It does not appear that said amended bill became a law.

The local officers at Roswell, N. Mex., were informed on December 22, 1897, under departmental instructions dated November 27, 1897, that, although the area of the reservation exceeds 5,000 acres, yet, on account of the date of its relinquishment, the lands therein were not subject to settlement under the act of August 23, 1894 (28 Stat., 491); that said lands had not yet been surveyed and, under existing law, were subject to disposal only under said act of July 5, 1884, which provides for the sale of such lands after survey and appraisement, and for the entry thereof under the mineral-land laws, and also for the entry thereof, under the homestead law, by persons who settled thereon prior to the establishment of the reservation, or prior to January 1, 1884, and have maintained continuous residence since the date of settlement.

No claims have been placed of record for lands in this reservation, but it is possible that valid claims may have attached to said lands under the homestead or mineral laws, and a clause should be inserted in the bill looking to the protection of any possible valid claims.

The bill under consideration proposes to grant this entire reservation of over 10,000 acres of land and the buildings thereon to an association for the establishment of a sanitarium. It is not to be presumed that it was the intention of the mover of the bill to seek to secure from the Government such a large amount of land for the purpose mentioned.

I therefore have the honor to recommend that the bill be so amended as to grant 160 acres of land in this reservation, to which no valid claim has attached, together with the buildings belonging to the Government situated thereon, to the said Invalid Aid Society for the purpose of the establishment and maintenance of a sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

With the amendment made as suggested, I have no objections to urge against the passage of the bill, which is herewith inclosed.

Very respectfully,

BINGER HERMANN, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

FORT STANTON, N. MEX., January 15, 1898.

MY DEAR SIR: It has been my intention for some time to write you in regard to Fort Stanton and try to impress you with the urgent necessity of aiding us into turning it into something of a public nature, thus not only benefiting our people, but saving the beautiful old fort from vandalism. This is still our post-office, but I seldom go there as I used to when it was our best market. But I went in this week to see Mr. Reed, the newly appointed custodian, and was thoroughly disgusted to see and hear Mr. Reed tell of the wanton destruction that had been going on since Lieutenant Wright left it eighteen months since, he being the last officer there. The back doors of all buildings were, says Mr. Reed, broken in and pillaged of all contents, loose and much wanton mischief.

You remember the beautiful trees around parade ground, hospital, etc. They are all going before another season unless they get immediate attention, all of which destruction would be a burning shame in view of the great boon it has been to this isolated section, and might be again if Congress would not pose any longer as the dog in the manger, but dispose of it to somebody that would save it ere it is too late. The damage already sustained would reach into thousands of dollars.

Now, Mr. FERGUSSON, as you have been with us so much in Lincoln County, I know you can grasp the situation at once. You know the people here are powerless to save it. You are in a position to do more to save this grand old landmark to Lincoln County than any other citizen in New Mexico. There is nothing you could do for Lincoln County that would be appreciated more by a grateful people than your earnest effort in behalf of Fort Stanton. It is the one thing we all agree on. It has been the great public benefactor for more than a quarter of a century of this people, and there is no good reason that it should not continue a public benefit, though under another management.

If Uncle Sam will turn this thing loose, it will be doing something for our people in less than a year. It is a grand central point for a college, which you know our people stand greatly in need of. There is no place in southern New Mexico better located for a sanitarium or a health resort. Four-fifths of our people want to make it our county seat. In short, we want it to go up instead of down, and we await your answer with eagerness. I will be ready to give you any further information any time.

Very respectfully, yours, etc.,

J. N. COX.

H. B. FERGUSSON, M. C.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported the following bill as a substitute for S. 462:

A bill (S. 4190) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a permit to the American Invalid Aid Society, of Boston, Mass., to occupy and use 160 acres of land, being part of the abandoned Fort Stanton Military Reservation, in New Mexico, for the purpose of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue a permit in writing to the American Invalid Aid Society, of Boston, Mass., to occupy and to use land to the extent of not more than 160 acres, and all improvements thereon, being part of the abandoned Fort Stanton Military Reservation, situated in the Territory of New Mexico, for the purpose of the establishment and maintenance thereon of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases: Provided, That said society shall, within two years from the granting of the permit, establish on said land a sanitarium for the purposes herein named; and so long as the said land shall be used by the said society for the purposes herein provided the permit shall continue in force, the Secretary of the Interior having authority only to revoke the permit upon sufficient evidence that the said lands are no longer used for the purposes herein designated.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to bring before the Senate a matter which I think should be considered in secret legislative session. I therefore make the motion that the galleries be cleared and the doors closed.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me a moment to put on its passage a short bill that will not lead to any discussion.

Mr. LODGE. I will yield if it involves no debate.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5489) extending the right of commutation to certain homestead settlers on lands in Oklahoma Territory, opened to settlement under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to ratify and confirm the agreement with the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the right of commutation is hereby extended to all bona fide homestead settlers on the lands in Oklahoma Territory, opened to settlement under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect," approved March 3, 1893, and the President's proclamation thereon, after fourteen months from the date of settlement, upon full payment for the lands at the price provided in said act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Massachusetts yields to me that I may move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

THE UNIVERSITY OF KANSAS.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me to call up a bill?

Mr. LODGE. I will yield to the Senator from Kansas if the bill leads to no debate, but I can not yield any further.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2677) for the relief of the University of Kansas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The preamble recites that on or about the 20th day of May, 1856, Deputy United States Marshal and Sheriff Jones, with a posse, acting directly on the findings of the United States grand jury, called by Judge Lecompte, of the United States court, sitting at Lecompton, entered the town of Lawrence and destroyed the Free State Hotel, owned by the New England Emigrant Aid Company; that some time thereafter the company presented a claim for damages in the amount of $20,000 to the United States Government, and before its dissolution transferred the claim to the University of Kansas.

The bill proposes to pay to the University of Kansas $20,000, in full settlement of the claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me to request the publication of a document.

Mr. LODGE. As it is only a request for the publication of a document, I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senate has already made an order for the publication of certain matters relating to postal savings banks, which appear in a document known as No. 39. I ask to have reprinted and bound with that document, as an appendix to Document No. 39, a document on the same subject, already printed by the Senate, known as Document No. 154, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session. I ask that it be bound as a part of the document already printed.

There being no objection, the order was reduced to writing, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That Senate Document No. 154, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, Postal Savings Banks in Foreign Countries, be reprinted and bound as an appendix to Senate Document No. 39, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, on the same subject, ordered printed by the Senate.

SESSION WITH CLOSED DOORS.

Mr. LODGE (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.). I move that the galleries be cleared and the doors closed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I second the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under Rule XXXV of the Senate, the Sergeant-at-Arms is directed to clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate proceeded to deliberate with closed doors. At 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 4, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 1, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, this is Private Calendar day, and we shall insist on having our day. There is no reason why this bill should intervene and take the day away from us.

The SPEAKER. The House will have to determine that.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that there has been no purpose on the part of the Naval Committee to antagonize any other committee of the House. I have consulted, as far as I was able this morning, members of the House, and the sentiment on both sides, in view of the fact that so many days have been already exhausted in consideration of this bill and of the very important character of it, seems to be that if the naval bill can be brought up, there will be no unusual obstruction to the consideration and action of the House upon it. Of course, it goes without saying that this great appropriation bill ought not to be further delayed. It has yet to pass the other House of Congress, which has not yet had an opportunity to consider it. Therefore gentlemen will understand the importance of having it passed through this body as speedily as possible, in order that the Senate may pass upon it and send it to the President.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that next Tuesday be set apart for private-bill day instead of to-day.

Mr. BRUMM. That was a proposition I was about to make myself; that would be agreeable.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that next Tuesday be set apart by special order for the consideration of private claims.

Mr. DOCKERY. The evening session, too.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine, the chairman of the committee, how long it will take to finish up the naval bill?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. In my judgment, and from what I have been able to gather from opinions of the members of the House—it may be fallacious—I do not think it ought to take over an hour and a half.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why not proceed with the bill, and then, after that is disposed of, take up the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that an arrangement about private bills can be made at any time.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the Private Calendar be postponed until next Tuesday; that we have Tuesday instead of to-day.

Mr. TAWNEY. That will include Friday evening with it?

Mr. BRUMM. Of course; the same arrangement that has been made heretofore.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It might possibly suit the members of the committee if we were to agree here that we would consider the remaining portions of this bill in a strictly legitimate manner, get through it as rapidly as possible, and then give the Committee on Claims the remainder of the day and to-morrow.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, of course there can be no understanding of that kind——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects——

Mr. BAILEY. No, Mr. Speaker; the Chair must not say the gentleman from Texas objects.

The SPEAKER. If there is no understanding of that kind, it is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. BAILEY. There can be none.

The SPEAKER. That makes a still more insurmountable objection.

Mr. BAILEY. The Chair is not entitled to say that the gentleman from Texas objects, when the gentleman from Texas only suggests that there can be no understanding such as the gentleman from Maine suggests. I say to the gentleman from Maine that we recognize the necessity of disposing of this particular bill, and we have no disposition to delay it or obstruct it. We do not agree that what we have done heretofore was in the nature of obstruction to the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I only spoke of the fact that it had been delayed. I cast no imputations upon anybody.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask unanimous consent to substitute Tuesday for to-day under the rules. That question has not been put to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put it.

Mr. GIBSON. Including the night session?

Mr. BRUMM. Of course.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] asks unanimous consent that Tuesday next be substituted for to-day in all respects——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Will that carry over the night session?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. BROMWELL. I should like to inquire whether this arrangement would prevent the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in case they should have a report to make to this House, from making it on next Tuesday?

The SPEAKER. It certainly would.

Mr. BROMWELL. Then I shall object.

Mr. BRUMM. In case of anything so important as that, of course we could come to some understanding that the private business should go over. No one would undertake to interfere with a matter of that kind. Private business could, of course, go over.

Mr. STEELE. Whether we should proceed to private business or not would, of course, be subject to the question of consideration.

Mr. BRUMM. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest that the gentleman from Pennsylvania submit his request, with the condition that the business under this order shall not interfere with any report that the Committee on Foreign Affairs may desire to make.

Mr. BRUMM. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. In that case there can be no objection to this proposition.

Mr. BROMWELL. With that understanding, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that next Tuesday be substituted for to-day with reference to the business of the evening session as well as the day session, but that this arrangement shall not interfere with any report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Is there objection? [A pause.] The Chair hears none.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The question being put on the motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, it was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The Clerk, resuming the reading, read the following:

Fuel, Marine Corps: For heating barracks and quarters, for ranges and stoves for cooking, fuel for enlisted men, for mess to officers, maintaining electric lights, and for hot-air closets, $19,500.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 13, page 42, insert the following:
"For establishment of coaling station and the construction of docks at Fort Morgan, in Mobile Harbor, $25,000."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is not germane to this paragraph. It has no relation to the Marine Corps.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order for a moment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Very well. If the gentleman wishes, I will reserve the point for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, there is no coaling station on the South Atlantic or Gulf coast south of Newport News. In the present situation we may find on any day that the coal barges carrying coal from Newport News south for our Navy are cut off by the war vessels of the enemy. It is of the utmost importance that we should have coaling stations in these harbors, where the American fleets may go in times of emergency and receive their coal. It is true that there is talk of establishing a coaling station at the Dry Tortugas; but that is unprotected. It may take years before suitable guns can be planted there and suitable fortifications erected so as to protect it as a coaling station in time of war.

At Mobile Harbor there are already Government fortifications. The Government has established two forts there. One, Fort Morgan, is completed; and at the entrance of the bay the Government is now completing the erection of another fort, Fort Gaines. Each of these forts has two disappearing guns. The entrance of the harbor is only 3 miles across; and those guns absolutely protect the harbor to-day. It does not require any further fortification; there is not necessary any additional expenditure of money in that direction.

Mobile Bay is a large bay, completely landlocked, except the entrance to the harbor, 3 miles broad. With these guns commanding this entrance, no hostile fleet could possibly enter the harbor or interfere with the coaling station. The land already belongs to the Government; no purchase of new land is required. All that is necessary is that the Government should put up a suitable number of docks in order that coal may be placed there for the supply of vessels that may come to receive it.

On yesterday I called on the Secretary of the Navy, together with other members of this House from the South, requesting that he should establish a coaling station at this point or at some other convenient Southern seaport. He stated that it was not within his power to do so under the law, and that it would require the action of Congress to authorize the establishment of a coaling station at any one of these ports.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I recognize fully that the amendment is not germane to the particular point in the bill where it is offered. But I did not have the opportunity to offer it at a point in the bill where it would have been germane. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, therefore, I hope—the gentleman from Maine—will not insist on the point of order at this time. A very small appropriation will establish a good coaling station there, and one that is absolutely necessary. Mobile is about a middle point on the line of the Gulf coast, accessible to all of the naval vessels which may be cruising in the Gulf of Mexico, and it is in all respects a desirable location for this establishment.

The Government can also, and this is worthy of consideration, get its coal supplies at less than $2 a ton—probably at $1.80 a ton—at that point, and to-day. It is paying at the rate of $3 a ton at Key West; quite an important difference. The contracts that are being let by the Navy Department to-day are being let at duplicate points. It was but a few days ago that the Navy Department let a contract for 10,000 tons of coal to be delivered, at the option of the Government, at either Newport News or Key West. These two ports are 1,000 or 1,500 miles apart.

The committee can readily see, therefore, that any contractor in submitting bids for this work would have to be guided by the possibility of being compelled to deliver all the coal at the farthest port and the one that is most difficult for him to reach. No contractor would bid for one of these ports—the nearer one to him—when he expected, possibly, that the Government might demand of him to deliver the coal at another port far distant; and he would not make such a bid unless he put into such a contract an amount which would protect him from loss or give him a profit for delivering the coal at the most distant point.

I hope, therefore, in view of the necessity of the occasion, that the gentleman from Maine will not insist on the point of order, but let the House determine this question for itself.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, before making the point of order I desire to state that the proposition to establish a coaling station at another point on this coast was submitted, as was stated in the papers last night, by a number of gentlemen, who urged several points at different places along the coast, one being Tybee Island, another Mobile, and, I think, the third was proposed at Pensacola.

Now, I will state, for the information of the committee, that we have a coaling station at Port Royal, on the Atlantic coast, established many years ago, and we have one at Key West, for which the committee in this bill—in that portion which has already passed the House—made liberal provision. We have also adopted the following as a portion of the bill bearing on this question:

Naval station, Key West, Fla.: The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consolidate the following sums heretofore appropriated, namely: Act of July 26, 1894, for coal shed, $10,000; act of March 2, 1895, for coaling pier, $40,000; and act of June 6, 1896, for coal shed (additional), $4,000, and to expend the aggregate, $54,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the construction of a coal shed inside the iron pier at the United States naval station, Key West, Fla.

Since that time there has also been passed by the House a special appropriation of $100,000 to provide further coaling facilities at that point.

I must therefore make the point of order on this amendment that it is not authorized by existing law. I do not think it is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Maine is sustained; and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read the heading of the paragraph, "Increase of Navy."

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an inquiry concerning this paragraph about to be read, which contains a number of distinct and separate items. I was going to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs if he would consent to treat it as a number of paragraphs embracing each of these different items, and not as a distinct and separate paragraph of the bill? This will permit amendments at the end of every paragraph relating to each separate subject. For instance, the first subject-matter is that relating to the construction of battle ships.

Now, I desire to ask if an amendment will lie to any part of the paragraph as we proceed?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. After the reading of the entire paragraph, of course amendments can be offered to any portion of it. That is the rule and custom of the committee.

Mr. BROMWELL. But why not treat it as separate paragraphs?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It is not necessary. Each portion of the paragraph is subject to amendment.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to state to the gentleman from Ohio that the custom is to read the entire paragraph, and then amendments are in order to any part of it.

Mr. STEELE. I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract three seagoing coast-line battle ships designed to carry the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance upon a displacement of about 11,000 tons, to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of their class, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $3,000,000 each, one of said battle ships to be named the Maine; and six torpedo-boat destroyers of about 350 tons displacement, and six torpedo boats of about 150 tons displacement, to have the highest practicable speed, and to cost in all, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $2,340,000; and one gunboat to take the place of the U. S. S. Michigan, to cost, exclusive of armament, not more than $260,000, said gunboat to be constructed on the Great Lakes or their connecting waters: Provided, That said construction of said gunboat shall conform to all existing treaties and conventions. The contracts for the construction of each of said vessels shall be awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest best responsible bidder, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery; and in the construction of all said vessels all of the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," and amendments subsequently made thereto as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, except as to premiums, which are not to be offered, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture; and, subject to the provisions hereinafter made, one and not more than one of the aforesaid seagoing battle ships shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean, or in the waters connecting therewith: Provided, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States from the biddings for such contracts when the same are opened and examined by him, said vessel can not be constructed on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean at a cost not exceeding 4 per cent above the lowest accepted bid for the other battle ships provided for in this act, he shall authorize the construction of said vessel elsewhere in the United States, subject to the limitations as to cost hereinbefore provided: Provided further, That the contracts for the construction of the vessels herein provided for shall be made within sixty days from the passage of this act.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope we may have order, so that very important amendment can be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Will all gentlemen cease conversation and be seated?

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to reserve the point of order before he offers that amendment? I rose to do so before the Clerk had completed the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. Of course the gentleman has a right to make the point of order if he desires.

Mr. KING. I desire to make it before the consideration of the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. After the reading of the amendment the gentleman can reserve the point of order, if he desires.

Mr. DOCKERY. He desires to reserve a point of order to the section.

Mr. KING. I desire to reserve a point of order to the section itself, not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. If the point of order is to be made, it seems to me it ought to be disposed of before the section is amended.

Mr. KING. That is what I supposed, and that is the reason I asked the gentleman from Illinois if he would withdraw his amendment and permit me to submit a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. My amendment has not yet been read. I suppose the gentleman's point of order would be in time and could be submitted as a matter of right.

Mr. KING. I make the point of order now, against this paragraph just read, that it is new legislation.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What is the point of order?

Mr. KING. That it is new legislation. It is not in continuation of any existing contract.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask the Chair to make a ruling on that without any discussion.

Mr. KING. I desire to make one observation.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That has been decided over and over again.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman desires to discuss the point of order.

Mr. KING. Very briefly, Mr. Chairman. I concede that there are precedents upon this question which the distinguished gentleman from Maine can appeal to in support of his contention, but if the Chair preserves any harmony in his rulings he must sustain the point of order which is suggested to this paragraph. When the question was considered a few days ago with reference to the construction of dry docks, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] suggested a point of order, contending, as I remember, that the appropriation therein authorized was not for the purpose of continuing a dry dock which had been authorized by previous legislation. The Chair held that the point of order was well taken. Now, it seems to me that for the same reason, and applying the principle which was then invoked by the gentleman from Illinois——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to correct the gentleman from Utah. The Chair overruled the point of order.

Mr. KING. I understood that the dry dock which was to be constructed at Galveston was ruled out.

The CHAIRMAN. That was not the proposition with respect to Galveston.

Mr. KING. I understood the point of order was raised against the appropriation for the construction of a dry dock at Galveston.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no such provision in the bill.

Mr. KING. And also at Algiers.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no provision in the bill for an appropriation for the construction of a dry dock at Galveston.

Mr. KING. There was one also provided for at Algiers, and the same point of order was raised by the gentleman from Illinois against that.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. KING. With pleasure.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is that the rulings have been uniform in refusing to entertain this point of order. They have been absolutely uniform on the item for vessels for the Navy.

Mr. KING. I said, as I stated at the outset, that there were precedents, perhaps, without number, in support of the position which the gentleman from Maine now assumes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. All the precedents are that way.

Mr. KING. But by analogy and by the application of the rule as it has been construed repeatedly upon the floor of the House the Chair ought to sustain this point of order. It is new legislation. It is not an appropriation which has been heretofore authorized. It is not in continuation of any appropriation which has been authorized by past legislation, and therefore, under the rules of this House, it seems to me it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The Chair is perfectly familiar with this question, and I have no argument to make.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply desires to say, in order that he may state the entire proposition correctly, that the Chair overruled the point of order in reference to the dry dock at Algiers, upon the express ground that that was provided for by the legislation of 1893 and 1894, and the Chair sustained the point of order upon the proposition in reference to Galveston, not because it appropriated for the construction of a dry dock there, but because it simply provided for a naval board, to examine into and determine the desirability of constructing a dry dock there.

Without referring at this time to the various decisions upon the point which the gentleman from Utah now raises against this provision, the Chair, following strictly in the line of prior decisions upon the same point, overrules the point of order.

The amendment of Mr. CANNON was read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 9 to 25, inclusive, on page 53, all of page 54, and all of lines 1 to 7, inclusive, on page 55, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract 1 seagoing coast-line battle ship designed to carry the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance upon a displacement of about 11,000 tons, to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of its class, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $3,000,000, said battle ship to be named the Maine; and 12 torpedo-boat destroyers of about 350 tons displacement, and 12 torpedo boats of about 150 tons displacement, to have the highest practicable speed, and to cost in all, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $4,680,000; and 1 gunboat to take the place of the U. S. S. Michigan, to cost, exclusive of armament, not more than $200,000, said gunboat to be constructed on the Great Lakes or their connecting waters: Provided, That said construction of said gunboat shall conform to all existing treaties and conventions. The contracts for the construction of each of said vessels shall be awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest best responsible bidder, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery; and in the construction of all said vessels all of the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled 'An act to increase the naval establishment,' and amendments subsequently made thereto as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, except as to premiums, which are not to be offered, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture; and, subject to the provisions hereinafter made: Provided, That the contracts for the construction of the vessels herein provided for shall be made within sixty days from the passage of this act."

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois if he will not consent to have separate votes on his amendment, so that a separate vote may be had on that portion of it which relates to battle ships and another separate vote on that portion which relates to torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers?

Mr. CANNON. The amendment as a whole is an amendment to this whole clause. I would be glad to have a vote upon the amendment pure and simple to test the sense of the House. I have no desire in the slightest to obstruct this bill. I only want an expression of the committee upon the proposition to strike out the two battle ships and double the torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers authorized by the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman state how it would affect the total amount of the appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. I will explain in a moment.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Some of us would be most glad to support one portion of the amendment, but we might have views different from the gentleman from Illinois in regard to the other portion.

Mr. CANNON. Then, if my amendment is voted down, the paragraph will be subject to amendment.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. That is true; but we wanted to see if we could not make some arrangement before that.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask for order.

Mr. Chairman, it is with great diffidence that I offer this amendment; and in offering it I want to testify to the highest respect for the committee that reports this bill, and nothing but a belief that is earnest and fixed, that it is my duty as a member of the committee to offer this amendment, compels me to do it. I think, if I can have the real attention of the committee for five minutes, I can state just what there is in the amendment, and then, so far as I am concerned, I am ready for a vote. The amendment, in a word, strikes out, if it is adopted, two battle ships and makes one instead of three. The amendment increases the number of torpedo-boat destroyers six, doubling them. The amendment doubles the number of torpedo boats, making twelve instead of six. The amendment increases the appropriation for torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers by $2,300,000, which will pay in full for them. Now, that is all there is in the amendment, although it is a pretty lengthy one and gentlemen might suppose it contained more. It strikes out and inserts, if adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman right there allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. How long does it take to construct a battle ship?

Mr. CANNON. Working stress, three years.

Mr. DOCKERY. Three years!

Mr. CANNON. Three years ago the Kentucky and Kearsarge were authorized, and have just been launched.

Mr. DOCKERY. How long will it require to construct torpedo boats?

Mr. CANNON. These torpedo boats, working stress, and utilizing the shipyards of the country, upon the lakes and elsewhere, can be completed, as I am informed by the Navy Department, working stress, from three to eight months.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. CANNON. If I can answer the gentleman, I will.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. How long has it been since the last authorization for the construction of torpedo boats?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend, frankly, he is more familiar with that than I. I do not know.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Has it been longer than six months?

Mr. CANNON. I presume it has.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How does this amendment of yours affect the total appropriation in the bill?

Mr. CANNON. I will explain that. The effect of this amendment, and it is just why I offered it, is this: This bill authorizes, in round numbers, the construction of works in connection with the Navy, $20,000,000, that can not materialize for three years. The three battle ships that are authorized will cost over $5,000,000 apiece. They can not be placed in commission by any means whatever short of three years from the time they are contracted for. So that if this amendment is adopted, instead of authorizing three battle ships that will cost $15,000,000, it authorizes one that will cost $5,000,000; and if it is adopted, instead of authorizing six torpedo-boat destroyers and six torpedo boats that will cost $2,300,000, it doubles the number of torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers and increases the appropriation $2,300,000, while it decreases the expense carried by the bill by $10,000,000 represented by the two battle ships.

Mr. RIDGELY. What is the cost of one of these torpedo boats of the first class, and torpedo-boat destroyers?

Mr. CANNON. Six torpedo-boat destroyers and six torpedo boats cost $2,300,000. Just how the expense is divided I do not know. Twelve would cost twice that much.

Mr. CARMACK. That is the total cost?

Mr. CANNON. The total cost.

Mr. BROMWELL. I want to inquire of the gentleman if he knows whether all——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, striking out "one" and inserting "two," so as to make it two battle ships.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended.

Mr. STEELE. I want to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have an opportunity to explain his amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I only want ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may be allowed to continue his remarks for ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STEELE. I have an amendment to the amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. I will.

Mr. BROMWELL. I wish to ask if it is not true that all the great naval powers of the world, in their budgets for the present and coming year, have not included the construction of an additional number of battle ships; whether the naval experts throughout the world do not look upon the battle ship as being one of the essential forms of naval defense?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is the judgment of the civilized world to-day.

Mr. CANNON. My friend from Maine is much more competent to answer that question than I am, and I have no doubt the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has more knowledge touching the budgets of foreign nations and whether they cover ships than I have. I do not set up for an expert touching naval warfare or naval construction. Now, having said that, I ask for only five minutes' attention of the committee to state the reasons, in the absence of expert knowledge, which address themselves to my mind and compel me, following my judgment as a Representative, to offer this amendment.

First. Last December, when there was some prospect of a difficulty with Spain—or, if you choose, you may call it no prospect of a difficulty, just as you please—the Secretary of the Navy, in his report, after full discussion, recommended one battle ship to care for the future, three or four years away. This bill recommends three.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. One is to replace the one we lost.

Mr. CANNON. I understand; the gentleman can answer when he comes to reply. I want to be very brief. Now, then, what has happened since that time to authorize the building of three? Why, the prospect of war with Spain. You had a prospect of war in December. If we have a war with Spain, is there any gentleman within the sound of my voice that is not satisfied to a moral certainty that long before the three years have rolled around and these battle ships can be placed in commission the war would be over? I take it, then, that this is a provision to care for the Navy without regard to the war with Spain, if we are to have one.

Last December the Secretary of the Navy said, Build one. What has happened to make a change in the ordinary policy for the future wants of the Navy as disassociated with Spain? Nothing on earth except the patriotic feeling of 70,000,000 people which is to be utilized to construct battle ships that can not be used in the coming war. To do what? To get ready for another war. I believe as a business man, I believe there is no man in this House as a business man, if he could control it in his business affairs, and his business embraced the national affairs, but what, if we are to have a war with Spain, would prefer, before he had bound this Government to put $15,000,000 in three battle ships, that a test as to the value of the battle ships should be made between this and the expiration of the close of the war before he would make a contract to bind the Government $15,000,000 or more.

I honestly believe, if we do have a war, long before the battle ships can become completed they would either be shown to be obsolete or their method of construction would be so changed that the Government, with a strong hand, would repudiate the contract and pay damages and abandon them.

Now, then, that is all there is of it. I say, build twice as many torpedo-boat destroyers, twice as many torpedo boats—if necessary, more. They can be built, working stress in the shipyards of the country, in from three to eight months, as I am informed at the Navy Department.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. They can be completed before the Kearsarge and Kentucky can be completed.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; before the Kearsarge and Kentucky can be finished. That is all there is of it. There is no man on the floor of this House, or in the United States, that would vote more cheerfully than I would any amount of money that can be utilized in preparation for the trouble that is just upon us. Gentlemen may say that it would have been better if three years ago we had authorized these battle ships, and they were ready to-day. They were not authorized.

Mr. SPALDING. How long will it take to finish the Kearsarge and Kentucky?

Mr. CANNON. Eight months, and they probably will not be finished for twelve months. That is all there is of it, and for these reasons I offer the amendment, and I appeal to this House that we take the counsel of our judgment in the premises. [Applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY If I understand the position of the gentleman from Illinois, it is this: In view of the grave doubt as to the fighting qualities of battle ships, and the fact that they can not be constructed in less than three years, he thinks we had better proceed slowly in this line of construction and build up the Navy in pursuance of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me so, and to build only one battle ship. Now, I want to say just a word before I sit down in respect to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I wish to say to my friend from Maine that there is no man in this House that has a higher appreciation of his ability touching the matters embraced in this bill, and touching naval affairs generally, than myself. It is a matter of regret to me that my sense of duty compels me, according to my best lights, to disagree with the gentleman. I have no pride in that disagreement. It is, instead, a matter of sorrow. All I ask is that in cool blood, without passion, keeping our heads and with cool judgment, we act for all the people as any wise man would act if he were called upon to act for himself under similar conditions.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. CANNON. If I have time.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask consent that the gentleman have further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has not expired.

Mr. CANNON. Then certainly I will answer.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask the gentleman whether he does not consider that it would have been the part of wisdom, three, four, or five years ago, instead of being parsimonious in our appropriations at that time, to have been more liberal and to have built battle ships and cruisers, so that we would not be compelled at this time to go abroad in order to get them? [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I have already answered that question. Whether it would or would not, we did not authorize these exact three battle ships three, four, or five years ago.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER rose.

Mr. CANNON. Let me answer the question. In a quarter of a century—from 1873 down to this time——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I do not desire further time, except to answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from Illinois for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I have heard that same question asked under somewhat different conditions for a quarter of a century. During our civil war, and for years afterwards, there was a revolution in naval construction; and we refrained from entering upon construction during that period of evolution. I think it was wise that we did refrain; and I think it was wise that along about 1883 or 1884, under the Secretaryship of Mr. Chandler, we commenced to build a new Navy.

Take the Texas, which I believe was the first one of our battle ships constructed. Does not my friend thank God that there were not any more battle ships like the Texas built? Yet at the time it was built it was probably the best of its type.

A MEMBER. It was built on English plans.

Mr. CANNON. It was built on English plans, but it was probably the best of its type. Take the Maine, which sank a few weeks ago. Does not the gentleman know that these ships whose construction is now being authorized are no more like the Maine than I am like a seraph? [Laughter.] That is all I want to say.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. What objection has the gentleman to permitting the provision for three battle ships to remain in the bill as it now stands, and at the same time increasing the torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers to the number that the gentleman would deem desirable? [Applause.]

Many MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. BRUMM. I have already such an amendment prepared, which I desire to offer as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio; and I want order while I do so, for it is a very important question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole will be in order. Business will be suspended until it is in order.

Mr. CANNON (resuming, after a pause). Mr. Chairman, in answer to that question I will say this: Most gentlemen here believe that in seven days from this time we shall be at war with one of the nations of the earth.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hope the gentleman will confine himself to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. CANNON. I am in the habit of confining myself to the paragraph. Nothing short of divine charity and patience could keep a man in good temper with the galleries full and noisy, with much confusion on the floor, and the gentleman from Maine in charge of the bill interjecting his exclamations. [Laughter and applause.] I want to answer one question at a time. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON] has asked me a most important question. I want to do him the courtesy of answering it, and I want this committee to extend me the courtesy of good order while I attempt to answer.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. Most gentlemen here believe that within a week's time we shall be at war with one of the powers of the earth. Now, what does that mean? It already has meant $50,000,000 of emergency appropriation. It means additional taxation that will bring in $100,000,000 a year. It means the authorization—and I measure my words, laying my hand on the shoulder of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DINGLEY]—that we are to borrow at least $500,000,000. It means the putting of these burdens upon the country. Let the amount be a thousand millions, if necessary; increase the taxation to whatever extent may be needful for the well-being of the country; but let us not spend a single dollar, or authorize a single dollar of expenditure, unless to equip ourselves for the fight that seems to be just in front of us. [Applause.] And the reason I do not want to join in authorizing three battle ships is that long before they can be launched, let alone completed, the war will be over and I fear the battle ships will be obsolete. That is my reason. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say briefly, in reply to some suggestions of the gentleman from Illinois, that the question as to whether these battle ships can be completed in season to participate in certain anticipated circumstances or emergencies which now threaten is not the question that is before the committee at the present time. We have a number of battle ships, fortunately, ready for service. When these battle ships were authorized, there was no question raised as to their availability in three months, or two months, or any other specified time. No exigencies existed at the time. They were not expected to be available until after their complete construction, allowing the ordinary time for that work. But they were begun because the common sense and patriotism of the American people and Congress taught them that the time might come—not that it was almost here, but that it might come—when we would need them seriously; and Congress, responding to that conviction of duty, made provision from time to time for their construction.

But, sir, there is not a man within the sound of my voice on this floor who does not know that but for that provision, and for the strength afforded by these battle ships to-day, we would be in no position to raise our voice or to maintain the attitude of dignity which this nation owes to itself even against the feeble war power of Spain. [Applause.]

We do not expect, and ought not to expect, that the world is to come to an end in a week or a month or in a few days. We have had demonstrated to us beyond all question, we have had it burned into our very souls for the last few months, that the Congress of the United States has been absolutely derelict in its duty in not strengthening our naval power far beyond its present condition. [Applause.]

And, Mr. Chairman, your Committee on Naval Affairs, responding not only to the universal demand of the people of this country, but to the dictates of wise prudence, common sense, and a broad public policy that teaches an intelligent people that they should not only recognize what is transpiring in the world to-day, but should look forward with careful regard to the future; in view of the fact that it took years to build these ships—although the gentleman has exaggerated that point, as we can easily establish—but in view of the fact that we can not provide ships suitable to the necessities of the present day, as we were able to improvise them in 1861, we felt resting upon us a responsibility to perform the duty which we have endeavored to discharge in the preparation of this feature of the naval appropriation bill by providing at the very earliest practicable moment to add at least the war vessels recommended to the naval power of the Government. And, Mr. Chairman, we have no apologies to make to the House for the recommendation of the construction of these three battle ships and twelve torpedo vessels, but rely upon what we believe to be the sound sense and patriotic sentiment of this House and the country. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I must decline to be interrupted.

Mr. GAINES. Then the gentleman declines to answer a question bearing upon this subject?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It has been said, Mr. Chairman, that we can not undertake to equal foreign nations in their armaments for naval supremacy. But against whom are we to arm ourselves? Against what aggression? Gentlemen say that they are ready to admit that we shall be liberal in our application of our resources to meet any foreign complications and prepare ourselves to resist any foreign aggression. But how are we to do it unless we provide ourselves with the means? What steps are we to pursue to attain that end, when gentlemen are willing only to snap their fingers at the lessons taught by the civilized world as to the necessity for offensive and defensive armament?

At this very hour there are forty-two great battle ships being constructed by the nations of the world. Are we to have no part in this matter? Is the United States to lie dormant, and silent, and let itself be outstripped by all the foreign powers of the earth, no matter how insignificant? England, France, Germany, and the great nations of the earth to-day are making these preparations far in excess of those that we propose.

But gentlemen tell us that they will rely solely and entirely upon one branch of our naval force; and what is that branch? They would depend, Mr. Chairman, upon torpedo boats, a class of vessels many of which can not cross the ocean without a convoy, that can not blockade or capture the ports of any great power of the world—simply an auxiliary class of naval vessels, that, in the consensus of the judgment of the great naval experts of the world, and whose judgment in matters of naval construction and defense is entitled to the highest consideration, declare incapable of furnishing the war power of any nation, or of becoming more than an auxiliary portion of a great navy.

The history of the naval affairs of the world shows that the great naval battles were fought and victories were gained by the heavy fighting line. The achievements of Nelson, of Hull, of Farragut, and the other great commanders—the whole history of naval warfare, in fact—illustrates the fact that while all kinds of vessels have been utilized for naval purposes, the great battles in which the sea power of nations has been established have been won by the great ships of the line of battle. Now, we ask this House to authorize the construction of three of these great battle ships for the use of the United States, and we believe that the House will enthusiastically consent to that request.

I ask a vote.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have said about all I desired to say on this question.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will accept the extension of time long enough to hear the question of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the gentleman from California, a member of the committee, has been recognized.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] asked the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] if it was true that the great naval nations of the world were strengthening themselves in the line of the construction of great battle ships. The gentleman from Illinois adroitly refrained from answering that question. I desire to say a few words on that subject.

The great men of the world, who are to-day working out the problems of naval warfare throughout the world, have agreed that the battle ship is the strong right arm of power on the seas. There never was a time since the days when naval warfare began when the nations of the world were spending as much money as they are to-day in the preparation of naval armament; and there never was a day when men who are competent to express an opinion on the subject have been more emphatic in their approval of the battle ship. There was never a time when the battle ship was more popular as a means of offensive and defensive warfare than the present time.

The British budget for the present year involves an expenditure of $127,750,000. The naval budget of Russia involves an expenditure of $83,333,400. Germany will spend $95,000,000, and 60 per cent of that money will be spent for battle ships. The Emperor of Germany presented his budget, and the other day it passed the Reichstag without a division. Let me show you what is involved in that plan of future military operations on the sea. Germany has now 12 battle ships, 8 armored coast-defense vessels, 13 armored gunboats, 10 large cruisers, and 23 small cruisers. Now, here is her ideal fleet, which she proposes to build: Nineteen battle ships, an increase of 7 in number of battle ships; no more coast-defense vessels; no more armored gunboats; no more large cruisers. She has 1 too many now, but she is going to build 3 small cruisers, and 60 per cent of this great increase is to be put into battle ships.

Now, how is it with England? England, with her immense budget, has now in course of construction 9 of the largest battle ships that were ever built. We are building nothing but eleven and twelve thousand ton vessels. She builds nothing less than 15,000 tons now. She has 3 nearly completed, she has 3 in an advanced stage of completion, and she has 3 that she commenced this year. Since her budget has passed she is going to lay down 3 more. And let me tell you this: She would have advanced much more rapidly except for the fact that the armor-plate establishments in England can not furnish armor plate enough so that she could complete this type of vessels fast enough to meet what she believes are the urgent demands of the times.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why do we not build larger battle ships?

Mr. HILBORN. There are two reasons why we do not build larger battle ships, but the main reason is that our harbors are not as deep and spacious as the harbors of Europe.

Mr. DAYTON. And another reason is the limit of price.

Mr. HILBORN. And another reason is that we have limited, clear down to the very last degree, the amount that we shall expend in building these ships. There is one other significant fact that I want to mention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes. He is a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILBORN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] rather congratulates this House that in our past economy we have made no mistakes. It is true that our yards have been closed, that our skilled mechanics have been walking the streets, but it is true also that there came a time when, with $50,000,000 we scoured over the whole civilized world to buy these ships that we could have built at home, and we could not buy one. We may go abroad and buy every dollar of gold there is in the world, but you can not buy and can not get for love or money a single good fighting ship in the world.

Mr. LOW. They are very valuable property at this time.

Mr. HILBORN. They are very valuable property, and it pays to build them. You can buy ships supposed to be fighting ships, but such ships as we build are the best in the world. Every foreign critic admits, when we launch a vessel, that it is the most perfect fighting machine that was ever launched in the world; and yet the parsimony of this House will not permit us to build these vessels at home, but allows us to go abroad and beg and borrow their second-hand old articles. Is that economy? [Applause.]

Mr. FOOTE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HILBORN. Yes.

Mr. FOOTE. Does not the gentleman think he is now condemning the action of his own committee in the last two years?

Mr. HILBORN. I think that the Naval Committee in the past, as it has in this instance, has reported all that the House would stand. We have reported here three battle ships, and we come here and are met with a storm of opposition, and the Naval Committee has to study the temper of the House in preparing bills of this kind.

Mr. FOOTE. Does not the gentleman remember a year ago, when an amendment was brought in for six battle ships, that it was very strenuously opposed by the Naval Committee?

Mr. HILBORN. No; I do not think it was.

Mr. FOOTE. The House may remember it.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from California completed his remarks?

Mr. HILBORN. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the latter part of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and I am equally as heartily and strenuously opposed to the former part.

Mr. Chairman, it has been said upon the floor of this House that the value of the battle ship has never been proved in any actual naval engagement. This, Mr. Chairman, is untrue. The only gauge of the value of battle ships we have had was in the war between China and Japan. The contest at the Yalu River was between battle ships and cruisers, and the Japanese, owning cruisers commanded by Japanese officers, overpowered the Chinese, who were fighting a battle ship commanded by American and German officers. But the Chinese battle ship, although struck hundreds of times by shell and solid shot, withdrew from the fight without capture.

The value of battle ships was so well demonstrated in this engagement that to-day the Emperor of Japan has a battle ship in process of construction in nearly every first-class shipyard in Europe and America. They have two already nearly completed in our own shipyards, and two years have not elapsed since they were ordered. The United States Government has in vain appealed to the Japanese Government to sell these ships. The Japanese Government has in process of construction 6 battle ships in the navy-yards of England, 2 in France, and several in Germany. Now, the Japanese is an economic Government, as economic in its way as the American nation, and if it did not know the value of battle ships by practical demonstration it would not now be pouring out its money like water into foreign countries for the construction of these ships.

But more than this, Mr. Chairman, the Japanese were not the only ones who were taught a lesson by the result of the battle of the Yalu. England has heeded it; and my friend from California [Mr. HILBORN] has accurately told you of the provisions she is making in view of the lesson taught at the Yalu. France has heeded it; and France is by no means behind England in the construction of battle ships. But above all, that great ally of this Government in years past, the Emperor of Russia, has heeded the lesson, and he to-day is using every effort to equal if not surpass the efforts of England and France in the construction of these ships.

I say what I know when I say that the greatest of American shipbuilders, Charles Cramp, has gone to Russia at the solicitation of the CZAR. He is now in St. Petersburg, conferring with the Emperor of Russia, who is evidently intent upon securing all the battle ships that Cramp can turn out for the next few years, and I am told that he is trying to induce that American constructor to put down a plant at St. Petersburg.

Mr. BALL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Certainly.

Mr. BALL. Commodore Melville, Chief Engineer of the United States Navy, I understand stated that—

> The battle of the Yalu—so called—to my mind proves nothing. There was no battle; there was but a slaughter of Chinamen. We must wait for a battle of the modern giants, who can and do fight, to show the value of our modern fighting machines.
> As to our Navy at present, in personnel and material, I am proud to say that, man for man, ship for ship, tar for tar, and gun for gun, America has not her superior in the world.

The gentleman is aware of that?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The Chief Engineer of the Navy is the chief of the engineer department of the Navy and not of the fighting force. Engineers do not command battle ships.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is it not a fact that in the battle of the Yalu River only two first-class battle ships were engaged, the Chen Yuen and the Ping Yuen, owned by the Chinese, and that the Japanese had an ordinary freighter that had put on it a little armament, and at that time it engaged both battle ships at the same time, and received two projectiles, which would have destroyed it if it had been armored, but being unarmored, they passed through it without doing further damage than making a couple of holes, and as a matter of fact they were the only battle ships engaged? That is the information we get.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I prefer to take the reports published in the Yearbook of Naval Progress, issued here at Washington by the Navy Department, and they do not state it as a fact.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask the gentleman if that is not the fact as stated by Mr. Mahan, and if he is not a good authority?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will say to the gentleman that, admitting all that you say is so, it is no argument against battle ships. Why, then, did Japan immediately order twelve of these battle ships? She was apparently satisfied with the experiment at the Yalu.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will answer that question by asking why the Japanese fleet ran away after the Chinese were out of ammunition?

Mr. CUMMINGS. We have to take the official reports, and the official reports are conclusive. The battle ships were tested, and the Japanese Government accepted the test.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMPSON. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hold that the action of the Japanese Government alone is conclusive proof of the value of these battle ships; and if that is not conclusive, I hold that the action of the Emperor of Germany, the Czar of Russia, the Republic of France, and the Government of Great Britain is triply conclusive. They have all arrived at the same conclusion. To bring up newspaper reports and haphazard statements as to the battle of the Yalu never will alter the facts.

The Japanese money is being spent in the construction of such ships. It is being spent like water; the money is sent out of that country into other countries to construct such battle ships. We are following suit in draining money from the Treasury to buy war ships in foreign countries while our mechanics and workingmen are walking the streets in search of work. If this gentleman of the House could have gone to the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, to the Norfolk Navy-Yard, or to any other navy-yard owned by the Government nine months ago, he would have seen a roll there of a hundred calkers, a hundred machinists, and hundreds of mechanics anxiously awaiting an opportunity to work. None was ordered. The maxim "In time of peace prepare for war" had been disregarded. This House itself, in the last Congress, voted for four battle ships. You afterwards got three, because you accepted the amendment offered by the Senate.

My colleague [Mr. FOOTE] alluded to the fact that the House had voted down the proposition for six battle ships. Let me inform him that the Naval Committee, with one exception, voted unanimously for six ships, and afterwards, in deference to what they believed to be the wish of the House, they accepted four, and they came here and were heartily sustained by the House. They did not believe that the House would stand six. If we needed four battle ships then—and you decided that we did by a rousing majority—we certainly need two more now, for this proposition to build three is only really a proposition to increase the Navy by two, for you are constructing one in place of the Maine.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. How long will it take to build these ships?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman from Illinois said it will take three years. I answer, on the authority of Charles H. Cramp, it will take only two years. Now, Mr. Chairman, having demonstrated, as I believe, the utility of these battle ships, and knowing as I do that no nation on the face of the earth has ever yet arrived at the flood tide of commercial prosperity and civilization that did not have a large navy, I hope the House will decide that it is not only for the interest of Congress, but for the interest of the whole country to sanction an increase of our naval force by building two battle ships at this time for the American Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment to the original paragraph. The proposition of the gentleman from Illinois was in the nature of a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the original paragraph.

The amendment is as follows:

In line 18, page 53, strike out the word "six" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

In line 19, page 53, strike out the word "six" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

In line 22, page 53, strike out the words "two million three hundred and forty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "four million six hundred and eighty."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Do I understand the gentleman from Missouri proposes to double the number of torpedo boats and the number of torpedo-boat destroyers?

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. And the money appropriation.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Then, if the Clerk will double the money provision, he will get the amendment right. I desire to say, on behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that we cheerfully accept that amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there are already two amendments pending.

Mr. PAYNE. One is a motion to substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] moved a substitute for the paragraph.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then this would be in order, and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in accord with nearly all the provisions of this bill, and I shall support it with great satisfaction, because I have believed for twenty years that this Government can not maintain her standing among the nations of the earth or hold her own in the race of commercial enterprise and development or continue to exert her beneficent influence upon civilization, for which, in my judgment, God Almighty created this Republic, without keeping pace year by year and month by month with all her sister governments in all that appertains to power upon the sea as well as power upon the land.

The gentleman from Illinois suggests that this will cost money and cost time. Yes, gentlemen, it will cost money and cost time, but it will be money spent and time spent which we ought to have expended ten years ago [applause]; and every dollar we spend, every energy we put out at this time, and for the months to come, will put us in a still better preparation to meet all the exigencies that lie in the future. The gentleman talked to us about the battle ship Texas, and asked us if we regarded it as a wise expenditure of money. I say yes, every dollar of it. Whether the ship is a good ship or a bad ship argues nothing to-day. If it was a bad ship, we have been to a primary school in naval architecture and we have learned something from it. But let me say to the gentlemen of this House that we have five of the best battle ships that exist in the world, and that is one of the results of constructing the battle ship Texas.

Mr. KING. Would it interrupt the gentleman for me to ask him a question?

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. No, sir.

Mr. KING. I want to ask whether the history of battle ships is reassuring that they will be the naval ship of the future?

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. The history of battle ships is encouraging, to say the least; but whether it is assuring or whether it is not, it is my judgment, gentlemen, that it is our duty, and we shall be wise if we heed it, to keep pace day by day, month by month, and year by year, with all the great nations of the earth. [Applause.] Not a dollar is misspent. All this money goes out to our own people, and it does not hurt us even if ships do not prove a success. But what is the experience of the world to-day?

Two years and a half ago, for the purpose of studying this very subject, I made a trip around the world and examined a type of every battle ship in the world. I became persuaded then, and I am doubly persuaded now, that instead of having a provision in this bill for three battle ships, it ought to have been six.

Fortunately, in this age at least, we have no need of more than a nominal standing army. The broad oceans are our bulwarks against foreign hosts, and even if their ever threatening waters are traversed by the invader, the universal patriotism and universal adaptability to military exigencies of 70,000,000 of liberty-loving people can marshal a million of defenders at the sound of the trumpet.

This power upon the land—the power of wealth, the power of intelligence, the power of industry, the power of invention, the power of natural resources, the power of rapid mobilization and concentration, and, above all, that power of universal brotherhood which, born amid the throes of the Revolution, was regenerated and rebaptized with the precious blood of a million heroes from both the Northland and the Southland who made their supreme sacrifice in the agonies of internecine war—this power upon the land, imperial in its majesty, will endure, resistless and supreme, as long as the sacred fire continues to burn on the mountain tops of the Republic.

Not so with power upon the sea. Strong arms and faithful hearts are useless unless they have the means of achievement. A cheese box upon a raft revolutionized the navies of the world. That creative principle, born on American soil, appropriated and amplified by foreign nations, drives us inexorably to a corresponding development or to a surrender of our high estate.

I listened with amazement to a statement made a few days ago by a distinguished Representative on this floor that the glory of this Republic was in the preservation of what he termed its "insular isolation."

Why, Mr. Chairman, you might as well endeavor to dam up the mighty Mississippi with a bundle of straw as to isolate the resistless energies of the American people from the great movements of civilization that are going on about them.

In two centuries those mighty energies have subdued a continent vaster than antiquity ever dreamed of. Mountains have been leveled, rivers and cataracts have been harnessed, and ten thousand valleys have been made to resound with the music of the hammer and the forge. On and on they have swept with ever-increasing strength, and wherever they have gone they have set up, not the gloomy tombstone of isolation, the historic emblem of decay, but the banner of freedom and progress and industrial development; and, Mr. Chairman, wherever that banner floats in the breeze, whether amid Alaska's eternal glaciers or amid the soothing shades of the islands of the blue Pacific, there will abide the genius of liberty and the sovereignty of the United States. This, sir, and this alone, is the divine mission, this the true glory of the Republic.

It would not be profitable, Mr. Chairman, for me to traverse with particularity ground which has been so ably occupied by others who have already spoken upon this bill. I will content myself with the observation that the spirit of the present age is one of commercial aggression and conquest. Nearly all the nations of the earth, pagan as well as Christian, are moving upon these lines. The American people are no exception. They could not divest themselves of this impelling spirit if they would. The organic principle of their existence is the principle of progress But even if they could turn back upon themselves and be content with the achievements already attained, yet the preservation of their existing commercial and political status demands the institution of a maritime power sufficient to compel the respect of the world and to successfully resist the encroachments of competing nations.

That which is called the code of international law was instituted by governments which have the power of enforcing diplomacy with fleets and armies. Power lies at the basis of all conventions for arbitration. There is no forum, and there never has been a forum, in which a weak and helpless nation of itself and by itself can be or ever has been assured of just treatment in its international relations.

The history of the past has uniformly told one fact, and that fact has been recorded over and over again since national life began. No nation that has neglected in times of peace to keep itself prepared for war has ever continued to hold a commanding position in the family of states. If it has survived at all, it has done so by sufferance, or because its existence has been necessary to a balance of power.

I am no advocate of aggression or conquest. I would deprecate and resist every attempt in either direction; but I believe that if Congress had done ten years ago what it is doing to-day under the constraint of impending danger, not only would no danger exist, but 200,000 starved and murdered victims of Spanish barbarism would be living at this hour, and Cuba would be a free republic, moving forward and upward in the peaceful race of life under the sheltering protection of the United States, and every nation on the face of the earth would bid her welcome and godspeed.

But the bill, Mr. Chairman, is, in my judgment, faulty in one respect. Experience thus far had shows to us that this bill does not contain provision for enough torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers.

Mr. LOW. Why not provide for twenty-five torpedo boats? The House will grant them if you propose it.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I would most gladly make that proposition if I thought this House would sustain me. We ought to have 150 torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers. [Applause.]

Now, what has been done by other nations of the world, whose admiralty departments have been studying this subject from hour to hour and day to day ever since the old monitor came into existence down to the present time? What have they done? Let us look at Great Britain. Great Britain has in service and in progress of construction 320 torpedo boats to 284 fighting ships of all classes, or about 1¼ torpedo boats to every ship, while to-day the Government of the United States has but 23 torpedo boats to 58 fighting ships of all classes, or only 1 torpedo boat to 2½ fighters.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I should like to have about two minutes more.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hope the gentleman will be permitted to conclude his remarks. He asks for only two or three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Missouri be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. If the experimentation already had proves anything, it proves, in the language of a prominent naval officer of this city, that the Iowa, the New York, and the Indiana, lying 6 miles off Key West, and he might have said the Puritan and the Brooklyn, lying at Hampton Roads, are practically at the mercy of a dozen torpedo boats lying in the harbor of Puerto Rico. It may be considered an extreme statement—however that may be, I venture the statement—that no battle ship can exert its full power of attack or protect itself from attack below water line without a full and proper complement of swift picket guard boats and torpedo-boat destroyers. All the leading nations of Europe—Great Britain, France, Germany, Russia, and Italy—have recognized the correctness of this proposition and have conformed to it in their naval development. Why should the United States stand alone in respect to this system of complementary construction? Why create battle ships unless you throw around them every protection that ingenuity can devise or money can buy against torpedo-boat attacks? It would be a false economy—nay, more, it would be a crime—to hazard the lives of our sailors if the exposure can in any degree be lessened by a provision which is everywhere recognized by naval constructors as essential to a complete equipment. I hope, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri how a battle ship is going to protect itself from a submarine torpedo boat such as is now being experimented with in the bay of New York?

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. That is entirely another phase of this subject. I am not arguing on the subject of battle ships. My amendment calls for torpedo boats.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I understood the gentleman to say that our battle ships down there are at the mercy of the torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers of the Spanish fleet.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this amendment goes to the perfecting of the original paragraph. I wish simply to call attention to its purport as I gather it. It comprises one portion of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois, namely, an increase in the number of torpedo boats. I wish to say in behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs that we recognize the value of that class of vessels thoroughly, and we inserted in the bill the number there provided for, with the view of making such recognition on the part, first, of the committee and then of the House. The relatively small number which we have provided for was due to the fact that we always anticipate additions to our appropriation bills elsewhere, additions of a more or less, and usually more, liberal character, and sometimes in preparing our bill, after placing in it the principal and essential elements, we have left some verge for other legislators under whose scrutiny these measures have to pass, that they may take some share in providing for great matters of public interest.

We had no idea when we brought this bill into the House that there would be only six torpedo boats and six torpedo-boat destroyers provided for this year. We had every reason to believe—in fact, we knew as well as we could know anything in advance—that a large number of torpedo boats would be provided for. All gentlemen who keep abreast of current news must be aware it is already reported that the Department itself, under the plenary authority vested in it by Congress, is taking measures for the construction of a large number of torpedo boats.

Now we are entirely willing to accept this proposition, and I ask the committee to allow an immediate vote on the amendment in order to perfect the paragraph presented in the pending bill.

Mr. BROMWELL. Before the vote is taken, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up the amendment.

Mr. BROMWELL. I desire to offer an amendment by inserting, after the word "Maine," on line 17 of the original paragraph, the words "and one to be named the Ohio."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That would not be germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BROMWELL. I think I would like to be heard on that proposition.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It strikes me it would not be germane.

Mr. BROMWELL. I think it would.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. But I wish to suggest to the gentleman that we have attempted that in the House a number of times heretofore. Such an attempt, I will state, has never been successful. There are some forty-odd States in the Union, and all would like to be distinguished by having a battle ship named after them. I speak absolutely without self-interest in the matter, because the insertion of the name "Maine," proposed in the bill, was not at my instance, and was not even suggested by me. Gentlemen all know the circumstances which induced its insertion, so that we were not governed by any consideration of the kind such as the gentleman's amendment would suggest. That, of course, will be recognized by everybody. But if the amendment of the gentleman is offered, there will be another, another, and another, until every one of the States has been suggested, and it will degenerate into a mere jocular contention or scramble that will not be in the interest of good legislation, and will not facilitate the passage of the bill.

I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be suggested or pressed. I ask that we may have a vote on the pending amendment first.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment here.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOPKINS in the chair). The Chair desires to state that all of the amendments are pending now that are admissible under the rule.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I understood the Chair had recognized me for five minutes, but I yielded to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE], whose time was extended. Am I not entitled to the floor at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman can talk to some other paragraph of the bill that follows this one. Let us have a vote here first.

Mr. BROMWELL. I desire to have a vote on the amendment I have offered.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Let us have a vote first.

Mr. SIMPSON. The point I wish to discuss is the very question that is now pending.

Mr. POWERS. I would like to ask the Chairman if it would be in order to move to substitute in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio the word "Vermont" for the word "Ohio"?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not be in order, for the reason that there is an amendment pending to the original paragraph. To that the gentleman from Ohio has offered an amendment, and that exhausts the power of amendment until these are disposed of.

Mr. POWERS. Then I hope the committee will vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio and substitute the word "Vermont" for "Ohio."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to the pending amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard upon that?

Mr. BROMWELL. Most certainly I do.

The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE] starts with the wording of the section, and covers a great portion of the language of the original bill. It is not consecutive. It is not limited to one particular topic, but covers a number of them. Now, this is an amendment to the original section. I propose to add the words at the end of the proposed amendment, to follow the word "Maine" in the original section, the words "and Ohio." It is just as pertinent and relevant to the section as the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Ohio that in reading the amendment sent up by him to the Clerk's desk, instead of being an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, it is an amendment to the paragraph itself, and is not in order until the other amendment is disposed of.

Mr. BROMWELL. Permit me a moment, Mr. Chairman. The amendment, I stated, was an amendment to the amendment. The amendment as written, which I desire now to correct, was written as an amendment to the original paragraph, without knowledge that the gentleman from Missouri was going to offer his amendment. The verbal amendment was to insert in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri the word "Ohio" in place of "Maine."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to reduce his amendment to writing. When that is done, the Chair will hear him on the question of its admissibility.

Mr. SIMPSON. I wish to speak upon this.

Mr. BROMWELL. I will solve the difficulty by withdrawing the amendment and offering it further along.

Mr. SIMPSON. I desire to speak on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has been withdrawn.

Mr. SIMPSON. I desire to speak on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that we close debate and take a vote in five minutes.

Mr. SIMPSON. I can not be taken off the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, we are often tempted to a very superficial view of the importance of our action in this House when we are preparing to vote upon our annual appropriation bills. And yet this is the very point at which the conscientious legislator should study the fundamentals of his political faith and be guided by their teaching. And this is especially the case when we are considering a bill that will practically affect the national policy as to the construction and maintenance of our Navy. For the purpose of calling the attention of the House to what it seems to me should be the unvarying desire of every member, I wish to read the following extract from the writings of Wendell Phillips—the man who, in my opinion, stands in the very front rank of American scholars and patriots:

> What did the Pilgrims do? Why, sir, it was the great question of that day which course to take. Cromwell and Hampden stood on one side, Carver and Bradford on the other. Which would best reform the English Government, staying at home or going away? History answers which effected the most. Which has struck the heaviest blows at the English aristocracy, the efforts of those who stood nearest or the sight and example of America, as she loomed up in gigantic proportions?
> Mr. President, they say that Michael Angelo once entered a palace at Rome where Raphael was ornamenting the ceiling, and as Angelo walked around, he saw that all the figures were too small for the room. Stopping a moment, he sketched on one side an immense head, proportioned to the chamber; and when his friends asked him why, his reply was, "I criticise by creation, not by finding fault." Carver and Bradford did so. They came across the water, created a great model state, and had England take warning.

Here is raised a high standard for us to observe. In its conception Wendell Phillips recognized one of the most important factors in successful life, whether of the individual or of the nation—we must have a distinct object and aim. The man without high ideals is the man of small achievement. The nation having no other aim than national aggrandizement is the nation whose decline is already written in the book of fate. And as the history of a nation is the story of the lives of its citizens, so the national aim is the average aspiration of its citizens. And especially must this be true of a country seeking the perfection of representative government and the crowning of the citizens as sovereigns.

These were doubtless the motives of the leaders who rebelled against the conditions of English life in the last century and established on these shores a new experiment in self-government. While we may not—and I certainly do not—accept all the tributes that are to-day laid at the feet of the early settlers, we may grant to their leaders the credit of having rebelled against the hampering edicts of English aristocracy. In estimating the lives of men we must not fail to take account of the times and conditions in which they lived.

I am of the optimists who firmly believe that the world is growing better, in spite of the evils so clear to our eyes, aye, indeed, because we see those evils with such increasing clearness. I look upon the unrest of the hour as the best possible proof of the survival of the cherished aims of our ancestors and of the growth of a true American spirit that shall lead to more widespread results than those which gave Wendell Phillips reason to esteem the fruits of Carver and Bradford above those of Cromwell and Hampden.

Discouraged reformers have often declared there was no room for men of radical views in the Congress of the United States. This was because of the fact that they must seem to oppose by their voting the principles they advocate. Under this form of reasoning I may be criticised because, teaching absolute free trade, I uniformly vote for payments of money for the erection of barriers to commerce in the form of custom-houses and for the maintenance of a horde of officials to interfere with the freedom of trade of the people. 'I have learned to have greater charity for all error because of the fact that, in common with all searchers after truth, I, too, have come into light from great darkness.

Time was when I might have hugged the delusion that men could make themselves rich by taxation. There came a better day when I could see that such efforts merely resulted in altering the currents of exchange, conferring on the few the results of the labor of many; and so, too, I might have been found among those who could only see inconsistency in a free trader voting for any tariff or tax upon any product of human industry. But I have outgrown that error in learning that under a republican form of government radical reforms are practically impossible. Because of the operation of natural laws the progress of human society must be evolutionary.

It would have been as impossible for the aborigines of this continent to have erected this building or that magnificent Library as for a people indoctrinated with the fallacies of high protection to have a clear conception of human liberty, or for a national banker to recognize the fundamental principles of "honest money." The truest radical, therefore, is he who seeks to accomplish his ends with the least possible friction, and yet cherishing a hatred of that conservatism which would protect vested rights in wrong at the expense of the natural rights of all. And since under our Government all reforms must come through legislation, the radical, standing as a legislator, constantly presses his argument to the limit and yields in action to that legislation which most directly accords with his views.

Thus, upon a question of a tariff upon imports, I believe it my duty to vote for the lowest attainable rate, regardless of the question whether or not there will be adequate revenue collected under a system which interferes with the freedom of commerce essential to the highest freedom of the state. And I do this, indifferent to the possibility of collecting an adequate revenue, because of my belief that through inevitable failures the people will see that they have been seeking an impossible thing in their tariff legislation.

And there is another question which must force action contrary to my views as a radical. I am a man of peace. I believe firmly in the possibility of securing an agreement among civilized nations that will make unnecessary the maintenance of expensive armies and navies. I know of nothing more absurd than the rivalry of the nations in the matter of building unwieldy ships of war and in the construction of guns to pierce them. For years two departments of our Navy have been engaged in a fierce contest. The constructors have been striving to build a ship that no gun could pierce, while the Ordnance Department has been equally earnest in efforts to make a gun that no ship could withstand.

Not only have we reached the limit of armor plate that the ships will bear without sinking, but we have also, on the other end of the line, reached the utmost limit—if we have not gone far beyond it—of enormous guns. For I am informed by a skilled naval officer that a new danger threatens the Navy in that the men have become afraid of their own guns, and it has come to pass that they esteem the most dangerous place for a sailor to be in their rear rather than in front. Formerly it was the custom to assume that a gun could be fired over one hundred times. To-day, after sacrificing many valuable lives, we have no possible way of determining the line of safety. In the manufacture of these big guns we have crossed the line of scientific construction and have produced a weapon more dangerous to ourselves than to the enemy.

Doing this, it seems to me that we have repeated history in demonstrating that the heaviest war ships are an unsafe reliance in case of war, and that we shall soon be turning our attention to the possibility of constructing ships of light draft and great speed. To me this has always seemed the inevitable result of our policy, and I have always voted for the sums demanded for the Navy under a strong mental protest and seeking the smallest possible waste. Nor have I deemed that the waste was to be determined by the cost. We have ships in our Navy that would be dear at any price.

I yield no part of my faith in the desirability and possibility of dispensing with these expensive armaments. I can admit that until this world has progressed further from barbarism we must continue this waste of our substance, not merely for our own protection, but to aid those who lack our power and are hindered in their progress by more powerful though less civilized nations. In the early days of California there were many citizens attracted to the New El Dorado who had been brought up under the best of influences and had lofty ideas of right and wrong and of the proper administration of governmental affairs. They believed firmly in the rule of law and order.

They stood for the suppression of lawlessness and for the maintenance of the supremacy of the constituted authorities. But they felt the pressure of their environments. Stand never so firmly for the right, they were forced under the law of self-preservation to arm themselves, and frequently to take the law into their own hands and execute summary justice upon marauders who had flocked to the coast in advance of the establishment of a stable government. There have been silly carpers who have had nothing but rebukes for the California vigilantes of the early days; but I hold them in respect as the men whose bravery and clear vision led them to action which resulted in the final establishment of justice. They were actuated by the principle of always standing with the people, right or wrong; and the men who rebuke such action would cast the same reproach on the policy which inspired Moses to bear with his people, even while he recognized their error, and finally led them into the promised land.

And since the avowed object of these floating batteries is the creation of respect through fear, it is clear that the very best must always be the cheapest, and that the heavy expenditure thus necessitated will the sooner lead to a recognition of its folly. Therefore we must submit with all possible grace to the inevitable until a better time comes. The dude with checks on his trousers 2 inches square will always feel a contempt for his fellow whose legs have been made less conspicuous by his tailor and Creator. But I will do my best to establish conditions under which respect for this country shall rest firmly upon something better than the thickness of our armor plates or skulls. But for such considerations as these I would never vote a dollar for the increase of our Army or Navy in times of peace.

Mr. Chairman, this bill carries a very large appropriation. Taken in connection with the $50,000,000 voted a few weeks ago, and supposing that half of that sum will be devoted to coast defense, it still leaves an appropriation, including that voted a few weeks ago, of at least $60,000,000 to provide a navy for the country. This is an extraordinary appropriation, and could not and can not be justified except under extraordinary conditions.

We have an emergency to meet. Now, the question follows, How shall we meet it? By the construction of battle ships, or the construction of torpedo-boat destroyers? I disagree with some things that have been said as to whether it has been demonstrated that the battle ship has been proven to be the best fighting machine. I also disagree with some of the statements made here that in every great naval engagement in the world the big line-of-battle ship has been the successful fighting machine. History does not bear that out.

There are to be found in the history of the past sound reasons for the belief that the days of big armored ships are soon to be numbered. Looking back to our own war of the rebellion, we recall the destruction of the Merrimac by the little Monitor, ridiculed as the "little Yankee cheese box on a raft." In the naval contest between China and Japan the small ships of the latter proved of far more destructive power than the unwieldy craft of the former, even after making all due allowance for the superior skill possessed by the Japanese.

And looking back to the history of earlier naval warfare, we find the same lesson impressed upon every page. Three centuries ago our ancestors learned the value of light ships as against the unwieldy craft brought against them by the Spaniards. Then the oceans were generally named as the Spanish Main. The Spaniards ruled the waves and believed themselves invincible on the water. They brought their wonderful armada to sustain their authority and anticipated an easy victory against the smaller fleet that could be mustered against them. Motley, in his History of the Netherlands, gives a clear statement of the progress of the action which humbled the power of Spain and should have established for all time the true theory of naval warfare.

That was a proud moment for the Spanish captains when they assembled in form of a crescent their hundred and forty huge ships against which less than half that number of small and light craft were to contend. With heavier ships, heavier guns, and an overwhelming force, the commanders of the allied fleet believed they had victory in their grasp. But they reckoned without thought of the enemy. The lighter and more easily handled vessels of the English fleet gave battle, indeed, but it was on lines of their own choosing.

They attacked each end of their opponents' line, and easily escaped from the pursuit made against them. And when the Spanish captains sought to render assistance to each other when embarrassed by the onslaughts of the lighter ships of the enemy, they fouled each other and became more of a terror than the enemy. The end is a matter of history. The first day of battle ended in the disgraceful escape of the major portion of the armada and the forsaking of crippled and endangered comrades to the mercy of the enemy, who took many captives, for which they commanded large ransoms.

Three days later the final engagement was had. Here again the English captains pursued the same tactics. They met the efforts of the Spanish captains to bring them into close conflict by skillful maneuvers, and, after an engagement lasting six hours, drove the enemy from the field badly crippled and easy prey to the elements.

Now, there is a provision in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri to equip the naval force with a greater number of torpedo boats. We ought to double it or treble it, if we are going to meet this emergency, if we are going to defend our coasts and our battle ships.

It is well understood by naval authorities that the torpedo boat and the torpedo-boat destroyer are adjuncts to the battle ship, and we have been derelict in our duty in not providing a greater number of them. Beyond question they will be our defense. If war comes, it will come speedily. Within the next month, perhaps, we shall need these ships. I am not one of those who believe, however, that the war will be over in three months. If it is over in three years we shall be fortunate. Once we enter upon this engagement no man can set a day when it will end. So we ought to begin at once to provide adequate defense for our coast and for our battle ships.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have five minutes more.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move to close debate on this amendment.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] have five minutes more.

Mr. SIMPSON. I have not said a word on this question before.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move to close debate upon this amendment in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] moves to close debate in five minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to have five minutes on this.

The CHAIRMAN. And the request has been made that the gentleman from Kansas be permitted to consume the five minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to have five minutes on this question.

Mr. HANDY. I move to amend to close debate in twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware moves to amend by closing debate in twenty minutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FOOTE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOOTE. Is this on the paragraph or on the entire section?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. BROMWELL. What amendment? Is this the Pearce amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Pearce amendment.

Mr. SIMPSON. Naval authorities agree——

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a little better order. I want to hear what the gentleman from Kansas says.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, naval authorities agree that the torpedo boat is absolutely deadly if it gets within a quarter of a mile of a battle ship. At that distance it can shoot a torpedo with absolute accuracy and with force enough to explode the torpedo, which means the destruction of the battle ship. The torpedo-boat destroyer, if I understand what it is intended for, is a small ship built for speed, with great speed, whose usefulness or purpose will be to overtake and destroy the torpedo boat before she gets within that distance of her enemy.

The battle ship in line of battle, therefore, in any naval engagement will have to be protected by these swift, light-armored torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers. They are an adjunct, an auxiliary, and take shelter as they will in the lee of the battle ship, ready at any time to meet this deadly foe and destroyer of battle ships. Therefore I think it is a very wise provision of this amendment to provide these torpedo boats, and it would have been better to have doubled them.

Were we, and I hope we are not, going to enter into this new policy of building up a tremendous navy in order to rank equal with any other country for the purpose of attacking foreign nations, I hope and trust that our policy will be in the future as it has been in the past, one of self-defense. If it is, we do not need a large number of seagoing battle ships. What we do need is monitors, boats constructed purposely for coast and self defense. The monitors will have a low free board that shows a small mark out of the water.

I am satisfied they will prove to be the most effective fighting machines for self-defense. If gentlemen think, however, that we are justified, and we are going to enter upon this new policy, going into rivalry with other nations in regard to having a great navy for aggressive purposes, that is another question. I do not think this Republic proposes to do that. Neither do I think the people will sustain a vote in Congress with that object in view. Our purpose alone can be one of self-defense; and we are entering upon this policy of building up a navy for self-defense alone.

Then it follows, Mr. Chairman, that this is the purpose; and it has been demonstrated that these torpedo boats or torpedo-boat destroyers are best for defense; that they can be most quickly constructed, before the war will be over, before we will have any use, perhaps, for the battle ship; and, as has been very wisely suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], if we go into this war with Spain, in the course of a year we will have demonstrated whether the battle ship is the best fighting machine.

Go on with the construction of these three battle ships. That is all right. Before they will be completed we will know of the efficiency of the battle ship; and if it is not best, they can be turned into light-armored cruisers; but we ought to vote for this amendment. I think we ought to double the number of torpedo boats and double the number of torpedo-boat destroyers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMPSON. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, this bill is not an emergent measure. I am, however, in favor of building up and strengthening the Navy, but not in favor of agreeing to important propositions without the consideration of a committee and without the approval of the proper head of Department. I am opposed to the amendment to the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague [Mr. PEARCE]. I am, however, willing to stand by this paragraph of the bill as reported by the committee.

I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that there are grave doubts as to the fighting qualities of the battle ship, but I shall reluctantly resolve the doubts in favor of the committee. I desire to know, Mr. Chairman, here and now, whether the chairman of the committee intends to abandon this paragraph of his bill.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I understood the chairman of the committee to say——

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the proposition comes from the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Maine has consented to the amendment of my colleague.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. If the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to vote for all the torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers carried by the amendment of my colleague, provided the Secretary of the Navy shall approve the proposition. If, Mr. Chairman, I had any doubt of the danger of imminent trouble, that doubt would be dispelled by the very atmosphere which I breathe around me, already charged, as it is, with extravagance of war.

I desire to say further, Mr. Chairman, that I will support the War and Navy Departments in all their requisitions for men and money; but I am unwilling, and this House should be unwilling, to accept even the judgment of so distinguished a Representative as my colleague, and double the number of torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers without a committee having considered the amendment and without Secretary Long having given it his approval.

Sir, I warn this House on the threshold of probable war—I fear the warning will fall on leaden ears—that, while all Representatives, whether Democrats, Republicans, or Populists, are willing to vote every dollar the Government may need, every dollar called for by the heads of Departments and approved by committees, we should not depart from the time-honored methods of considering such measures by committees and after the Departments have submitted estimates. This amendment may be adopted in a patriotic spirit and an outburst of enthusiasm, but it thus takes more the form of an assault on the Treasury of the United States than it does on Spain.

All the money we are now appropriating, and let it be a thousand millions, if necessary, to uphold the national honor, must be paid ultimately by the men who follow the plow, by the men who delve in the mines, by the men who work on the railroads and in other productive industries. They will pay it willingly and cheerfully if the Government needs it, but let us not in a passionate moment support appropriations not asked for by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy and not required by the needs of the public service. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to delay the vote on this amendment, but I desire to say, in answer to the query the gentleman has proposed, that it is not the intention of the committee to abandon this paragraph. It was the purpose of the committee to present a bill which was and is in no sense an emergency measure. Some fifteen years ago we commenced building what is styled the new Navy, and we have proceeded by regular steps until this time, when it is contended, upon the part of a good many that we have got a respectable Navy, and upon the part of others that we have been very derelict in the matter of making reasonable provision for a navy.

It has seemed to me that we have made reasonable progress during the last fifteen years, and that we should keep on with that steady advancement which has characterized the building up of this new Navy in the past. The committee, however, have presented this bill not as an emergency measure, and it was and is the purpose of the committee to leave all matters of this kind for the consideration of the House. Now, one thing is certain: In the future, as in the past, all the fighting that is done upon the seas will be done by ships, and the heavy fighting will be done by the heavy battle ships. This is as certain and conclusive as anything can be.

It is said the ships have not been tested. That may be true to a certain extent, but if any changes are to be made in the future, if the modern battle ship is to be changed in any material respect, it will be in the matter of armor and armament. All material changes will occur along this line. The construction of these ships will not have so far progressed by another year that all material changes along this line or necessary changes along these lines can not be made if it should be demonstrated in any way that the modern battle ships as now constructed will not meet the requirement of the future. This is not the first bill in which three battle ships have been provided for. The Fifty-fourth Congress provided for three battle ships, and in my opinion Congress for some time to come should provide for a steady, gradual increase of the Navy, without regard to any kind of emergency.

As I have said, I have no desire to prolong the debate upon this amendment, and I simply want to say to the House that, in my judgment, no good reason has been presented against providing for the building of the three battle ships in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Ohio answer me a question?

Mr. SOUTHARD. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. The following proviso is in the text of the bill:

Provided further, That the contract for the construction of the vessels herein provided for shall be made within sixty days from the passage of this act.

Will my friend allow me to ask him if, in his judgment, it would not be better, if the text is to stand, to say "shall within the discretion of the President be made," etc., so that if the shipyards are busy working stress on something else they may not be contracted for within ninety days or six months; in other words, give discretion to the Executive?

Mr. HILBORN. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to answer the question? In the case of the Kearsarge and Kentucky there was no restriction as to the time in which the contract should be let. The result followed that the contracts were not let for eleven months. This arbitrary exercise of power was resented, and in order to prevent a repetition, the language that the gentleman challenges has been inserted in every subsequent bill.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. It has been customary to divide the time between the friends of the affirmative and the negative of a proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts if he desires.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I desire to support the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] has just said that this bill is in no sense an emergency measure; that it was brought into the House in the regular order of legislation and upon the principle that we should continue to build our Navy upon the plan we have adopted and which has been in operation for fifteen years. Upon that plan, upon that theory, I should make no opposition, and I should not support the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois on the battle-ship question under ordinary conditions.

But I have felt from the beginning of my term of service here that whenever the battle ships were thoroughly tested, they would prove a failure; that it was for the best interest of this country to build smaller and exceedingly fleet craft that would carry a less number of guns, so that more vessels could be built and several engage an enemy and be far more effective.

Now, my point is this: As a business proposition, should we fill up our navy-yards, repair shops, and our shipyards with vessels in process that can not be constructed in less than three years and can not be effective in the near future when we ought to construct vessels of a character that we could complete within six months to meet the emergency which we fear is now upon us? And ought we not to wait for six months, when this question of the practical fighting value of the battle ship may be settled, and then determine whether we shall go on with these battle ships, and make all speed in constructing them within two years and a half then, rather than beginning now for three years?

As a clear, plain business proposition, ought we not to delay the three battle ships and provide for the present emergency, when it is morally certain that if we have a war, we shall have data upon which to legislate which no nation has to-day? These battle ships have been exceedingly unfortunate. A torpedo boat may destroy any one of them. I would rather have three or four ships engaged with a battle ship, each carrying less guns——

Mr. SOUTHARD. Is there any war vessel that a torpedo boat can not destroy under favorable circumstances?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Not at all. But when a torpedo boat destroys one battle ship with 500 men, the vessel and the men are gone, while if that torpedo boat destroys but one of three smaller ships, we have lost but 100 or 150 men and only one small vessel. In my judgment, these guns that we count on in a large ship ought to be divided and mounted on several smaller ships.

But, as I said in the beginning, if there were no opportunity to soon test this question, no opportunity likely to occur within three months or six months, I would not oppose the proposition, but would vote for these battle ships. Under the circumstances, however, it seems to me it would be best to delay ordering these battle ships until the next session of this Congress.

I reserve the balance of my time, if I have any.

Mr. JONES of Washington addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to discuss the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] has the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood he had yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has now expired; and under the order adopted by the committee, debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent to discuss the question at this time. It seems to me it will not delay the bill any more to discuss it at this time than later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to address the committee——

Mr. SOUTHARD. For how long?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Ten minutes.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I would not object to five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to make it fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the request of the gentleman from Washington is objected to by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well; then I will take five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman from Washington be allowed five minutes? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois I desire to say that I concede to no man in this House—neither the gentleman from Maine nor any other gentleman—a greater desire to see this country well defended by an efficient navy than I have myself. We are the greatest nation in the world and we should have the greatest navy. I believe that every port, not alone upon the Atlantic, but upon the Pacific Ocean also, should be well and adequately defended. But I believe that at this juncture it is an unwise expenditure of money to put $15,000,000 into a class of fighting machines which I say to-day are acknowledged by naval experts everywhere to be only a theory and an experiment.

It has been said here in support of these battle ships that it is the consensus of naval expert opinion that the battle ship is a good fighting machine; and we are called to witness the fact that Russia and Germany and England are to-day investing millions of money in battle ships. Mr. Chairman, with all due regard for the opinion of naval experts throughout the world, I say that is not an argument in favor of the battle ship. And I want to remind my friends who are so enthusiastic in favor of this special type of vessel that before our recent war all the nations of the world were engaged in building frigates; and had it not been for the good judgment, the sound sense, the native resolution of a rail splitter from Illinois who fortunately occupied the White House in 1861, the Monitor never would have been built; the Navy Department never would have let a contract for it.

When Ericsson proposed the Monitor it was derided and denounced by every naval officer of the United States of any high position. And the Navy Department did everything in its power to prevent the construction of the Monitor until it was forced to let that contract to Mr. Ericsson; and when the contract was let, it in the first place looked as though it would be an impossibility for Mr. Ericsson to respond. He was required to complete that Monitor within one hundred days, and the Navy Department tried to impose conditions upon him that would make it impossible for him to carry out the contract. This, Mr. Chairman, is history. And I say that the opinion of naval "experts" throughout the world on the subject of the battle ships is of no more weight to-day in favor of the battle ship than it was against the Monitor at that time.

And let me remind gentlemen further that after the Monitor had gone to Hampton Roads and successfully defended the wooden fleet there from the Merrimac, even yet the derision and denunciation of the Navy Department was not withdrawn. Even after that time several of the admirals of the Navy continued to deride and underrate the Monitor. Dupont's fleet was down at Charleston, S. C., maintaining a blockade there. The Confederacy built the Atlanta, which was at that time supposed to be the most formidable naval vessel that had been put afloat.

So certain were the Confederates that the Atlanta would destroy Dupont's fleet that excursion boats followed that ship out of Charleston Harbor "to see the fun of sinking the Yankee fleet." Admiral Dupont was on the point of running away with his whole fleet when Captain Rodgers, in command of the monitor, said "No; I will meet the Atlanta with the monitor, and I think you can rely upon the result." He went out and met the Atlanta with the monitor Weehawken, and in his graphic report of that engagement to the Secretary of the Navy he stated: "The first shot deprived her of the disposition to fight, and the second of the ability to get away." That was all there was of the Atlanta. Within fifteen minutes after the time Rodgers opened fire the Atlanta surrendered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask an extension of five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I must ask that debate be closed on the paragraph. We have not voted on one single amendment to this important part of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask five minutes longer.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine (addressing the House). Do you want to hear more? [Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!" and "Go on!"] All right.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the gentleman will proceed for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I stated, Mr. Chairman, I only recited this instance to emphasize the fact that even that illustration of the monitor's value did not remove the prejudice existing in the Navy Department and amongst the commodores and admirals of the Navy against the monitors, because these vessels were not in accordance with their preconceived notions.

Mr. HILBORN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. HILBORN. Does not the gentleman know that the modern battle ship is only a modified form of the monitor? Does he not know that the monitor was simply a platform to support a revolving turret containing the guns, and that a battle ship, if you shoot off the entire superstructure, would be only a monitor with five or six revolving turrets or platforms for the guns? It is practically the same thing in somewhat different shape.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand, Mr. Chairman, precisely the difference between the two. The illustration the gentleman makes is not material. Of course I understand the difference between a monitor as it existed then and the battle ship as it exists to-day. I simply undertook to show that the Monitor was antagonized by the Navy Department and by naval experts throughout the world until it absolutely fought its title to superiority and fame, and to indicate that their opinion is no better now than it was then. And because the naval experts undertake to say that the battle ship is a big thing and a great fighting machine I claim is no argument in its favor.

But, Mr. Chairman, I was about to add, with reference to this fight to which I have referred, that after Captain Rodgers had saved the fleet of Admiral Dupont, the latter—the Admiral—wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Navy so disparaging of the Monitor, because it did not conform to his ideas, that it is worthy of comment at this time. It was so filled with injustice and so lacking in generosity that the authorities had to take cognizance of it, and shortly afterwards his resignation was accepted. He had ceased to be useful. He was not regarded by the "rail splitter from Illinois" as fit to be commanding a fleet in the American Navy, because he could not open his eyes to advancing conditions.

This incident so forcibly illustrates the idolatrous adherence of naval officers to their pet theories and preconceived notions about naval construction that I deem it a fitting time to call the attention of the committee and the country somewhat at length to the ungenerous, not to say shameful, treatment Captain Ericsson received at the hands of the Navy Department.

In 1839 Congress authorized the construction of the Princeton, and Captain Stockton, of the Navy Department, was subsequently put in charge of the work. He employed Captain Ericsson, who had recently come to this country and become a citizen, to aid. This was done with the full knowledge of the Navy Department. His services were of almost inestimable value, as I shall hereafter more fully show.

After the Princeton was completed and proved herself an immense success, Captain Ericsson presented an itemized bill to the Department claiming $15,080 for his actual expenses incurred in the work, and a very moderate charge for his labor. This bill included not one single cent for compensation for more than forty of his own inventions which were applied in the ship. The Navy Department rejected his bill in toto. Subsequently his claim was submitted to the Court of Claims.

In 1856 his claim was reached, and the court unanimously approved it, calling special attention to its moderateness and intimating that the Government should not complain had it been many times larger. This decision is given in full in Report No. 1826 of the first session Fifty-first Congress, which is before me and to which I desire to invite your attention. Four times was this claim unanimously reported to the House for payment, the last report being the one referred to by me, and to show the outrageous treatment of Captain Ericsson I desire to read a few extracts from that report.

On page 2 the committee says:

> Captain Ericsson devoted four hundred and twenty days to this work of making drawings of machinery, armament, gun carriage, etc., the superintending of the construction thereof, and paid out a large sum of money for office rent, instruments, stationery, postage, traveling and other expenses. This Schedule A is convincing proof of the enormous labor performed by Captain Ericsson and the reasonable amount of his claim as therein stated in full detail.
> The ship Princeton was constructed according to the drawings and inventions of Captain Ericsson and largely under his personal superintendence, and the result was entirely satisfactory to Captain Stockton and highly advantageous to the United States. Captain Stockton reported her to the Secretary of the Navy as a "full-rigged ship of great speed and power, able to perform any service that can be expected from a ship of war." (See his letter, Exhibit A, page 24.)

> The Princeton proved a wonderful and complete success, largely due to the many new and important features invented and introduced by Captain Ericsson. It is not strange, however, that Captain Stockton wanted the greater part of the glory. Such is human nature.

> It is well known that after he had invented the Monitor, and his genius foresaw its success, he refused to come to Washington to explain his invention to the Navy Department, because he felt that the Government had wronged and neglected him in the Princeton matter. Finally an appeal was made to his pride, and he came to Washington and explained his great invention to several of the leading naval officers, some of whom had faith in it and others none. At any rate, he made such an impression that an arrangement was made by which the Monitor could be constructed by outside capital, to be repaid by the Government if it proved a success. It was completed and manned just in time to meet the ironclad Merrimac in Hampton Roads, after the Congress and Cumberland had gone down to a watery grave by the powerful blow of the monster.
> The country knows the history of the memorable battle between the Monitor and the Merrimac. In less than ten days after the sinking of the wooden ships, had not the Monitor appeared, the Merrimac would have leisurely steamed up to Washington and the capital of a struggling nation would have fallen into the hands of the enemy. If that had happened, no man can tell what the result of the war would have been.
> Captain Ericsson saved the nation, and his name and fame were heralded to the world. The principle of his Monitor was adopted by every naval power in the world. The country owes him a debt it can never pay. After his death his executors came here and asked Congress to pay his estate an honest debt, ascertained and due from this Government many years before the invention of the Monitor.

To the everlasting disgrace of this country I am compelled to add that this claim still remains unpaid, and to this fact I would like now to especially invite the attention of my friends who so eloquently talk about "national dishonor and repudiation." What strange views some people do have about "national honor."

No wonder Captain Ericsson was reluctant to submit his plans of the Monitor to the Navy Department, or trust to the sense of justice of this Government. No wonder he was loath to subject himself to the humiliation of attempting to improve a Navy domineered by such bigots.

His pride and patriotism alone induced him to do so, and then, had it not been for the interference of President Lincoln, who knew nothing about naval affairs, but who possessed a mind unobscured by prejudice and an intellect capable of grasping a problem in mechanics, it is more than likely that the Monitor would never have been built. But he interfered in behalf of the Monitor, and the result was that the Navy Department grudgingly accorded a most onerous and ungenerous contract. It must be completed within one hundred days, and even then the Government did not undertake to pay anything for it unless it proved its superiority by a battle test, and even while it was being built, the Department, through Commodore Smith, who seemed to have been charged with the duty of seeing to it that no civilian should be permitted to prove that anyone but a naval officer could by any possibility understand the relation between cause and effect, sought to embarrass the great inventor by methods unworthy of a ward politician.

On September 30, 1861, Commodore Smith wrote to Ericsson and reminded him that the Department had already condemned the Monitor. Among other pleasant things he said:

> Placing the vessel before the enemy's batteries will test the capacity to resist shot and shell; that is the least of the difficulties I apprehend in the success of the vessel.

Be it said, however, to the credit of the board, presided over by Commodore Smith, to judge of the Monitor's merits, they frankly avowed in their report of September 16, 1861, their entire ignorance of the subject they had been selected to consider. How aptly does Commodore Soley, late Assistant Secretary of the Navy, in his work, Battles and Leaders of the Civil War, describe the naval situation of to-day.

> Our Navy—
> Said he—
> was always grasping at the shadow and leaving the substance. The commodore of the period was an august personage, who went to sea in a great flagship surrounded by a conventional grandeur which was calculated to inspire a becoming respect and awe. As the years of peace rolled on this figure became more and more august, more and more conventional. The fatal defects of the system were not noticed until 1861, when the crisis came and the service was unprepared to meet it; and to this cause was largely due the feebleness of naval operations during the first year of the war. There seems to have been a total want of information at the central office of the Administration in reference to the existing demands of naval war and the measures necessary to put the machine into efficient operation.

From the foregoing commentary how easy it is for us to see the lace-harnessed admiral of to-day proudly strutting on the deck of his battle ship gloating over the magnificent spectacle she presents when anchored in front of some metropolis, and inspired by the glorious opportunities his costly craft affords for the display of his gorgeous uniform at swell receptions. [Laughter.]

After Mr. Ericsson had nearly completed the Monitor, the Department sent a "naval expert" who had about as accurate a conception of the vessel as a Fiji Islander has of the doctrine of evolution to "inspect" the work of the great inventor, and as his reputation for genius as a "naval expert" depended on his ability to point out the mistakes of Ericsson, he took a casual glance at the plebeian and vulgar-looking craft and promptly ordered her back on the ways to have some changes made in her machinery, an order which, if complied with, would have delayed her completion thirty days and allowed the Merrimac to save the "lost cause" and Captain Ericsson to forfeit his contract.

Captain Ericsson politely but firmly declined to act on the suggestion of this Napoleon of naval architecture, and he returned to Washington to report the Monitor a failure.

If the consensus of expert naval opinion is to be accepted as the measure of our progress in naval architecture, it is much to be feared that we will never learn how to improve our Navy except by seeing it destroyed. The history of the past certainly does not justify us in accepting the opinions of "naval experts" as conclusive.

Now, Mr. Chairman, another thing before I conclude. I ask any member, I ask every member of this body, suppose that he was aware of the fact that Spain had such a little antagonist as the Holland boat, that is now being exhibited in New York, afloat amongst our battle ships as an enemy, what would we do under the circumstances? Why, of course, you all know the nation would demand that these ships should be withdrawn and put in dock, or placed at some point of safety where this boat could not get at them. We know that they would be placed at the mercy of such a destroyer, and we would consider them absolutely useless for the purpose of warfare against such a vessel, which could hide itself under the waters.

Mr. HILBORN. In the judgment of the gentleman, what kind of boat would be practicable as an antagonist to this Holland submarine boat?

Mr. JONES of Washington. None, sir, that we have now, unless one can be discovered equal in capacity to get away and shield itself under water; and that is just why I insist that we ought not to rush headlong and blindly into the expenditure of such enormous sums of money on vessels which your question admits may be of no value. [Applause.]

And right here I want to call attention to the remarkable efforts put forth by this Government and the Navy Department to ascertain the merits of submarine boats. Some years ago Captain Holland convinced Congress that he could make a submarine boat that would do practical work. It resulted in an appropriation for the purpose of carrying out his designs, being incorporated into the act of March 3, 1893. The Navy Department was authorized to let a contract to Mr. Holland to construct such a craft, but it must be constructed under the supervision of the Navy Department. The man who invented the boat must be instructed how to build it by men who not only knew nothing about the subject, but who have given many evidences of an earnest hope that it would be a failure.

Its construction was authorized more than five years ago. It is still unfinished; but during the progress of the work the Navy Department has been industrious in its efforts to show Captain Holland how a submarine boat should be built. Every bureau in the Department has got its work in on that poor little torpedo boat, until it is filled so full of the mechanical contrivances of naval experts that a man can scarcely get around in it at all. The best information we can get about it is that it is filled with useless machinery, and its efficiency greatly impaired, if not destroyed, by the officious meddling of naval experts. It is not at all unlikely that the abused little craft will fully sustain the present fixed opinion of "naval experts"—that the submarine torpedo boat is wholly impracticable. [Laughter.]

Captain Holland became so disgusted with the apparent purpose of "naval experts" to make the submarine torpedo boat a failure that he organized a company, which, at its own expense, has constructed a boat that has already put the "naval experts" to guessing and made the nation wonder what the battle ship is good for anyhow.

What a shame it would be if this audacious pleteian should have the impudence to actually drive the battle ship from the seas with this hideous and unpoetic craft. No more fat contracts for armor plate. No more grand dinners aboard ship. No more Bradley-Martin receptions on the quarter-deck. No more splendid displays in foreign ports. Oh, this would be too terrible! [Laughter.]

I do not want to be understood as making a dogmatic assertion that the battle ship is of no value except on paper. I do not know, nobody knows, and the consensus of naval expert opinion does not even raise a presumption in its favor. History shows that the consensus of expert naval opinion has generally been wrong, and the history of battle ships thus far, if it proves anything, proves that they are more dangerous to themselves and their friends than to anyone else.

It is but yesterday that England was plunged in grief by the sad incident of the Camperdown and Victoria, when the latter, as the result of a collision which amounted to little more than a mere touch, went to the bottom so suddenly that practically her entire crew was carried with her. The world is still wondering what became of the Reina Regente, that disappeared in a squall which comparatively insignificant craft weathered without remark. Only recently the terrible Rossia, of the Russian fleet, in target practice, split up all her decks from the strain of firing. The Gangoot, of the same fleet, mysteriously went to the bottom while returning from the practice grounds, and there seems to be no other explanation for her disappearance than that the recoil of her own guns parted her plates. This is what they have done to themselves and their friends. What have they done to the enemy?

The battle of the Yalu River is cited by my friend from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] as evidence of their value. Only two battle ships were engaged in that action—the Chen Yuen and the Ting Yuen, of the Chinese fleet. The Japanese had no battle ships whatever, and yet they destroyed five vessels of the Chinese fleet and lost not one themselves.

This mournful chapter in the history of the battle ship certainly does not entitle it to popular favor, "naval experts" to the contrary notwithstanding, and when we are asked to squander $15,000,000 on these battle ships some better reason ought to be advanced than that other nations are throwing away more money this way than we are.

This very bill is a confession that it takes a numerous fleet of small craft, torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers, to protect one battle ship. And for what? So that she may engage one of the enemy's battle ships, which is itself in far greater danger from the little craft than from its big opponent.

Nor do I wish to be understood as asserting that the small craft provided for in this bill, nor the submarine boat of Mr. Holland mark the ultima thule of naval progress. I do not know; but your attention is directed to the fact that while our naval circles are not in the least disturbed by the presence of the big Spanish battle ships at Havana, they are growing hysterical over the approach of Spain's mosquito fleet.

I do not complain of the amount of money appropriated by this bill. I am willing to vote for any sum necessary to properly protect this country. I only complain that no honest or intelligent effort has been made or is being made to ascertain how it ought to be spent, and it does look now as though the intelligent expenditure of a fraction of the cost of a battle ship in developing these small craft would speedily set the battle ship question at rest.

And therefore at this juncture, when predictions are being made that there is a strong probability of war with Spain, the question offers a prospect of speedy solution. Within sixty days after war commences, we will know something of their merits and demerits. Let us profit by this experence, and before investing $15,000,000 in vessels which confessedly can not be completed within three years, and may prove to be practically worthless even before their construction is commenced, learn whether our battle ships are going to be worth anything, of any importance as fighting engines upon the high seas or not. My judgment is that the first naval brush between any two powers that can fight battle ships in an engagment, such as was fought at the Yalu River, will demonstrate what I believe to be a fact, that they are of little value as fighting engines, and they will be as universally condemned by "naval experts" as they are now applauded and approved by the same class of people. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment, so that gentlemen may vote understandingly.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand the amendment just reported, and upon which the committee will first vote, it is the amendment offered by my colleague from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE].

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. DOCKERY. And is not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], which will be voted on later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] offered a substitute for the section.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It is identical with that portion of the gentleman's substitute relating to torpedo boats.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment just read by the Clerk, which was offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE].

Mr. CUMMINGS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will state it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Do I understand that this amendment has been accepted by the chairman of the Naval Committee?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. DOCKERY) there were—ayes 142, noes 48.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The announcement of the result was received with applause.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOOTE. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out in line 11, page 53, after the word "contract," the word "three" and insert the word "four;" insert in line 17, page 53, after the word "Maine," "two armored cruisers, to cost, exclusive of armament, not to exceed $5,000,000."

Mr. FOOTE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment carries one battle ship and two cruisers, in addition to the number carried in the original bill. I know it is generally a good rule to follow the recommendations of the committee; but in view of past events it seems to me that each one of us must take upon himself the responsibility of shaping our naval policy, and if those past events have shown anything, they have taught us that it is absolutely necessary to have a proper navy, and also an adequate coast defense.

No man can at this time commend the policy that has given us our coast defense of to-day and our present Navy. I do not say this in a spirit of criticism. The time for criticism has passed; but I do say, Mr. Chairman, that this House must to-day give us a policy that will give us a navy by which we can not only command the respect of nations, but force that respect, if necessary. We have listened, Mr. Chairman, on the floor of this House to-day and last Saturday to the remarks of the honorable gentleman from Illinois in regard to a navy. Last Saturday he asked this question:

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the gentleman from Maine and the committee that if, in their opinion, it was not wise to authorize the building of three battle ships last December that could not be completed for four years, much less is it wise to do so now, when we have the possibility or probability of immediate war upon our hands, which, if it comes, can not last until these battle ships are completed.

Mr. Chairman, it is a strange policy that says to us to-day that because we can not complete these battle ships before the war is ended, therefore we should not have the battle ships. Mr. Chairman, we are not building these battle ships for peace. We are getting these battle ships for war, if it shall be, and in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois I would ask the gentleman a question.

Was it a wise policy for him to oppose, as he has in the past and as he is to-day, the protection of our Government by an efficient navy, and then witness the humiliating, although patriotic and grand, spectacle of the same gentleman coming before this body and in a storm of enthusiasm ask for and obtain $50,000,000 for coast defense and navy? It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this alone answers the gentleman's own question better than anything else. But I could give another answer for it, if he desires it. Does that gentleman to-day commend the policy of sending abroad to buy ships for the Navy, and have our emissaries scouring the earth in undignified and frightened haste, when for the last four years, Mr. Chairman, our forges have been still, our machine shops silent, and American labor standing on the street corners with folded, brawny arms looking at the gates of our shipyards, which the policy of this House has closed?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LOW. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to continue his remarks five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. FOOTE. Mr. Chairman, the economists of this House have called "Peace!" "Peace!" and there was no peace. They have been industrious in saving the pennies, and to-day we see dollars wasted to get us a navy. Mr. Chairman, we need no warnings more than we have had in the past. Only two years ago this country, with an effrontery that was sublime had it not been ridiculous, threw down the gantlet to the greatest maritime nation on earth, and the God of nations alone prevented us witnessing a war that would have humiliated us in the eyes of the world.

Mr. Chairman, three weeks ago $500,000 was paid for a yacht to be utilized as a torpedo boat, and the other day we purchased tugboats which have been robbed of their vocation of pulling the peaceful barge, and they are now to patrol the coast and protect us from a fifth-rate nation. We have been buying pleasure boats that have only been used to the pop of the champagne cork, and it is proposed to send them out into the ocean, where they may hear the roar of cannon. Mr. Chairman, to-day the flag of the United States is floating half-mast high over what was once a powerful battle ship, and the filth and slime of a foreign harbor is to-day the grave of men who died in the service of that flag. No more beautiful, no more mutely eloquent appeal has ever been made to the people of the United States than the flag that floats half-mast high on the battle ship Maine.

It calls to you gentlemen, it calls to every patriotic American citizen, to give us a policy that shall force respect for the Stars and Stripes; that shall teach the nations of the earth that the Stars and Stripes are a guaranty of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that we will command that respect, if need be, not in the soft tones of diplomacy, but in the roar of cannon. I am for this amendment, Mr. Chairman. Our people are calling for it. Once again the cry has gone out over this land, "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute." I think it is time for this House to heed that cry. The people are willing to pay for a navy, and I think the earnest gentleman from Illinois, who so carefully guards our Treasury against the attacks of men who would rob it, will himself admit that it were better to buy a few torpedo boats and let some of our Soldiers' Homes go for a year or two. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CANNON. I just want to say a word. The gentleman speaks without knowledge and without wisdom. "The gentleman from Illinois" is quite willing to care for the soldiers of the late war, and the Treasury is able to stand it; and I have but little patience for the unfriendly and the unwarranted criticism of the gentleman from New York, who postures here more in aid of contractors than he does for the service of his country. [Applause.]

Mr. FOOTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman state he rises to a question of personal privilege?

Mr. FOOTE. I do.

The gentleman has made a statement, and I doubt very much if he believes it.

Mr. CANNON. It was an apt answer to an uncalled-for, unprovoked, and untrue attack.

Mr. FOOTE. Mr. Chairman, I will still state that I do not believe that he meant to say that I was here in the interest of any contractor.

Mr. CANNON. I said the policy of the gentleman.

Mr. FOOTE. I do not believe he meant to say that. I do not believe he dares to say that I am here in the interest of contractors. I think it is a strange thing, Mr. Chairman, that in our speeches here we are unable to criticise the judgment of others. I have imputed no wrong motive to the gentleman from Illinois. I did say that his judgment was wrong in appropriating for the Soldiers' Homes at this time. I say there is nothing wrong in it, but I say it was poor policy. I impute no base motive to him.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, in propounding the question to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that apparently has precipitated so long a debate, when I asked him if he were not content to allow the three battle ships to remain within the provisions of the bill and to admit of the construction of double the amount of torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers, it was propounded for the direct purpose and to attract the attention of this House to what I believed to be a serious matter.

That question was propounded with the hope that I now am glad to see realized, namely, that not only the three battle ships would be secured, but that the number of torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers would be doubled. Seven long days you have discussed this measure, and the strongest flotilla that has ever gone out from any nation on earth has come 1,000 miles nearer to our shores. You are sitting here hour by hour discussing the merits of the battle ship, comparing its strength and efficiency with that of the torpedo boat, knowing, I say, and I say it kindly, so little of either that it seems to me an idle waste of time for men to compare or even to intimate which is the stronger arm of the naval service.

Let me appeal to your reason when I say that both are necessary and no navy is complete without a full complement of either. The world has made its progression, and science has moved along the line of naval construction as well as any other, and I say to you that the battle ship of to-day is as necessary almost as the air of freedom and the torpedo boat as necessary as national independence. Each is dependent upon the other. No battle ship ever made by the hand of man can alone withstand for an hour the assault of the mosquito fleet, and neither can the mosquito fleet with safety assault a battle ship unless it has a battle ship behind it as a support.

But let us cease discussion. Let us give to the hands of the Government now the opportunity of moving forward in this line. There is an emergency. Do people believe that this flotilla of Spain is coming to our shores to pay us a friendly visit? We have received and paid "friendly visits" enough to Spain. Are gentlemen content to believe that they are coming here to carry away the provisions that a charitable and Christian nation shall donate to the starving subjects of Spain? Or do you not believe that they are coming here with the direct intent and purpose not only to assault, but to destroy as much of this nation, its lives and property, as may be within their power?

I am glad to pay my compliments to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I believe in his probity, in his honesty of purpose. Ofttimes I commend his clear and keen judgment, but I say to him that had he been as wise and patriotic and as ready to fight in the past six years as he was to-day upon an imaginary insult from the gentleman from New York [Mr. FOOTE], he would have already provided for the Navy and need not to have trembled at the approach of any navy in the world.

There is no necessity, however, that we should discuss this question for a single hour. Suppose it takes three years to build a battle ship; what of it? If war shall come and continue, we will need them. If there shall be no war, then they will be ours and ready for any other emergency that may arise. Let us act and act quickly, and leave to the genius and skill of our naval constructors the task of completing the work for which this appropriation shall be made. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, the committee would like to vote upon this amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the amendment is exhausted. The Clerk will report the amendment again for the information of the committee.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOOTE) there were—ayes 40, noes 90.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I want to offer. I understand the gentleman from Illinois has an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the section will be perfected first.

Mr. STEELE. Then I move to strike out the word "three," in line 11, and insert "two."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11, page 53, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "two."

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that I can add anything to the proposition by discussing it; it is a business proposition. Before I sit down I want to make a motion with a view of getting through the business. I think the House understands how it wants to vote on every paragraph in this bill, and for that reason I am going to take advantage of having the floor to make a motion that all debate on this paragraph and amendments be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. BROMWELL. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This is certainly a very unusual proceeding for the gentleman from Indiana to undertake to assume charge of this bill. I object seriously to the gentleman imperiling the very excellent provisions of the bill by assuming its management in any such way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] rose to a point of order. He will state it.

Mr. BROMWELL. My point is that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] was recognized to offer an amendment, not for the purpose of submitting a motion to cut off the privilege of debate on the part of the rest of us who have amendments which we wish to offer and discuss. The gentleman has choked me off once to-day, and I do not propose to be choked off again.

Mr. STEELE. I would as soon undertake to choke off Niagara as the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROMWELL. "The gentleman from Ohio" is going to talk.

Mr. STEELE. I know he is going to talk. He has demonstrated that from the beginning of the session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments be now closed.

Mr. STEELE. Oh, no; I said in thirty minutes. I am willing to make it one hour.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The proposition is to close all debate on what?

The CHAIRMAN. On the paragraph and amendments.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, I hope that motion will be voted down.

Mr. STEELE. I am willing to modify the proposition by substituting one hour for thirty minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hope all propositions of that kind will be voted down.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understood that I was recognized before the gentleman from Indiana submitted the motion he has just made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Indiana had surrendered the floor; but in that respect the Chair was mistaken. The gentleman, while occupying the floor, has the right to make the motion which he does.

Mr. STEELE. I will withdraw my motion, preferring to have a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] is recognized.

Mr. STEELE. I have not given up my right to the floor. I am holding the floor. My time has not expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Missouri has been recognized.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the Chair please state what is before the Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman from Missouri has been recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I did not know but that the gentleman from Indiana had withdrawn my bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. I believe it has impressed the mind of every man on this floor that somebody ought to have withdrawn the bill from the gentleman from Maine since he took charge of it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the subject before the House is one of very great importance. It is divisible, it seems to me, into two lesser subjects. One is in reference to a general policy concerning the Navy; the other is in reference to what might be called emergency legislation.

The building of battle ships may be good as part of a general policy, but it has no regard for the present situation. It is clear that the battle ships can not be completed in less than two years, perhaps not in less than three years. So that the provision made for battle ships, whatever it may be, will, in the nature of things, be a permanent provision, without special reference to the present condition of affairs in this country.

As to the lesser vessels—torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers—I understand that legislation on that subject may have relation to the present needs of the nation, as well as to the general efficiency of the Navy in the future.

It seems to be an open and disputed question as to the relative value of these two classes of vessels. The better opinion, perhaps, as expressed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON], is that the one is the complement of the other, and that a navy, to be properly equipped, to be a good navy, must contain both classes of vessels—the battle ships and these smaller boats for their protection, and for the destruction of the enemy's battle ships and little boats.

The impression seems to be abroad in the country—and it was voiced in this Chamber but a few minutes ago by my colleague from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE]—that there are speeding toward these shores now some dangerous samples of the lesser war craft. That gentleman stated—and it has been stated repeatedly—that naval officers, those best qualified to judge in such matters, are apprehensive as to what may result to our great ships if the Spanish torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers shall reach our waters in safety. That is a subject, Mr. Chairman, that has reference to the present—has reference to matters that ought to be attended to at once, that ought to have been attended to ere now.

As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON] said in his eloquent speech, we expose our country to great danger when we quietly sit by and allow a secret enemy, soon to become an open enemy, to send here to attack us a fleet which may be denominated, and in technical phrase perhaps is denominated, a "mosquito fleet," yet one exceedingly formidable.

Mr. Chairman, we know to our sorrow that but a very short time since a magnificent ship belonging to the American Navy, manned by a crew of gallant American seamen, was blown up and destroyed in what was supposed to be—falsely supposed to be—the friendly harbor of Havana. A torpedo or a mine, such an engine of destruction as these small boats can set loose and turn with deadly effect upon our mighty ships, wrought the ruin of that splendid vessel and a destruction of life among its brave crew unparalleled in the history of the American Navy.

Now, sir, when such things can be done, when such things have been done, and done recently, is there not great and grave danger, in these trying times, of trusting to "diplomacy" and to the supposed "friendly disposition" of Spain? "Diplomacy" and "confidence" have increased our provocation and have caused further complications. They have not been an approach to honorable peace. Is there not grave danger in trusting to the diplomacy which has not produced good results rather than in trusting to our own strong arm and to our mighty agents of war now ready for the high seas?

The grave matter before the country at this moment is the approach of the Spanish flotilla toward our shores—a fleet approaching, as we believe, with hostile intent. What are they coming here for? Not for a mere holiday visit. That is manifest. For what, then, is this visit intended? Not for the purpose of making further war against the unfortunate insurgents in Cuba, who have no ships, but manifestly in preparation for a struggle with us, for the purpose of menacing and attacking us. And meanwhile, Mr. Chairman, what are we doing?

Unfortunately the representatives of the American people must rely for information as to what is going on upon other sources than those on which they should rely and from which they should receive intelligence. They have to gather their information as to these matters not from the sources whence we ought to get it, from the governmental channels, but from the newspapers of the country, day after day. Perhaps orders have been issued to intercept that hostile flotilla and prevent its nearer approach to our shores. If we stop, disperse, sink, or capture that Spanish flotilla, war will be averted, or it will be begun and ended with a single blow. Perhaps, again, no such orders have been given. Perhaps, instead of relying upon our own guns, of long range and deadly force, and upon our splendid ships with their strong armor, with which we are ready to meet any foe that comes—instead of relying upon the brave seamen who man our great ships of war——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that my colleague may be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Missouri will have five minutes more.

Mr. DE ARMOND. As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, perhaps, instead of relying upon the immense agencies of defense and protection—or of aggression, if need be—that we already possess, we have been depending absolutely upon the broken reed of diplomacy; and perhaps that dependence may continue until real danger shall menace us face to face. [Applause.]

If war is to result, if we have to fight, if we have the battle to brave and the contest to endure, why should we not meet the enemy under circumstances most favorable to ourselves? [Applause.] Why ought we to delay and wait until the foe is best prepared to strike us with telling effect? [Renewed applause.]

When an American ship goes down, American treasure sinks with it. When an American ship goes down, the healthy, strong, and noble manhood of America goes down with it. The best protection for a nation is in the might, the patriotism, of its citizens. The best protection of our shores in time of danger is not to be found in idly waiting; not in resting upon a hope of peace, to be derived from diplomacy and confidence, but by being aggressive and striking while we have the advantage. [Applause.] When war comes on between nations, it is not a mere contest for points.

You can not liken it unto a battle between trained giants of pugilism or the contest upon the so-called "field of honor," with pistols equally good in the hands of men well matched. It is not a question as to which of two antagonists—both equally strong, both equally vigorous—shall prevail. But the question is one as to which nation, with war possible, shall be first and best prepared for it; which nation shall see farthest into the future; which when danger threatens shall meet it halfway, strike the first blow, avert war by disarming its adversary, and thus without sacrifice maintain itself in the attitude of superiority. [Applause.]

Now, it was said a little while ago in this debate that if war should result from our present complications with Spain it would not be a war of three months, but that it might be a war of three years. I can not believe that. I can not believe that the mightiest nation on the face of this earth can be held at bay for any considerable length of time by one of the weakest and most contemptible countries under God's heavens. [Applause.] But I do believe that every hostile bark that crosses the Atlantic brings with it a new danger.

I do not believe that all the Spanish power, all its naval force and land force, could resist us for a short time even, much less wrest the victory from us—at least, if we do not invite disaster and recklessly await its coming. But I do believe that every time another vessel crosses the briny deep from hostile Spain to this country greater efforts will be required on our part and on the part of our people to maintain the proud position we have assumed, and the greater, I fear, may be the expenditure of the treasure and the blood of our countrymen.

Let us protect ourselves, my friends, by striking before we are stricken. [Applause.] Let us not wait. We have waited too long. We do not know—I think we ought to know; I believe the representatives of the people ought to know everything that any branch of the Government knows, especially in trying times [applause]—we do not know, but let us hope, if we can, that proper precautions have been taken, that proper measures of energy are on foot, and that what I apprehend as serious danger will be avoided.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I should like a few minutes more.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague have five minutes more.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I must ask the committee to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. In my judgment, the committee desires to close the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The Chair was addressing me. I made a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked immediately if there was objection to the request.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I made a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair heard no objection, and hears none.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the motion was not in order, then the Chair need not entertain it. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the main question before this body at this time is as to the relative value of the different kinds of craft which go to make up a navy. I listened, with interest, to the remarks of my friend from Washington [Mr. JONES] when he spoke of that wonder of submarine architecture, the Holland boat, which, under the water of bay or ocean, may move silently, swiftly, unseen, on its errand of destruction.

It has seemed to me in reading descriptions of that craft and in hearing gentlemen speak of it, and knowing as we all know of the terrible power of the explosives which these small boats can launch against the greatest—realizing as we must realize that electricity and all the combined and mighty agencies of nature are at hand for the fashioning of resistless engines and missiles—it hardly is wise for this Government, in the time for immediate action with reference to a present emergency, to provide rather for a distant future, when, perhaps, the provision will be needless or useless. If war should occur, it will soon be demonstrated what the value of the modern battle ship is.

No man doubts, no man can doubt, the value of the modern agents of destruction known as the torpedo boat and the torpedo-boat destroyer. Silently and stealthily, in the watches of the night, over the still waters, these swift boats proceed upon their errand of devastation. Insignificant in themselves, they carry such mighty agencies of destruction that the proudest battle ship that ever floated is as a mere paper box when assailed by them. It is simply a trap, or a magnificent grave beneath the waters, for those who unfortunately happen to be on board when the destroyer strikes.

Now, these little boats can be built quickly; whether quickly enough, I do not know; but legislation in the direction of preparing that which can be prepared quickly, and above all, prompt action in the use of that which we have, will go far toward rendering our magnificent battle ships safe now and perhaps useless in the future.

When a great, unwieldy ship is on the waters, how helpless it is if it must be attended by a fleet or squadron of these small boats for its own protection. If unable to protect itself against the swift torpedo boats, trivial in appearance but mighty in effect, is it the agency upon which we should bestow millions of dollars and years of time for either offensive or aggressive purposes?

How much more in keeping with the theory of our Government and with the simplicity of our institutions to rely upon the genius of our people, and upon these swift little destroyers that are here, there, and everywhere when an emergency requires, than to rest our hopes upon those great, massive floating machines—the huge battle ships—which may be a protection; which may be a menace; which, though great engines of destruction, may prove destructive merely to those on board them.

But above all things, Mr. Chairman, let me again, if I may, impress upon the House that the danger to be provided against is the danger which menaces us now—the danger speeding toward us with the Spanish flotilla. Every hour and every minute across the waters of the Atlantic is coming fast that danger. Every hour and every minute it is closer to us, and every hour and every minute we are less secure in consequence of it. I hope that those who have influence, who have the ear of the officers now directing and controlling the Government (largely to the exclusion of the legislative branch), may exert their influence, that if that has not been done which ought to be done for our protection, it may be done without further delay. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BODINE. I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri, a member of the committee, offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding in line 17, page 53, after the word "Maine," the following:

"And one of said battle ships to be named the Missouri."

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. BROMWELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman from Missouri has finished discussing his amendment, the Chair will recognize the gentleman to offer his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order against the amendment. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. DINGLEY. That it is new legislation.

Mr. OGDEN. I would like to hear the amendment read.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let me state to the Chair that the law now authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to give names to these ships, and this is a proposition to take that power from the Secretary of the Navy; and if it should be commenced, there will be no end to it.

Mr. BROMWELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine whether his objection also applies to the name "Maine?"

Mr. DINGLEY. If there had been a proposition of that kind, I should have objected.

Mr. BROMWELL. There is such a proposition in the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman knows the particular reason why it was given that name. It would be subject to a point of order if the point of order had been made, but it was inserted because of the destruction of the vessel of that name.

Mr. BROMWELL. I understand; but I ask if he is raising the point of order on the naming of the Maine by the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. I made no point of order on that at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Maine whether there is any law which authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to name battle ships?

Mr. DINGLEY. There is. It is printed in the Revised Statutes. I can not cite it at present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs that there is no such statute.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The member of the Committee on Naval Affairs was misinformed.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Maine upon the proposition, there being a provision in the bill which possibly might have been subject to a point of order had it been made; but not having been made, the Chair would like to hear the gentleman.

Mr. DINGLEY. But this is not a proposed amendment to that provision in the bill; it is a proposition to insert a new legislative provision.

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think we had better leave it to the Secretary of the Navy, where the law leaves it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of whether it is better to allow the Secretary of the Navy to name battle ships can not be considered by the Chair.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. The only question with the Chair is whether this amendment is in order; and there being a provision in the bill for the naming of the battle ship Maine——

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that this is a proposition to name one other of the vessels than the one to be named the Maine, and to name it the Missouri, or some other State.

Mr. BROMWELL. Ohio.

Mr. PAYNE. That is the proposition. Now, the fact that one of these vessels is named the Maine does not furnish any justification for this amendment, because this is not a proposition to amend the name of the vessel that is to be called the Maine. If the gentleman from Missouri had offered an amendment to substitute the word "Missouri" for the word "Maine," then it would be in order, because it would then be germane to the provision already in the bill. But it is not germane to any provision in the bill. It is to name another one of these vessels the Missouri. Now, it being admitted, Mr. Chairman—if I can have the attention of the Chair for a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is listening.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). That the general law in the Revised Statutes authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to name any war ship that is built after the authorization, of course giving him discretion to select the name for any such vessel. That is the fact, and the Chairman must have had personal knowledge of the naming of those two new vessels that have been bought recently by the Government. It being admitted that the law now gives in effect to the Secretary of the Navy that discretion, this amendment would take away that discretion; and the House itself and the Congress, by legislation on an appropriation bill, would give to this vessel the name of Missouri instead of leaving it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. It seems to me very plain the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, as the Naval Committee has been cited as an authority, I desire to read the law, which possibly might have some indirect bearing on this subject [laughter], although I do not feel sure. [Renewed laughter.]

This is section 1531 of the Revised Statutes, passed June 12, 1858:

SEC. 1531. The vessels of the Navy shall be named by the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President, according to the following rule:

Sailing vessels of the first class shall be named after the States of the Union, those of the second class after the rivers, those of the third class after the principal cities and towns, and those of the fourth class as the President may direct.

Steamships of the first class shall be named after the States of the Union, those of the second class after the rivers and principal cities and towns, and those of the third class as the President may direct.

Mr. DOCKERY. The provision of law the gentleman has just read would be a sufficient reason for leaving out of the paragraph in the bill the authorization for the naming of one of the battle ships Maine——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It would have been out of order; but nobody supposed that any man would raise a point of order——

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman from Maine will allow me and not interrupt me——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine (continuing). If anybody wants to make a point of order upon it, I will ask to have the provision for the naming of the Maine withdrawn.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman from Maine will quietly take his seat, having had the floor four-fifths of the time since we began to consider this bill, I will complete my statement; and, after having completed it, the gentleman will observe, as is his habit, he has violated the decorum of debate——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I shall call the gentleman to order. I am not here to take a lesson from him.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). And that there is no foundation whatever for his criticism. Nobody expects the gentleman from Maine to take a lesson from me.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I should not go to Missouri for it.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted by the "amiable" chairman of the committee, no gentleman on the floor criticises in the slightest degree the Naval Committee for reporting a provision to name one of the battle ships Maine. On the contrary, we indorse and applaud it. Similar action was taken in a former instance after the Kearsarge went down on a reef somewhere in the southern waters. The Naval Committee then authorized one of the new battle ships to be named after the vessel which had been destroyed.

Mr. Chairman, I will now come to the point of order. There is a provision here that one of the battle ships should be named Maine. It was subject to a point of order because it changed existing law. No one raised it, because no one desired to do so. Every Representative on this floor approved of the action of the committee in reporting that provision. Now, then, the provision being in the bill, it must be subject to amendment. The bill provides that one of the battle ships shall be named the Maine, and it is competent and germane under the rules to amend the paragraph so that another of the battle ships shall be named after some other sovereign State of the Union.

Mr. STEELE. You say you applaud naming one of the battle ships Maine. That being the case, would it not be in line with the same sentiment not to take advantage of it——

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, I have no apology to offer for asking the American House of Representatives to name one of the battle ships for the splendid Commonwealth of Missouri.

Mr. STEELE. Certainly not, and I would not want you to do it.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to address the committee but a few moments. The paragraph has opened up and made germane this amendment; in other words, the question of naming battle ships is in the paragraph. It is part of the paragraph and a part of the subject-matter, and is there without objection, there by unanimous consent. The subject-matter of that paragraph is the naming of battle ships. Then why can not an amendment to that paragraph be made? The fact that one battle ship is to be named Maine opens up the whole question, because it opens up the subject-matter of naming battle ships.

We do not desire to offer an amendment to that proposition to name one of them Maine; we do not object to it; but it thereby interjects into the paragraph the subject-matter of naming battle ships. The Naval Committee and this committee have reasons of their own, and good reasons, for permitting the subject-matter of naming battle ships to be ingrafted into the paragraph. How can gentlemen say it is not germane and not a part of the paragraph? It is a part of the subject-matter, and hence, having been opened up, this amendment is clearly in order.

Mr. DALZELL. Has the Chair ruled upon this question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, if it will in any sense relieve the Chair or relieve this bill, I will ask unanimous consent to return to that portion of the paragraph in which the provision for naming one of the battle ships Maine is made, in order that any gentleman can make it the subject of a point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Oh, that is nothing but buncombe and the gentleman knows it. I object to it if nobody else does.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that while the law expressly provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall name the battle ships, the provision inserted in the bill was subject to a point of order if it had been raised; but not having been raised, it would be permissible to strike out the word "Maine" and insert any other name. That does not, however, permit the changing of the law so as to name more than one ship. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LACEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, page 55, strike out "within sixty days from the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof "within the discretion of the President;" so as to read: "Provided further, That the contracts for the construction of the vessels herein provided for shall be made within the discretion of the President."

Mr. LACEY. Upon this amendment I wish the attention of the Committee of the Whole for a moment. We are proposing, in the peculiar situation in which the country is placed to-day, to vote an appropriation of fourteen or fifteen million dollars for battle ships, and to require that the work for which this appropriation is made be put under contract within sixty days from this time. It is an old adage that "diplomacy takes three steps in a bushel basket." It goes slowly. But war moves fast. We do not know what the situation will be sixty days from now. It may be that by that time we shall not want our shipyards obstructed with three battle ships that can not be used for three years to come. It may therefore be the worst possible policy for us to tie up $15,000,000 for battle ships that can not possibly be used in the war which we are expecting—a war which certainly is "in the air," if it has not made its actual appearance upon the sea.

Now, as to battle ships, they are to some extent an experiment. We know that the Victoria lies at the bottom of the Mediterranean. We know that $500 worth of dynamite or some other explosive has destroyed a battle ship as she lay in Havana harbor—a battle ship that cost four or five million dollars.

We do not know what will come out of the war prospect that we are all thinking about and talking of. But if war does come, it will not be between Chinese and Japanese. It will be between men who have known war in the past. It will be between men who will think fast, who will invent new explosives, who will contrive all the engines of warlike destruction and contrive them rapidly. It may therefore in sixty days from this time be demonstrated to have been a great mistake to put these great battle ships upon the stocks. In no event can they be used within two years.

We have placed recently in the power and control of the President $50,000,000. Let us also put under his control the time of making the $15,000,000 contracts, trusting to his sagacity and discretion to use the money or not as may seem wise in view of events which may rapidly develop, instead of binding him now to make a contract for certain classes of vessels and to do so at once.

Within the next two weeks we may be required to make many military and naval contracts. Why should we bind ourselves thus to a contract to be made within sixty days for ships for some future war? Let us rather push those works of immediate necessity, and make the contracts for two years hence, without the rush required by a sixty-day limit in which to select contractors. It seems to me that this short limit is a mistake. Even though we may not make any change in the construction of our battle ships, we may at least lodge this discretion with the President, where it will be absolutely safe, and where we must trust it in the end.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on this amendment very briefly. The reason that this proviso was inserted in the bill is precisely that which has actuated the committee on former occasions in providing against unnecessary delay on the part of officers of the Department in making plans and carrying on work. I have not had time to look over the various bills, but I think we have invariably, or almost invariably, put upon provisions of this kind a limitation similar to this. The propriety of such a limitation in this case ought to be obvious. We wanted to give the House an assurance that these vessels would be begun as early as possible. The provisions of the bill have been submitted to leading officials of the Navy Department for several weeks; yet, so far as I know, no suggestion or intimation has come from any official source that there was any objection to this proviso. I doubt whether any such information has reached the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I will ask him whether either the President or the Secretary of the Navy or any of the responsible officers of the Navy Department have requested a change of the bill in this respect?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman—and I hope he will allow me the courtesy of just a quarter of a minute to answer him——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will allow you all the time you want.

Mr. CANNON. I have not had a conference with the Secretary of the Navy touching this matter, nor has any suggestion come from the Secretary to me on this subject. But I want to ask my friend in the utmost good faith—as this bill compels the making of a contract in sixty days, and as we are to have a great many of the stress ships built as rapidly as possible—whether the gentleman thinks it wise that this stress work——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What "stress work?"

Mr. CANNON. I mean the torpedo boats and the torpedo-boat destroyers.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They are not going to put any "stress" on American builders.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it wise to place it in the power of private shipbuilders, by combination or otherwise, to force upon the Secretary of the Navy the making of a contract, although it might be an unreasonable one?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not understand the gentleman at all. If he desires to intimate that the interests of contractors were in any possible way thought of by the committee, there is not any fact to warrant any such intimation, and the gentleman ought not to make it.

Mr. CANNON. I do not desire in the slightest degree to convey any such intimation. But if the result of this provision, when it shall become law, would be to put the Department at the mercy of contractors, then it seems to me the President had better have a little discretion in this matter.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, Mr. Chairman, "see how plain a tale will put the gentleman down."

Mr. CANNON. I am down. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There is not one line or one word in this bill that compels the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Navy to act in any haste whatever.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I ask to have the proviso read in answer to that.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I understand what the proviso is. When I spoke my impression was that we had required that these proposals should be opened within sixty days.

But, Mr. Chairman, when we authorized the construction of the first three battle ships—and, mark you, at that time we had not built one—my impression is that within thirty days from the authorization, or, indeed, within exactly thirty days, we had the three vessels under contract. Now, we have had experience in such construction. We have the plant, and it is an open secret that these ships are practically designed to-day. There is no reason, as we suppose, for any delay in their construction.

Now, so far as the committee is concerned, and so far as I am concerned, we care very little whether the vessels are contracted for in sixty days or in ninety days. But with reference to the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], I am unalterably opposed to it. The Congress of the United States is not going to put three battle ships into this bill with the understanding that either the President or the Secretary of the Navy or anyone else may use his discretion as to whether they shall be built at all or not. We have put them into the bill because we want them built.

We are not at all strenuous; and if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] can suggest any objection from any official of the Government who has ever had anything to do with the business, or from the President or any officer in authority in the Navy Department who has had anything to do with the matter, then I will yield with pleasure. I am not at all strenuous, I repeat. But it was put into the bill by the committee with the desire of expressing our assurance to Congress that we intended to have these vessels constructed as speedily as possible.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Is this provision contemplated to secure the contracts for these vessels within sixty days after the passage of the act or within sixty days after the taking effect of the bill?

Mr. LACEY. It requires the contract to be let within sixty days after the passage.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The language of the bill is:

Provided further, That the contract for the construction of the vessels herein provided for shall be made within sixty days from the passage of this act.

I want to say that, in my judgment, that is ample time. I am under the impression and fully believe, Mr. Chairman, that the Secretary of the Navy would, under this provision, have ample time. But if it shall be found to be too short a period, there is abundant opportunity and ample time to have the matter corrected before the passage of the bill through another body, and it can be attended to there.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GAINES. I would like to have the amendment again reported, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment, if there be no objection.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. GAINES. I would like to be heard upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY] has been recognized.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the committee, I have not been taking up your time in the consideration of this bill; but the pending amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, in my judgment, is well worthy the attention of every man who is responsible for legislation here.

The bill, as it reads, not only provides for the construction of three battle ships, which shall be contracted for within sixty days from the passage of the act, but it provides that every vessel that you have made appropriation for in the bill, twenty-seven in all, shall be under contract within sixty days from its passage. Thus you are forcing on the Government, in my judgment, very unbusinesslike and embarrassing conditions. I do not believe, I do not think, that there is any business man within the confines of this nation who believes it possible by such haste to secure all of the points and safeguards involved in contracting to the best advantage the three battle ships herein provided for. Neither is it safe to force the contracting for the gunboats and minor vessels also provided for within the sixty-day limit of the bill. It seems to me that it is a most unbusinesslike step. For my part, I believe it will be safer to leave the time to the President rather than force on this Government the duty of letting the contracts without due time for consideration.

If you will read carefully the provisions of the bill, you will find that it provides for the apportionment of these three large vessels, one of which may go, under certain provisions, to the Pacific coast, and the other two are supposed to be let to builders on the Atlantic seaboard. We have, I think, three great shipbuilding establishments in this land. We are virtually apportioning by this bill one ship to each of these contractors, and saying to the officers of the Government, "You must let the contracts within sixty days"—they have no volition in the matter—and also forcing the contracting of all the others, thus leaving our Government yards idle.

I hope the members of the committee, therefore, will support the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa as a safeguard in behalf of the Government and the taxpayers, adopt the amendment, and give the President a little discretion and time to protect the Government and the Treasury against a hasty piece of unwise legislation, which would necessarily be involved in the passage of this bill in its present form. Let him have an opportunity of making the best contracts he can make, and do not force upon him the necessity of such unwise haste.

I appeal, then, to all the members, when you vote, to stand by the amendment and not force this provision upon the Department. If the committee bill passes providing for three war ships and torpedo boats, which number has been increased by the amendment, and you provide that the contract for these vessels shall be let within sixty days, you are certainly violating a business principle. Such haste no man would pursue in his own private affairs, and the people of the country will hold you responsible for it. [Applause.]

I hope, therefore, the amendment will be supported as a necessary safeguard to the country, and also permit the construction of some of the smaller vessels by the Government in its own yards.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to be heard on the other amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And authority is also granted to the President to order the construction of vessels immediately on the passage of this act, if he deems it necessary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of giving the largest amount of authority to the Administration, as far as it affects the proposals contained in this bill, so that the initiative may be taken immediately upon the passage of this bill for the construction of the vessels authorized by its provisions.

I am glad that this House has at last come to a realization of the dangers that confront this country. A few weeks ago the Spanish flotilla, consisting of battle ships, torpedo boats, and torpedo-boat destroyers left the other side of the ocean, and, if I am informed correctly, the United States Government has not a single torpedo-boat destroyer to cope with this fleet. Shame upon such a policy! We claim to be the proudest and wealthiest nation in this world to-day, yet we have but a sixth-class navy. [Applause.]

The comparative summary of the principal fleets of the world, built and building, just published, shows that England has 680 vessels; France, 539 vessels; Russia, 329 vessels; Italy, 293 vessels; Germany, 234 vessels, and the United States but 105 vessels.

For the year 1897–98 England leads with appropriation amounting to $26,500,000, and she will complete during the present year 15 battle ships, equal to three times our present number, in addition to the large number she has had before, 12 first-class cruisers, 9 second-class cruisers, 10 third-class cruisers, 56 torpedo-boat destroyers, and other boats to the number of 117.

France is building 17 vessels, at a cost of some $16,000,000, and Japan, a practically unheard of nation until a few years ago, is building 4 large first-class battle ships, 4 armored cruisers, 6 protected cruisers, 9 torpedo-boat destroyers, and 13 torpedo boats. Spain this year will complete 2 first-class armored cruisers, 1 protected cruiser, 2 gunboats, and 6 torpedo-boat destroyers. She is also building, I am informed, 4 armored cruisers, 4 protected cruisers, 4 gunboats, 4 torpedo boats, and 3 battle ships, to be fitted with boilers and guns in France.

When we recognize the fact that it takes two years or more to build a first-class battle ship in this country, while the same kind of a vessel can be completed within a year in England, our parsimony and delay seem almost criminal.

During the present Administration there has been more of a disposition to produce a surplus for the Dingley bill than to provide adequate defense and protection to the Government. This was very vividly illustrated a couple of months ago when the war cloud was not so imminent, but near enough, in my judgment, to have demanded more patriotic action in the consideration of the fortifications bill.

The members of this House who represented constituencies which bordered along the coast begged for an increase in the amounts allowed by the committee, so that the cities and towns lying along our coast in all sections of the country could receive proper protection in the matter of coast defense. Although the members of the Republican party in this House had guaranteed within a reasonable time to free Cuba, and though they knew that Spain would never give up that island without a great struggle, in which this Government would surely be involved, the leaders of that party opposed these wise and necessary provisions, and it was only through a request of the President of the United States, when war was actually upon us, that money was appropriated for this purpose.

I do not believe the people of this country will indorse such a policy, and I am in favor, war or no war, of placing our Navy on a footing that will enable us at all times to maintain the proud and honorable position that we occupy among the nations of the world. [Applause.] It was only the other day that this House made provision for suitable dry docks, after we had been humiliated again and again by seeing our vessels seek foreign shores to be properly docked and repaired.

This policy of inaction by this Government could not be illustrated to better advantage than by depicting the condition of affairs that has existed at the Charlestown Navy-Yard the past dozen years. Although this plant is considered to be one of the best in the whole United States, with a water front unsurpassed and buildings equal to those of any navy-yard in this country, in a neighborhood where reside the most skilled and most intelligent mechanics in this country, if not in the world, the grass has been growing within its walks, and until very recently the sound of the hammer and the glow of the fire have been absent.

Since the occupation of the office of Secretary of the Navy by a Massachusetts man, small vessels have been sent there for repair, it being impossible to repair the larger ones, owing to the inadequacy of the machinery. When I first became a member of this body I attempted to secure appropriations for the putting in proper shape, for the repair of all classes of vessels, all departments of this yard, but the hostility of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Herbert, who was friendly to the Norfolk Navy-Yard, made it impossible to secure any recognition from the committee.

I am glad to say that in the present bill we have succeeded in obtaining an appropriation of $100,000 for these different departments, and when this money becomes available the Charlestown Navy-Yard should resume its old-time condition of activity and the hum of industry be resumed.

This is a wise policy. We are not a second-class nation in any respect. The people will not begrudge liberal appropriations, but they will hold to a strict accountability any party that will not properly appreciate the wants and necessities of a great Government like ours.

We read in the papers every day of the millions that are being made in Wall street by stock manipulators who gamble on the complications of the Government. These men do not wish a large navy, because it might encourage us to defend ourselves if attacked. They consider it unwise to be prepared to resent an insult lest their bonds and stocks should fluctuate.

This class of men have too long controlled the policies of this country. The people have begun to make themselves heard, and from one end of this broad land to the other comes the cry for a wise, businesslike, and liberal appropriation for our Navy, to the end that the flag of this Government, wherever it floats, will receive the respect which is demanded for it by the freest, bravest, and most enlightened people on the face of God's earth. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in opposition to this amendment. The clouds that now hang over the nation may roll away within sixty days and they may not. To provide for an emergency, a safety valve, is wisdom. "In time of peace prepare for war" is a wise and logical maxim. Self-preservation is the first law of nature, and is as applicable to nations as to men.

Two hundred and sixty-six American seamen blown into eternity without a chance to fight for their lives or to demonstrate their valor on the decks of their noble battle ship, together with threatened war, have at last aroused our country to a sense of its danger because of a lack of coast defense and naval vessels.

Mr. Chairman, history records that the greatness of ancient Greece and Rome was largely attributable to the extent of their coast lines and their naval power. While our country is richly endowed with mountainous mines of wealth and coast lines more extensive than any other civilized nation in the world, with the commerce of the world floating in our every port, with the flags of all nations vying with each other in carrying to and fro the products of our land and of the world, making this one of the most prosperous countries on the globe, yet we should not close our eyes to the fact that we are weak in coast defense and in naval power.

I would not only vote for three battle ships, but for ten, and with them thirty torpedo boats.

As I said in the beginning, the clouds that now hang over us may roll away; but we should prepare for future emergencies. The navy of a nation should be in proportion to its commerce and the extent of its coast line. Herein, and herein alone, is the defect in the American shield of defense; and I would not, Mr. Chairman, vote for this amendment. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the amendment for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted.

Mr. LACEY. I ask that the amendment to the amendment and the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment and the amendment to the amendment, and the committee will in the meantime be in order.

The amendment to the amendment and the amendment were again reported.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HANDY. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment can not be entertained at this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the last amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment to the amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is a very good plan for the members of this committee to be very careful before voting upon this amendment. There have been added to this bill by the committee to-day 12 additional vessels, which provides altogether for 27 vessels. Now, this provision provides that the contract shall be made within sixty days for the construction of 27 vessels. What business man would do that in his own affairs? It means, if we are to have war, war prices will be paid for all of 27 vessels, and the 3 battle ships that will not be ready for three years are to be contracted for at war prices. There are only three great shipbuilding companies in this country, and if these ships are to be contracted for here at once, simply because of the danger of war, this committee ought not to lose their heads on a business proposition and be forced to paying war prices for the 27 vessels.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No; I do not want to be interrupted.

We are perfectly willing to appropriate money and pay out every dollar of money necessary for making preparations for war; but what business man is there in this House who wants to say that the Government shall be placed in position that it may be compelled through combinations of shipbuilding companies to pay war prices if we are compelled to let these contracts within sixty days? This may occur should our great shipbuilding companies enter into a combination, should they combine together for high prices. Under this provision here in this bill the Government is powerless, and must let the contracts notwithstanding the fact that possibly the price is twice as much as it ought to be.

Mr. HANDY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have only five minutes. I will answer it if it is a short question.

Mr. HANDY. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if the limit of cost of every one of these vessels is not fixed in the bill?

Mr. HEMENWAY. But if the limit of cost is fixed in the bill, you have fixed it up high or you would not have fixed it at all; and you know, and every other gentleman on this floor knows, that in this country we are not in a condition to build these ships thus rapidly; and as a business proposition there is not a man upon this floor who, if acting for himself, would let these contracts, if he had to pay the bill himself, who would limit himself to sixty days in which to let the contract.

I say that this business should be done as private business is done; and I am satisfied that no business man, no man on this floor, in letting great contracts that he had to pay for out of his own pocket, would limit himself to sixty days in which to let the contracts. That provision ought to be stricken out of the bill. I believe the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs will agree with me when the Committee on Naval Affairs thinks of the twelve additional ships provided for.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. As to these torpedo vessels, I want the contracts made as speedily as possible; and they ought to be built as rapidly as possible, because they can be built in a brief period.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly; and that is why I want all the power put to work on ships that can be made available at an early date.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And there is no reason why there should be any rush to construct the three battle ships. It ought to be done promptly, as soon as can be done at a fair price; and discretion ought to be given to the President of the United States in the matter. I do not believe in long delays. If they had made it ten months, eight months, or six months, it would have been better. Now, there is another consideration here.

Every one of these ship companies repairs ships as well as builds these torpedo boats. So that in this condition, with this sixty-day limit in which to contract for an expenditure of $15,000,000 for the construction of three battle ships, if the Government is made to do that, it seems to me it is a mistake, and would put the Government in the hands of the gentlemen who build the ships, if they should combine. I do not say that they will combine, but in this country and in every other country men will combine when they can make money by doing so, and all the law that we have passed heretofore has not prevented them from doing so; and while we do not know that they will combine, we have just as much reason to believe that these gentlemen will combine as that others have in the past.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to prolong this debate, but it does seem to me that the committee ought to understand what this amendment means, what it will bring about. I state again that, so far as I am concerned, and as far as the committee is concerned, it makes no difference when the contract is let. We put in the provision to get rid of delay that we have encountered before. We thought they ought to be prompt. We know the Department is more advanced in the issuing of proposals than it ever has been before. The first battle ship was under contract, if not in thirty days, in ninety days, and we had then had no experience and had to make new plans. I think in thirty days we had the ships under contract.

As far as that provision is concerned, I have no care about it at all, whether it be sixty days or one hundred and thirty days, except that I do think it would be an absurdity to pass this bill permitting the Department to delay for months a contract for the construction of the torpedo boats, the increased number of which has been put in the bill for no other purpose than to secure their early construction. But this amendment does not mean this. I want to explain what the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] would be, who put it in at the suggestion of somebody else. I want the House to know it, and I want to repeat that I have no wish against deferring to the wishes of the House. It was the business of my committee to make suggestions from our feeble fund of information, and we have made them and they are before the House, and the House will do what it thinks wise; but I want it to know what it is about.

Now, legislation in all appropriation bills for increasing the Navy has been in the form of a mandate to the Executive to do certain things. It is enacted by law that the President of the United States shall do certain things. We get down to the close of this authorization for the building of the battle ships and torpedo boats and say it shall be in a certain time. Now, the proposition is to strike out the limitation of time for making the contract, and insert these words, "That they shall be constructed so and so," and instead of stating that the contract shall be made in sixty days, that these ships, which we have just ordered the President to build because Congress wants them built, and feels sure that they ought to be built, may be constructed within the discretion of the President.

I have no doubt or apprehension about the wise discretion of the President, but that in my judgment is not the way to legislate. When we instruct the President to add to the Navy by building three battle ships, it does not seem to be sensible to say that they shall be constructed or not in accordance with the President's discretion. I want the battle ships built; I believe Congress is competent to determine whether they ought to be built, and after we have said that they shall be built it seems like nonsense to say they shall be built at the discretion of the President. It is to give the President a false conception of our action; it is to mislead him in the position we have taken.

If I understand the spirit of the House, it is not the purpose to say to the President that he may build the ships that he wants to. While we have given him the power to go to Europe and buy ships, we want to begin to build ships that we are to use in America again as speedily as possible, and we do not intend to invest the discretion whether they shall be built or not with anybody at all. Now, any amendment that may be made as to time I shall be glad to accept, but to put it within the discretion of the President seems to me to indicate, as the remarks of my friend from Iowa and Illinois plainly show, some idea in their minds that something may occur within one, two, or five months to justify the President in failing to build these ships at all. My committee brought this bill in with the idea of having these ships built.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted. The question is on the informal amendment.

The informal amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

A MEMBER. Mr. Chairman, is it admissible to divide the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is rather late to raise that question, but the Chair will look at it and see.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend the paragraph by changing the time from sixty to ninety days.

Mr. LACEY. I object to that. It does not relieve the situation; it still makes a short limit.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What does the gentleman want?

Mr. LACEY. I think it should be left to the discretion of the President.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask unanimous consent, then, Mr. Chairman, to make it one hundred and twenty days.

Mr. LOW. I object.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Then I will not ask unanimous consent any more. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who have preceded me have divided this question into what they call general and special propositions. On the one side much has been said as to the general policy which should govern Congress in dealing with the national defense, and they seek to separate that question from the policy that should govern in framing a bill in the present emergency.

The soldiers and sailors of the United States are the bravest on earth, and I insist that it is the duty of the Government to provide our Navy with a sufficient number of the best ships and our Army with the best possible organization, arms, and equipment.

Those who contend against appropriating for the ships provided for in this bill tell us that they oppose the proposition because it will take two or more years to complete them and that there is no use in providing for vessels that will not be immediately available for use.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that while it may take two or three years to build these ships, the beneficial effect will be immediate in our showing to the world that the greatest nation on earth has determined to provide itself with the means of both aggressive and defensive warfare, and this would certainly tend to add to the strength and power and dignity of this country among the nations of the earth.

This is no new idea with me. I have expressed these views oftentimes before. I expressed them, Mr. Chairman, twelve years ago, when gentlemen engaging in debate in this Hall were combating the efforts of those who sought to build up national defenses worthy of the dignity of the nation. I ask the Clerk to read from a speech which I made on this subject June 18, 1886—twelve years ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

DANGER OF DELAYS.

I think it may be worth considering in this connection if the very wisest policy for a country anxious to remain at peace with all the world is not to be ready at any time to go to war with any power.

I am aware that some gentlemen entertain the idea that it will be time enough to engage in preparations for an armed conflict when, by some means, we shall have become embroiled with a foreign government. In my humble judgment it will be most unwise for us to pursue any such policy. I am firmly convinced that perfect readiness for war is the surest means of maintaining peace.

History is filled with illustrations of the truth of this proposition.

Any of us may readily conceive how it might happen that, being wholly unprepared for war, we would be plunged into hostilities that mere readiness for the contest would have avoided.

Should differences arise with England (or any other power), the mere fact of our engaging in unusual and hurried preparations for war would be immediately followed by similar preparations on the part of our possible opponent.

This would inevitably engender bad blood, stimulate ill-feeling, and intensify antagonisms to such a degree that all preexisting spirit of conciliation or concession on either side would probably be swallowed up in the sentiment of national pride, jealousy, and passion, and a contest would be precipitated which diplomacy might have avoided had not the necessity of preparing for war rendered peace impossible.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, the way to preserve peace is to be ready for war.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I earnestly hope that the members of this Committee of the Whole will not forget the fact that all these questions, especially this one, have been fully and carefully considered in the committee room. I hope they will also exercise a degree of forbearance and recollect the fact that after earnest consideration of all these provisions the fifteen members of that committee have not sought to put into this bill any other provisions than those that are wise and conducive to the best interests of the naval service and the country in general.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAYTON. The gentleman must pardon me one moment. I want to call attention to the fact—and I make the statement frankly—that I have visited the Navy Department in connection with this very provision that these contracts should be let within sixty days; and I want to say that the Construction Department is in entire accord and sympathy with it and desires it to stand.

Now, to show how easy it is for gentlemen who have ideas on these subjects, but have not had opportunity to make examinations, to get information, I simply want to call the attention of the House kindly to the remark made by the gentleman from Indiana that the first thing we knew we would be paying war prices for these vessels if we had to construct them under the provision that the contracts be let within sixty days. I want to call attention to the fact that the cost of these vessels is in every instance limited and that the contracts for their construction can now be let at a lower price than similar vessels can be built for anywhere else in the world. It may be that within six months from now we would not be able to build them for less than a third more than they would cost now.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. DAYTON. I must decline to yield, because I have but a few moments. The gentleman declined to answer a question of mine, and I must return the compliment.

I wish to say, with all due respect, that it is not the function of the President of the United States to do this work. If we propose to pursue a proper policy in building up our Navy, it is the duty of Congress to do this work and not put it wholly in the hands of the President. Let it be done in the way that Congress may think best, with the light that it has before it.

The proposition of the pending amendment simply means that we have been discussing the question whether battle ships should be built or not, and now, as a last resort, we will say to the President of the United States, "You take charge of this question and decide it; you do what you think best about it; build these ships if you see fit, or do not build them if you do not see fit." I wish to say that, while I am a Republican, I do not believe in these extreme concessions of power, even to the President of the United States, where they are not necessary; and we have not before us now any such emergency measure as makes it necessary for us to shirk the responsibility and the duty resting upon us as the Congress of the United States. This is not an emergency measure. This, I insist, is simply a provision in accordance with the policy of Congress to build up an American Navy of which American citizens can be proud and not ashamed.

Mr. KING. Why does not the committee extend the time for six months? In thirty days we may be in the midst of a war.

Mr. DAYTON. The chairman of the committee [Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine] has already stated that an amendment fixing any reasonable time—ninety days, four months, six months, one hundred and twenty days—would be accepted. But here is the point I want the committee to understand: By this amendment it is proposed we shall say that, after all this discussion, we will decline the exercise of our legitimate legislative functions, and will simply say to the President of the United States, "Your will shall be supreme. We shall have battle ships, if you see fit; otherwise, not." I say that such a position is inconsistent with the function of the House of Representatives or of Congress. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hope, Mr. Chairman, we may now have a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the formal amendment to strike out the last word.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move to amend the motion by making it ten minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If gentlemen want more time, I am perfectly willing that they should be indulged. I move to close all debate on the pending paragraph, and all amendments thereto, in fifteen minutes.

Mr. BRUMM. Pending that, I would like to submit a substantial amendment to the amendment now pending for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be received.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I also wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. FISCHER. I move to amend by making the time thirty minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Very well; if you want the time, go on.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The motion as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Of course I do not know how this time is to be divided.

Mr. BRUMM. Let the amendment I have offered be read.

Mr. HANDY. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the amendment now pending will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 5, page 53, all after the word "farther" and insert "that the President be directed to have these ships built as soon as possible, consistent with existing conditions."

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Chairman, very much has been said here concerning the prices which may be charged to the Government by shipbuilders for the construction of the vessels provided for in the pending bill. It is contended by some that the contractors, whose business it is to build vessels of this character, may charge war prices for them, and that the Government, finding it necessary to comply with the requirements of this act, will be compelled to pay the prices thus exacted. It has been said, further, that there are but four concerns in the country capable of building these vessels.

Mr. Chairman, I am not forgetful of the fact, and I desire to remind gentlemen of it, that the Government of the United States owns its own plants in some parts of the country, and may construct some of these vessels itself. At the Norfolk and at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, the Government owns a complete plant for the construction of vessels of any character. At the Norfolk Navy-Yard, for instance, they constructed the Raleigh and the Texas, and at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard they constructed the Maine and the Cincinnati. My purpose in rising now is to make known to the committee my intention to offer an amendment at the proper time, which I will send up and have read by the Clerk when the time comes, and which I think will meet the objections that gentlemen make with reference to the question of construction——

Mr. BRUMM. Let it be sent up and reported now.

Mr. FISCHER. Very well; I will send it up and have it read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 55, after line 7, insert: "That the President may, however, cause any of said vessels to be built at any navy-yard which in his opinion shall be capable of speedily and properly constructing the same."

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment and allow the gentleman from New York to offer his. That will cover the ground I intended to cover.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be withdrawn and that of the gentleman from New York substituted.

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. BRUMM. Then I will renew my own.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. LACEY. That the amendment is not germane.

Mr. FISCHER. Does the gentleman make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. LACEY. I will either make it or reserve it, as the gentleman desires.

Mr. FISCHER. I thought that any ingenious scheme presented would be met by such an objection.

Mr. LACEY. I did not know that the gentleman's plan was "an ingenious scheme."

Mr. FISCHER. No; but yours is. On what ground does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. LACEY. On the ground that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. FISCHER. Oh, I think the gentleman will hardly stand on that. This bill calls for the construction of a number of battle ships and torpedo boats, and provides that the Government shall cause them to be constructed after advertising for bids, and provides that they shall be awarded to the lowest bidder.

The Government has constructed its own vessels heretofore at these yards. It has the right under this bill to call for their construction. It may be possible that the contractors either can not build, by reason of the fact that they shall be overcrowded with work, or they may charge a price that the Government may consider exorbitant. This amendment will permit the President to send to our own yards and have constructed there the very work that this bill provides for. I can not see that this is not germane. The bill provides for construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment is not germane to the proviso.

Mr. BRUMM. Then I renew my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] renews his amendment.

Mr. BRUMM. And on that I should like to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISCHER] yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a moment?

Mr. FISCHER. Yes.

Mr. BRUMM. The trouble seems to be, on the one hand, that limiting the time to sixty days leaves no discretion to the President and puts him practically at the mercy of the shipbuilders. On the other hand, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa leaves the whole matter at the discretion of the President. I say the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa places the whole subject at the discretion of the President, not only as to time, but as to whether the vessels shall be built at all. My amendment is simply a direction to the President that he shall complete these vessels as soon as possible under existing conditions. That is all I have to say, and it seems to me it covers the ground.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the committee for a moment to an amendment which I will have read as a part of my remarks, which I expect to offer at the proper time. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 23, page 53, after the word "dollars," the following:
"And fifty smaller torpedo boats, to have the highest practicable speed, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not to exceed $3,500,000."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, it is a strange fact that there is no provision in this bill, as it now reads, for the smaller class of torpedo boats, which is regarded all over the world as an essential part of torpedo armament. The bill provides for torpedo destroyers of 350 tons and for first-class torpedo boats of 150 tons, but second and third class torpedo boats, such as the Gwyn and the Talbot and the Stiletto, of 65, 45½, and 31 tons—I believe those are the figures—are not provided for in the bill at all. What is more, the proportion of these boats is strangely small in our present Navy.

Of our 23 torpedo boats and destroyers now in existence, only 5 are under a hundred tons, while France has of the large only 49 and of the small 229. England has of the large, 141; of the small, 134; Russia of the large, 82, and of the small, 105. Germany has 75 of the large and 59 of the small. Japan has 11 of the large and 40 of the small. Spain has 16 of the large and 33 of the small. We have but 5, and we do not propose to add any to that number by this bill.

Within two days they had a trial at Key West or the Tortugas of the approach of battle ships by torpedo boats, and the little boats got in and the big ones did not, because they were too large to be unseen in the dark.

I call this matter to the attention of the committee as one that deserves consideration. I have been trying all day to get this matter before the committee. We want the little torpedo boats clustered about our battle ships in harbor and ready as their auxiliaries. We want the little ones, also, to sneak over and make attacks upon battle ships in the harbor of an enemy. What is more, they are cheap. They can be built quickly.

I saw yesterday that it was stated in the Times that the Chief of the Bureau of Construction had recommended that we should have a hundred of these craft. A voice from the dead bids me speak on this matter. About a year ago I was talking with Admiral Meade with reference to our ability to stand up against a first-class naval power.

He said, "Our Navy will give a good account of itself against any navy in the world. Of course, we shall not meet them fleet to fleet, but our ships will meet them ship to ship." I said, "How will you protect those vessels and the ports from which they must issue?" He said, "Give me control, and not even England shall enter our ports, but I must have 300 torpedo boats." I was surprised at such a number.

He said: "I do not want large torpedo boats, complicated and expensive engines, but I want the mere machines, the swift, small hull, with a strong engine, no matter how coarse or with how much rack, that can be laid up on shore when not needed and turned into the water when needed, that can be made on the same pattern by all the machine shops in the United States, each taking hold of a particular part. These," said he, "will not cost over $30,000 apiece, and we can make them, working night and day, in three months, and they will make our harbors absolutely safe."

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will yield to the gentleman in a minute if I have the time. I only give to the House what was said to me as the judgment of a man as to whose repute and skill as an officer of the Navy, ingenious in command, and of his knowledge of the construction of all kinds of ordnance, vessels, and fleets there is no doubt. I have called this matter to the attention of the chairman of the Naval Committee, but I do not think I had the opportunity to impress it on him as I want now to do. I ask, as a beginning, that instead of having 300 of these small vessels we build 50 of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask that the time of the gentleman may be extended three minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRUMM. I should like to ask the gentleman, as a matter of information purely, is it not true that the boats the Government is buying, for instance, tug boats, yachts, etc., and smaller crafts, are not being turned into torpedo boats of the kind you mention?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Not exactly. They are not available for that purpose.

Mr. BRUMM. I thought they were, to a large extent.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. These small boats run up to 20 knots an hour, and these tugs run up to 12 knots an hour. And these fast boats, from 60 to 80 feet long and 5 to 6 feet wide, may approach our ships, as I am told that these torpedo boats did until they were in effective distance before they were discovered.

Mr. BRUMM. How about the larger ones, the yachts?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. They can not be cut down so as to be small enough. They stand high above the water, and their engines and smokestacks are well above the water. I have found one exhaustive book on torpedo vessels by Captain Armstrong, an English writer, which was written in 1896, and to that date it appears to me to be absolutely in point.

He calls attention to the fact that some governments have been recently building only the larger boats, but he says that that is a mistake. For a torpedo boat to be effective it must be small, so as not to be seen as it approaches. Now, I think I have said all I desire to say, except I ask unanimous consent, in spite of the rule that has been adopted that this debate shall close in half an hour on the amendment, a time long enough to be allowed for the consideration of this amendment, which I consider the most important amendment that has been offered to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that—how long?—ten minutes be allowed in addition to the time already allowed for the discussion of the amendment which he has offered. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON. I object.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, while I have no particular objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], I do object strongly to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. I do not believe that this House is ready to turn its legislative power over to the Executive of this nation. I know we have already placed $50,000,000 in his hands, to be spent at his discretion for the defense of the nation; but when a gentleman on this floor offers an amendment providing that the President shall build these battle ships at his discretion, it seems to me that it is time to pause. Has the House no regard for its dignity? Such a proposition trenches on its dignity by an abdication of its legislative function.

I have confidence in the President of the United States. I have served on the floor of this House with him for four years. I have seen him twice while a member of this body come to the front and protect the minority of this House from arbitrary rulings of the Speaker, independent of political considerations and advantages. I know he is honest and conscientious, and I believe him to be patriotic and devoted to the interests of the nation; but I do not believe it is either prudent or dignified in us to pass any proposition giving him discretion as to the building of battle ships. I believe that it is the duty of the Congress to make provisions for the Navy and to see that they are carried out. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania simply proposes that the President of the United States be directed to have these battle ships built at the earliest possible moment. That is in effect what the committee who have reported the bill do, and I have no objection to it; but I do protest against this House, without very good reason, indeed, delegating its legislative power to the Executive of the nation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, no one believes in delegating legislative power to the Executive of the nation unless it is necessary; and there comes a time in the history of all nations when it is wise and proper to rest and vest in the Executive of the nation most ample powers. We had a clear illustration of it the other day when we gave him power to expend the $50,000,000 that we did. I concede, Mr. Chairman, that in ordinary times a provision such as that contained in this bill limiting the time for contracting for these vessels to sixty days or ninety days would be wise and would be proper, but there comes a time, Mr. Chairman, when it is not wise and not proper to do that very same thing. What may occur in sixty days, neither you nor I know.

What may be the condition of this country sixty days from now Congress can not foretell, and therefore it becomes wise and expedient to let the matter rest in the hands of some one in whom we have confidence and whom we know will exercise the discretion wisely. There are but four companies in the United States that can construct battle ships of the first class. They are a firm in Wilmington, Del., the Newport News Company, the Cramps Company, of Philadelphia, and the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco.

Mr. BRUMM. And there is another one, the Roach's.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Can they make a first-class battle ship? I have been informed that there were only four concerns that are equipped to make a first-class battle ship. But suppose there is another one and the President is directed to contract for these within sixty days, besides the construction of twenty-four torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers, will it not practically put it in the power of these few companies to dictate exorbitant terms to the United States? Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this limitation of time is unnecessary, especially as the committee claims it is not an emergency measure, but a measure looking to the upbuilding of the Navy in the future. It seems absurd to require the contracts for these battle ships to be let in sixty days when a crisis is approaching, when the President may need these very shipyards for other purposes, when the docks may be required for other ships that can be of more immediate use, when within sixty days it might be determined whether the first-class battle ship is a success or not.

It seems to me that wisdom and calm judgment at this time should make us conclude that the proper course is to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] and invest the power of determining when the battle ships shall be built in the man that this House has voted is worthy of confidence. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HILBORN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. HILBORN. Does the gentleman not know that there are over sixty yards or places in the United States where these torpedo destroyers and torpedo boats can be built—that it is not true that there are only four or five firms that can bid for them?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not understand that there are only four or five places where torpedo boats can be built; I think there are a large number of places where the torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers can be built; but I was speaking of the places at which first-class battle ships can be constructed.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. With another effort, Mr. Chairman, to expedite action, I ask unanimous consent to strike out this proviso altogether.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment I offered.

Mr. BRUMM. I also ask, Mr. Chairman, unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment offered by me. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be withdrawn and the proviso will be stricken out.

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment that I sent to the Clerk's desk be read, and I ask consideration for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 23, page 53, after the word "dollars," the following:
"And fifty smaller torpedo boats, to have the highest practicable speed, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $3,500,000."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, is the proviso stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. It is out.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Maine if he expects to be able to conclude the bill to-night?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. After consulting with a number of members I think we can complete it. There are only one or two provisions that will be likely to result in any discussion.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine] if this amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey has the approval of the Naval Committee?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It has not; we have already provided for the building of torpedo boats, and we know that contracts are being prepared under the $50,000,000 appropriation for a large number of boats.

The amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey was rejected.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

Insert in line 5, page 55, after the word "provided," the following:

"And provided further, That all ships and boats purchased by the Government of the United States in foreign lands shall be sold by the Secretary of the Navy as soon as the exigencies which caused their purchase will, in the judgment of the President, permit, and the proceeds of such sale applied to the construction and equipment of similar ships and boats."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 55, line 5, after the words "hereinbefore provided," insert:

"Provided, however, That the President may cause any of the vessels authorized by this act to be constructed at any navy-yard which, in his opinion, shall be capable of speedily and properly constructing the same."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 17 and 18, page 54, after the word "act," line 17, "save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture."

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I should like to ask the gentleman from Maine——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Debate has closed. The gentleman can offer an amendment, but he can not debate it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois offer an amendment?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I would like to offer an amendment, because I think——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. You can offer it, but you can not debate it.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I think if the chairman of the committee would allow me to state the amendment, he would accept it at once.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will present his amendment. Debate has closed.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. It is an amendment on page 54. I have not even had time to write it. I would like to state it, because I think the striking out of the proviso has created a very serious objection to the language of this paragraph, unless a suitable amendment can be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his amendment, and the Clerk will take it down.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. By the provision on page 54 the construction of all these vessels is to be made to conform in all respects to the provisions of the act of 1886, except as to the matter of premiums. Now, the law in reference——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. This law provides that the President——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What do you want to amend?

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. Debate is closed. Does the gentleman from Illinois offer an amendment?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please state it.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. The amendment I offer is that the exception in line 13——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please state the words of his amendment.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. My amendment is to insert a parenthesis before the word "except," in line 13, and to end the parenthesis with the word "same," in line 14. Unless this amendment be made the Department, under the law of 1886, can not complete these vessels in five months.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I should like to be heard on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph is closed.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The substitute was again read.

Mr. BRUCKER. Would an amendment to this substitute be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It would.

Mr. BRUCKER. I move to amend so as to provide that the gunboat which is to take the place of the gunboat Michigan be named the Michigan.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I suggest to the gentleman that if this amendment be adopted, the Department will be unable to name one of the battle ships after his State.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Michigan will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "waters," in the second line of the second page of the substitute, insert "said gunboat to be called the Michigan."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I rise to a point of order—that this amendment is a change of existing law.

Mr. BRUCKER. In view of the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine, and for the reason that I wish one of these battle ships hereafter to be constructed may be named the Michigan, I withdraw my amendment.

The question being taken on agreeing to the substitute offered by Mr. CANNON, it was rejected; there being—ayes 78, noes 124.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and machinery: On account of the hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels heretofore and herein authorized, $6,070,473: Provided, That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," approved August 3, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That in the construction of all naval vessels the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture, and of the quality and characteristics best adapted to the various purposes for which it may be used, in accordance with specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. In order to conform to the action of the House in providing for additional torpedo boats, I move to amend by striking out, in lines 10 and 11, on page 55, "six million and seventy thousand" and inserting "seven million six hundred and forty-eight thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PAYNE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5489) extending the right of commutation to certain homestead settlers on lands in Oklahoma Territory, opened to settlement under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to ratify and confirm the agreement with the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. R. 129) relative to suspension of part of section 350 of Revised Statutes, relative to erection of forts, fortifications, etc.; in which the concurrence of the House is requested.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Insert in line 15, page 55, after the word "follows," the following:

"That for the construction of all naval vessels the sum of $4,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of suitable buildings and the purchase of suitable machinery and other material necessary for the establishment and maintenance of a plant for furnishing armor plate for the use of the Navy.

"That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to appoint a board, to consist of three officers of the Navy, who shall examine and report what, in their opinion, is the most suitable site for the erection of the plant provided for in the foregoing section of this act, and no money shall be expended until the point so selected shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I make a point of order on that amendment, of course.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that in arguing the point of order I may be allowed to speak to the merits of the amendment.

Mr. DALZELL. For how long?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask for fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNETT. I object.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine that he withhold his point of order until the gentleman from Alabama can be heard.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Very well; I will reserve my point of order for such time as the Committee of the Whole may be disposed to hear the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will be recognized for five minutes, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

[Mr. UNDERWOOD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for the vessels authorized by the act of July 26, 1894, of the vessels authorized under the act of March 2, 1895, of those authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, of the three torpedo boats authorized by the act of March 3, 1897, and of those authorized by this act, including the completion of ordnance outfit for the six torpedo boat destroyers and six torpedo boats named herein, $5,458,800: Provided, That the total cost of the armor, according to the plans and specifications already prepared, for the three battle ships authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, shall not exceed $3,210,000, including all cost of nickel in the same, and exclusive of the cost of transportation, ballistic test plates, and tests, and no contract for armor plate shall be made at an average rate to exceed $400 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including nickel as aforesaid.

Mr. BALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that provision allowing $400 a ton for armor plate.

The CHAIRMAN. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. BALL. That it changes existing law and that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. BALL. I make the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Let me say to the gentleman that there is a law in the last bill providing for this, and this is simply a limitation upon it. It is no change of existing law. It simply puts a limitation upon the appropriation made by the present bill.

Mr. BALL. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the section under consideration, in so far as it fixes the price of armor plate at $400 instead of $300, is new legislation and changes existing law. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that in the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress it was decided that no contract for armor plate should be made at a cost to exceed $300 per ton. That is the law. It has never been repealed, and the provision sought to be incorporated in this appropriation bill is a change of the law as it now exists, and it is new legislation, and is therefore properly subject to a point of order. I will read the provision. On page 123 of the Statutes of the United States of America, acts of the Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, I find the following——

Mr. TAWNEY. Is not that the naval appropriation bill passed at the first session of this Congress?

Mr. BALL. It is a statute that I am reading from.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not the naval appropriation bill, and is not that a limitation upon the appropriation of money authorized in that act?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It was in the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It was in the act in which we made appropriation for the armor and armament of the vessels of the Navy, all the vessels still incomplete, including the vessels that are authorized by this bill, and this paragraph is nothing but a limitation upon this appropriation in this bill.

Mr. BALL. I do not agree with that.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It simply makes a limitation upon the appropriation which precedes it. The appropriation is of a certain amount for the arming and armament of ships, including the three battle ships which have not yet been armed. That appropriation having been made, the bill proceeds to put a limitation upon it by providing conditions and terms under which a certain portion of this appropriation shall be expended; that is, for the providing of armor for three battle ships included in this provision, limited by the proviso that the total cost shall not be more than so much.

Mr. BALL. The gentleman from Maine should not attempt to take me from the floor. Let me discuss the point of order, and he can then speak in his own time. Congress has before passed upon the price to be paid for armor plate, and advantage ought not now to be taken of the present situation to allow more than the deliberate judgment of Congress at that time said was all that armor plate was worth. If it was right then, it is right now.

Mr. BAILEY. Will my colleague allow me to suggest to him that if he were to strike out this provision, then the Navy Department could give $600 a ton for this armor?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. And the provision is the only thing that limits them to $400. I suggest that to my colleague. I am very frank to say that I voted in the last session to limit the price to $300 a ton. We were unable to buy it at that figure, and now we must buy it.

Mr. BALL. I think the gentleman is mistaken; only $300 per ton could be charged. I wish to read from the law. I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] will listen to this:

Armor plate: That the total cost of the armor, according to the weights prepared for the three battle ships authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, shall not exceed $2,407,500, exclusive of the cost of transportation, ballistic test plates, and tests, and no contract for armor plate shall be made at an average rate to exceed $300 per ton of 2,240 pounds: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to contract with either or all of the builders of the hulls and machinery of these vessels, or with any one or more bidders, for the furnishing of the entire amount of said armor at a cost not exceeding the aforesaid $300 per ton, if he shall deem it for the best interests of the Government.

In case the Secretary of the Navy shall find it impossible to make contracts for said armor within the limits as to price above fixed, he shall be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to take steps to establish a Government armor factory of sufficient capacity to make such armor. In executing this authority he shall prepare a description and plans and specifications of the land, buildings, and machinery suitable for the factory; and shall advertise for proposals to furnish such land, buildings, and machinery as a whole plant, or separately, for the land or buildings, or the whole or any part of said machinery, and report to Congress at its next session. The Secretary shall also appoint an armor-factory board, to consist of competent naval officers of suitable rank, to advise and assist him in executing the authority hereby conferred.

Mr. FLEMING. That only applies to those three ships.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is exactly similar to the limitation put upon the appropriation made last year. This is a limitation made upon the appropriation this year. The proviso which the gentleman reads is in the naval appropriation bill, and the limitation was in precisely the same language, except that last year the limitation was $300 per ton, while this bill, for reasons known to gentlemen on that side, changes the limitation to $400 a ton. [Cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"]

Mr. BALL. I simply wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Maine and the Chair to the fact that the vessels authorized by the act of July 26, 1894, the vessels authorized by the act of March 2, 1895, the vessels authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, and those authorized by the act of March 3, 1897, are mentioned in this bill. The law I have read clearly includes them as to the price to be paid for armor plate, and the clause prohibiting any contract for the payment of more than $300 per ton includes all the vessels provided for in this bill. I insist, therefore, that the point of order is well taken and should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The provision in the naval appropriation bill of March last is identical in terms with the provision in the naval appropriation bill to which the gentleman now raises the point of order. It seems to the Chair perfectly clear that the provision in the last naval bill was a limitation which touched merely the appropriation therein provided for, and the provision here is a limitation upon the appropriation herein provided for. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 56, strike out the word "six" before the words "torpedo-boat destroyers," and the word "six" before the words "torpedo boats," and insert the word "twelve" in each place; so that it will read:

"Including the completion of ordnance outfit for the twelve torpedo-boat destroyers and twelve torpedo boats named herein."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My colleague desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. DALZELL. I just want, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] was cut off from making his remarks by the five-minute rule, to ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to print his remarks upon this subject in the RECORD.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would like to ask my colleague from Maine if he has changed his total?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My colleague from Ohio sent up an amendment which I understand effects that.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio has been adopted.

Mr. HANDY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware will state it.

Mr. HANDY. What is the last paragraph read?

The CHAIRMAN. Ending at line 16, page 56. The gentleman from Ohio offered two amendments; but one was reported and acted upon. The other will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, page 56, strike out the words "four hundred and fifty-eight thousand" and insert "six hundred and sixty-two thousand."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARLOW. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I desire to offer to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "four," in line 14, page 56, and insert "three."

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BARLOW. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to discuss his amendment?

Mr. BARLOW. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California.

Mr. BARLOW. Mr. Chairman, my amendment simply puts the price of armor plate at $300 a ton, which is the same price set upon armor after a full discussion in the Senate last year; and it was proved before a Senate committee that investigated this matter that the cost of armor was only $149 per ton. Yet that same company had contracted with Russia for the delivery of this same armor plate, with the nickel ingredient that is in it, for $248. Now, I do not see why in the name of heaven we should pay $400 a ton for it when $300 is ample. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Simply because we want to have some armor.

Mr. MAHON. I ask unanimous consent to submit an article to be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to have a statement printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The article is as follows:

AMERICAN ARMOR FOR FOREIGN SHIPS.

[Army and Navy Journal, February 19, 1898.]

Russia on Saturday last awarded contracts to the Carnegie Steel Company for sufficient harveyized nickel-steel armor to complete two battle ships now under construction. The contract price is $500 per ton, which is $33.12 less per ton than the company received for the armor it furnished under its last Russian contract, $200 more than the United States is allowed to pay under the law for armor for the battle ships Illinois, Alabama, and Wisconsin, and $100 more than the Senate and House Naval Committees are willing to allow for the armor for these three ships.

The Russian Government a few months ago advertised for bids for completing the armoring of the Russian battle ships Peresvet and Olysibia, the armor plate to be delivered within a year and a half. Following are the bids received: Vickers Sons & Co. (English), $583.96 per ton; John Brown & Co. (English), $569.28 per ton; St. Chamond (French), $490 for 9-inch, $498 for 8-inch, $509 for 5-inch, and $548 for 4-inch; Le Creusot (French), $498 for 9-inch, $478.64 for 8-inch, $530.75 for 7-inch, $550 for 5-inch, and $569 for 4-inch; Chatillion (French), $486 for 9-inch, $496 for 8-inch, $517 for 7-inch, $563.50 for 4 and 5-inch; Marrel Frères (French), $530.75 for 6-inch and $382.14 for 4-inch; Krupp (German), $562.52 for all sizes; Dillingen (German), $559.30 for all sizes; Wilkowitz (Austria), $452.20 for all sizes; Bethlehem Iron Company (American), $530.45 for all sizes; Carnegie Steel Company (American), $530.45 for all sizes.

The Russian Government rejected all the bids on the ground that they were too high, but after negotiations with the Carnegie Company, as a result of which the bid of that firm was reduced to $500 per ton, it was finally decided to award the contracts to it. The Peresvet and the Olysibia are first-class battle ships, and when completed will have a displacement of 12,840 tons each. One is expected to be ready for launching the latter part of this year and the other in 1900. The fact that the Russian Government determined to return to harveyized nickel-steel armor, after having tried armor manufactured by the Krupp process, is complimentary to the judgment of Capt. Charles O'Neil, Chief of the Navy Bureau of Ordnance, and other American naval experts.

It has been reported to the Navy Department that on Krupp's good showing with a 11.8-inch Krupp plate, the German received a contract for armor for the Russian battle ship Poltava, a vessel of 10,950 tons. The price paid was $542.64 per ton delivered in St. Petersburg. Although the test plate of this contract cracked, the Government waived the imperfection and concluded to accept the armor. The action of the Russian Government in making a contract for harveyized nickel-steel armor is regarded as a severe reflection on Krupp armor. Carnegie and Bethlehem companies recently acquired the right to use the Krupp process, but it is not likely that either company will make a contract to supply Krupp armor at present, in view of the reported undeveloped condition of the process.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 14, page 56, and insert the following:
Strike out the words "four hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifty."

[Cries of "Vote!"]

[Mr. TODD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Armor-plate factories: For the building and equipping of two factories for the manufacture of armor plate, one to be located in the South and the other in the Northwest, by the Secretary of the Navy, on considerations of proximity of material and transportation, $3,000,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the installation of electric plants in gunboats numbered 10, 11, 12, and 13, $40,000.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

No money appropriated in this act shall, after the next vacancy occurs on the active list in his grade, be paid any officer on the retired list under the regular retiring age and not having the legal forty years' service, whom the Navy Department may deem able physically, mentally, and morally to resume on the active list the duties of his existing commission, and may order back to duty in the said active-list vacancy.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. A point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it changes existing law.

Mr. HANDY. I would like to be heard upon that. I claim it is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HANDY. But, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not desire to hear the gentleman upon the point of order.

Mr. HANDY. I know the Chair wishes to be perfectly fair, and if he will read that amendment, I think he will not hold that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair carefully listened to the reading of the amendment, and it is clearly not germane to the section.

Mr. HANDY. It is germane to the whole bill. It is a limitation on the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. HANDY. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The appeal is too late.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print some remarks in the RECORD upon armor plate.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bill and amendment to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committees of the Whole House, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration House bill 9378, making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, and had instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments and with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Does any gentleman desire a separate vote upon any item? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a correction in the text of the bill, which I will briefly state. We first authorized battle ships not to exceed in cost $4,000,000, exclusive of armament. That was subsequently ruled upon by the Treasury Department in the disbursing of the money in the various bureaus. We have reduced that amount of limitation which has never been reached, under the contract for the hull and machinery, to $3,750,000.

The last ships contracted for were contracted for at a price of $2,700,000, and the committee this year thought they would reduce the outside limitation again, because the price of vessels had been reduced down to $2,600,000, and we therefore struck off $750,000 and limited the ships to cost, exclusive of armament, $3,000,000. It afterwards came to the attention of the committee that by a ruling of the Treasury Department the hull armor has been excluded from the account of what is known as the armament.

So the armament does not take account of $1,000,000 worth, and gentlemen will perceive that according to that ruling the cost of the vessel exclusive of armament has to be the cost of the contract price for the hull and machinery, which is $2,670,000, and a million dollars of that goes into armor that goes on the hull of the ship. It does not increase the cost of the vessel, but it is a limitation that does not take effect upon a million dollars of armor that it was originally intended to. I am familiar with the bills, because I drew the first one.

Now I ask unanimous consent to insert, after the word "of," in line 15, page 53, the words "armor and;" so as to read "to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $3,000,000 each."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If this amendment be made, will the limitation of $400 a ton on the cost of armor plate be still operative?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh, yes; this will not affect that at all. In drafting the language in the bill we overlooked the fact that the cost of armor, as well as armament, should be excluded from this sum of $3,000,000, which would not be sufficient to provide for the building of the hulls and also provide a million dollars' worth of armor.

Mr. McMILLIN. The effect of this amendment, as I understand——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I think I can anticipate the gentleman's inquiry. The effect of the amendment is practically the same as if we put back the $3,750,000.

Mr. McMILLIN. This does not increase the amount which may be charged for any particular part of the work beyond the limit already fixed?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Not in the slightest degree; but if the amendment be not made, the Secretary of the Navy might be prevented from accepting bids which would be entirely satisfactory to him, because there would not be money enough appropriated.

Mr. McMILLIN. I made the inquiry simply because we are obliged, under the present circumstances, to let up on some things where we know an excessive charge is being made—notably on the question of armor plate.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I would not ask the House to agree to a provision of this kind if it could possibly have any such effect.

The amendment proposed by Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine was read, as follows:

After the word "of," at the end of line 15, page 53, insert "armor and;" so as to read: "To cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $3,000,000 each."

There being no objection, the amendment was considered, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maine whether the Senate has adjourned until Monday?

Mr. DINGLEY. It has.

Mr. BAILEY. In view of that fact, I will not object.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING MESSAGE ON THE MAINE DISASTER.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 3,000 copies of the message of the President dated March 28, 1898, and also of the report of the naval commission upon the destruction of the Maine and the accompanying evidence.

Mr. PERKINS. I think that this resolution had better go to the Committee on Printing. On Tuesday last the House authorized the printing of this report, which, I think, exhausted the power of the House under a simple resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD his remarks upon the question of armor plate.

Mr. PERKINS. To what extent?

Mr. GAINES. I do not know that any other gentleman has been limited.

Mr. PERKINS. There has been some suggestion of printing long reports under the guise of extending remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GAINES. I have never been guilty of doing anything wrong in this matter. Mr. Speaker, I stand on my rights.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. PERKINS. I will not object, though I think my question was a very proper one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection; and the request is granted.

Mr. QUAY. The resolution can go over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania will lie over.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few remarks to the Senate on the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

While I stand ready to support a policy which demands the absolute freedom and independence of Cuba, I do not desire to involve this country in war to accomplish this result if there be any honorable and peaceable way to otherwise secure it. Neither am I willing to say that the President must act within a certain definite time, otherwise Congress will immediately declare war. In a great crisis like this we should exercise patience as well as thought, and so long as the executive branch of the Government has any reasonable assurance that independence is likely to be accomplished by honorable and peaceful means let us uphold the President and give him our support.

We are confronted to-day, and have been for several months, with a state of affairs that demands at the hands of the President and the American Congress calm, deliberate, thoughtful, and dispassionate consideration. This nation has been on the verge of war for many weeks, and it is the part of statesmanship to use every reasonable and honorable means to avert it. In the hour of great danger it will not do to appeal to passion or act with undue haste, but we must consult reason, always keeping in view the honor and safety of the nation. This is an age and era of the highest civilization, and nations, like individuals, should settle their differences without going to war if possible.

We must, however, deal with facts and great problems of government as we find them. If the disease be one that necessarily requires a desperate remedy, let us have the courage to apply the proper remedy and one that will exterminate the cause of the disease, even should it involve our country in war. God forbid that such a calamity should befall our people, but if we can not possibly avoid it without dishonor to our flag or without the starvation and destruction of thousands of helpless women and children within almost sight of our doors, then I say, let war come. It may result in great loss of life and the destruction of property, and doubtless will, and we should use all honorable means to prevent it; but if it must come, there is one satisfaction—it will forever end Spanish tyranny and misgovernment on the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. President, although the Cubans have gone through a revolution unprecedented for loss of life and destruction of property, lasting from 1868 to 1878, a period of ten years, and notwithstanding the fact that the people of the island had endured and lived under the worst form of government ever devised for man, when the present revolution began the inhabitants of that productive and fertile island, containing an area equal to that of Pennsylvania, produced annually more than a million tons of sugar and exported more than 300,000,000 pounds of tobacco. When the last revolution began the island had a population of 1,700,000 people. This population during the last three years has dwindled down to 1,000,000.

The people of this island were, when let alone, a docile, happy, peaceful, and harmless race. Nature has blessed the island with every possible advantage necessary to make it the habitation and home of a thrifty, happy, contented, and liberty-loving people. Where will you find a more productive soil, one not only adapted to coffee, sugar, and tobacco, but one that produces almost without labor every variety of tropical fruits, and an island with sufficient harbors to shelter the navies of the world?

When we study the natural conditions and surroundings of this beautiful island, we can easily understand why Columbus declared it to be the "goodliest land that eye ever saw." Blessed with these great natural advantages that ought to bring an abundance to clothe and feed her people, the question arises, What is the present condition of her people? If it be one of misery, want, and actual starvation, to what must we attribute this deplorable condition? It is the part of statesmanship to ascertain the cause of this great suffering and distress, and not only to discover the cause but also to procure an effective and permanent remedy and to apply it at once. In order to do this we must acquaint ourselves with every phase of the troubles existing between Spain and Cuba in order that we may act intelligently. It is a fact that we should not lose sight of that a bitter and unrelenting hatred has existed for a long time between the Cubans and the Spanish officials.

I do not propose to discuss in detail the form of government Spain has given to the people of Cuba; such a discussion could be productive of no possible good in solving the complications now existing between Spain and her colony or between Spain and this country. This hatred has been intensified by the cruel, heartless, and merciless treatment of the Cubans by the Spanish Government. In endeavoring to effect a solution of the troubles between the two parties it will not do to overlook the fact that the insurgents have reached the point where they prefer death to Spanish rule. With this hostile feeling existing it is not probable or hardly possible to expect anything like a permanent reconciliation between Spain and her colony or a reconciliation that would cause the Cuban insurgents to submit to Spanish rule.

Then, if a reconciliation should even be had, in all probability it would be temporary, and in a few years we would have this same trouble on our hands again. The situation in that island is one that appalls us and one that ought to appall the civilized world. We are no longer left to conjecture as to the real condition of affairs in that island. Men of the highest character and intelligence and possessing the esteem and confidence of the American people have been and seen, and there is but one opinion—not the slightest difference when they come to make their report.

The scenes of sickness, distress, and starvation as narrated by them have shocked and aroused the conscience of this enlightened and Christian people as they were never aroused before. We have at last realized that 600,000 of the people on this island have perished during the last three years—nearly a third of the entire population. We have realized that while many were killed, more have died from the want of medical attention and from actual starvation. We have at last realized that the entire rural population have been driven from their country homes and imprisoned in the fortified towns with nothing to do, nothing to eat, and little to wear.

We are told that under the inhuman policy of Weyler more than 400,000 of simple, self-supporting, peaceable, defenseless farmers were driven from their homes in the agricultural portions of the island and imprisoned within the lines of the Spanish army. Their humble homes were burned, their property destroyed, and the country was one field of waste and ruin. We are told that these were mostly old and decrepit men and women and helpless little children, and that they were taken to the towns in control of the Spaniards without food, clothing, shelter, or medical attention, and dependent entirely upon the charity of the cities to save them from actual starvation.

We are told by witnesses whose testimony can not be impeached or questioned that more than 200,000 of these unfortunate creatures have died for the want of proper food and medical attention during the last few months. We are told by the same witnesses that it is not uncommon to see little children lying dead at the markets every morning, where they have crawled to beg food to save them from starvation. Is it any wonder that the junior Senator from Vermont has said on the floor of this Chamber, "It is no longer war or peace there, but it is desolation and distress, misery and starvation"?

I have not yet heard an argument advanced that Spain is likely to subdue the insurgents; but, on the contrary, the facts would indicate that the only way she can ever again obtain complete control of this island is to exterminate the Cubans. The insurgents in the mountains are likely to be able to protract the struggle for years to come. This means there is no end to the war for years to come; it means the distress and starvation and the effusion of blood must continue for an indefinite period of time, and no one can tell the result. It would doubtless, if let alone, result in either independence to the Cubans or their total destruction.

No thoughtful man can expect to see any permanent peace between Spain and Cuba until Spain shall relinquish her right to govern the island and leave Cuba to be free. These people have long been deprived of their political and civil liberty and excluded from public station as well as from profitable employment and honorable occupation by the Government of Spain. They have borne heavy and unjust taxation to maintain and support the horde of Spanish officials sent there to govern them against their will and against their interest. They have been forced to contribute millions to maintain the standing army and navy of the mother country organized and equipped to keep in subjection and to forever crush the spirit of liberty and self-government that burns in the souls of the Cuban people.

These acts of cruelty and oppression have resulted in a deadly hatred between the native Cubans and the Spanish Government. This hatred is of long standing. The Cubans have no confidence in the promises of the Spanish Government. They were promised self-government at the close of the revolution in 1878. These promises were never kept by the Spanish, and now the Cubans will not trust the Spanish Government any further.

The only way Spain can expect to retain and govern the island in peace is to exterminate the Cubans and populate it with Spaniards. There is no such thing as permanent peace without independence. The spirit of freedom that inspired the souls of Patrick Henry and John Adams, that kindled the flame that brought on the American Revolution that resulted in giving to us our independence, permeates the soul of the insurgents, and, feeling that they have been grievously wronged, no hardship is too great for them to endure if they can bring about freedom and independence to the island. It is with them liberty and independence or death. They prefer death rather than to bear the exactions and burdens of the mother country any longer. What this country wants, and what all Christendom wants, is peace, and permanent peace. What we want is to see a remedy applied that will forever settle the differences between Spain and her colony, a remedy that will not call upon us to settle another revolution in a few years to come.

The United States might send an army now and aid Spain in subduing the insurgents, and this would temporarily crush them and temporarily establish Spanish authority over the island; but every thinking man knows that such a course would only pacify the insurgents until an opportunity would come to rebel against their oppressors. By force they would be compelled to submit, but would submit only so long as force lasted. Do you suppose that they would forget the suffering and distress they have borne at the hands of the Spanish Government? Do you suppose they would forget that 200,000 of their own people had died from actual starvation?

Do you suppose that they would forget that their homes had been burned and their fields laid waste, and that more than a third of their population had been killed or died as a result of Spanish oppression? Do you suppose they would forget that everywhere they turned could be seen the new-made graves of their comrades? If we do, we have not studied and understood human nature. Can we expect the people entertaining the hostile feelings the Cubans do toward the Spaniards to ever submit to Spanish government if they can possibly avoid it? If they are forced to submit now, it is a question of time when another outbreak will occur and another revolution take place.

It is to the interest of Spain as well as the United States to have a remedy applied that will forever end this trouble. There is only one possible way this can be done. The Cubans will never live in peace with Spain under Spanish government. It will cost Spain five times the value of that island to maintain Spanish supremacy there. The only way to bring about a permanent peace is to give them independence and let them establish a government of their own. No student of history can point out a single case where friendly relations have been restored between a mother country and her colonies under existing conditions except by absolute freedom and independence. The hatred existing between the Spanish and Cubans is of long standing and time instead of softening has intensified it.

Nearly four hundred years ago, when the island was seized by the Spaniards, one of her chiefs who had fled from Haiti to escape Spanish oppression was seized by the Spanish soldiers for his resistance of their entrance into the island. When he was tied to the stake to be burned and the fagots were piled around him, a Spanish soldier and murderer stood by and urged him to abjure the feeble gods of his ancestors and to accept Spanish Christianity in order that the flames which consumed his body might waft his soul to the regions of eternal bliss.

He knew his conversion would not prevent his cremation. He inquired if there were any Spaniards in those happy abodes, and on being answered in the affirmative, he said: "I will not go to a place where I will meet one of that accursed race." That story of history but illustrates the state of feelings now existing between the Spaniards and the Cubans. In order to bring about permanent peace we must understand the exact status of affairs there and must fully realize that the antipathy existing between the Spaniards and the Cubans is so great that it is utterly impossible to reconcile the Cuban people to Spanish authority. You may rule for a while by force a people struggling for liberty and self-government, but it will be found to be a costly experience—an experience that will keep a country and people involved in a bloody revolution.

We must look to international law to solve this problem. Spain is an independent country, and as such is entitled to govern her own people. Under the general rule of international law the United States would not be permitted and could not justify any interference with the internal affairs of Spain. Noninterference is the general established rule of international law, but there are exceptions to all general rules. Nations, in declaring and carrying on war, both internal and external, are bound to conduct such wars in accordance with the principles of civilized warfare.

The first question to be considered is, Have we a right under international law to interfere in the affairs of Spain under present conditions? Clearly, to my mind, we not only have the right to interfere, but it is our Christian duty to do so. Mr. Hall, an international law writer of eminent ability, names one of the exceptions to the general rule of noninterference, and distinctly says, "Interference against wrongdoing, immoral acts, massacres, and brutality are not only permissible, but justifiable." The same distinguished author tells us: "Intervention, for the purpose of checking tyranny, stopping the effusion of blood, or helping a people to free themselves from an inhumane and tyrannical government is regarded with favor."

Dr. Wheaton, another international law writer of high standing and respectability, says:

> Interference is justified where the general interests of humanity are infringed by the excesses of a barbarous and despotic government.

Mr. Vattel says:

> Humanity revolts against a sovereign who, without necessity or without any powerful reason, lavishes the blood of his most faithful subjects and exposes his people to the calamities of war, when he has it in his power to maintain them in the enjoyment of honorable and salutary peace.

Spain is responsible to God and the world for the effusion of blood and the distress and starvation now existing on the Island of Cuba. History and international law furnish to us almost a parallel case to the one now submitted to us for our consideration. The student of history is familiar with the character of the bloodthirsty and warlike nature of the Turks. The struggle between the Greeks and the Turks in 1827 was of such a cruel and barbarous character as to finally attract the attention of the civilized world. It was conducted very much on the same plane which has characterized the Spanish-Cuban war. The heartless and cruel Turks would show no quarter to the mild and amiable Greeks.

It was some time before the sentiment of the Christian nations raised their voices in behalf of suffering humanity, just as it has been in the sufferings of Cuba; but when you once arouse public sympathy in behalf of justice and mercy and against cruelty, tyranny, and oppression, the sentiment of a civilized, kind-hearted, Christian people will always come to the relief of the distressed, administer to the wants of the suffering, and forever crush and grind to powder tyranny and oppression. Great Britain, France, and Russia were aroused to action on account of this cruel and barbarous warfare, and determined, if possible, to put an end to it.

They determined to do this solely on the grounds of humanity. They at first did not declare war against either country. They determined, if possible, to put an end to it by friendly means, but if it could not be accomplished by this means, then to forcibly stop it and to give to the Greeks independence and self-government. What course did they pursue? The three great European powers for humanity's sake determined to mediate in behalf of peace, to offer and use their friendly assistance to stop the effusion of blood.

During these pending negotiations and the offer to mediate they asked both the Turks and the Greeks to declare an armistice for thirty days, that the three great European powers might use their good influences to adjust and settle the conflict so furiously waged between them. The Greeks cheerfully accepted the mediation of the three great powers, declaring their readiness to cease all hostilities, but the bloody Turks would not consent. They continued to thirst for the blood of their antagonists. Peaceable intervention having failed to stop the conflict, Great Britain, France, and Russia determined on armed interference, and sent an army to aid the cause of the Greeks and end the war, and the very first battle fought brought the Turks to their senses, ended the war, and established the independence of Greece.

Dr. Wheaton, in his work on international law, tells us that these three great Christian powers of Europe were eminently justified in their interference to rescue a whole nation, not merely from religious persecution, but from the cruel alternative of being transported from their native land into Egyptian bondage or exterminated by their merciless oppressors. The same distinguished author tells us that the right of human nature, wantonly outraged by the cruel warfare, was but tardily and imperfectly vindicated by this measure, and its principles were fully justified on the broad ground of self-preservation and humanity.

Now, Mr. President, we have a state of facts before us—a state of facts about which there is no dispute—a state of facts which presents for our consideration and solution great and momentous questions. No great question is ever fully settled until it is settled right. I repeat, the only solution of Cuban-Spanish affairs that will restore permanent peace, relieve present suffering, and secure future safety is absolute freedom and independence of the people of Cuba. If the statesmen of Spain would view the situation in its true light, they could not possibly avoid reaching this conclusion.

Many of the most eminent statesmen of England realized this to be true as to the American colonies when they were struggling for their independence from their mother country. If the English Government had followed their advice and counsel, her people would have saved millions of dollars in ending an unprofitable and destructive war and would have been spared the humiliation of defeat. There is but one way that the Spanish Government can make Cuba her friend. Let the Spanish Government say to them, "We have tried to govern you in peace and can not do it. We know you can never be a happy, contented, and thrifty people until you can have absolute freedom and independence. We see that you will never be satisfied until you are allowed to elect your own rulers, make your own laws, and regulate your own internal affairs. We regret to give you up. You have supported our armies and our navies. Our officials and soldiers have fattened upon your substance. We would prefer still to rule and govern you; but if we can not govern you in peace, we will let you go. Selfishness shall no longer predominate our nature. We thank you and are grateful for the past favors we have received at your hands. Go, now, and make your own laws, elect your own rulers, rebuild your homes, cultivate your fields, educate your children, develop your mines, improve your commerce, and grow to be a great and powerful nation of five millions of people."

If the statesmanship of Spain would only pursue such a broad, liberal, and statesmanlike policy, the civilized world would forget her past history—even the horrors of the Spanish Inquisition—and this noble and Christian act would be a new era in her history for which the Christian people of the civilized world would praise and bless her. This course would make the Cubans their friends, patrons, and benefactors.

But, Mr. President, I must come to the conclusion of my remarks. How can this state of affairs be brought about? What is the duty of our Government in this great emergency? We have seventy millions of happy and contented people. The first duty we owe is to them, to protect their lives and their property. Coming, as I do, from a Southern State, I realize that the South will be the great sufferer in case of war between Spain and the United States. I know that our seacoast and our citizens will have to bear the brunt of the invasion, if any occurs.

I realize that the products of the South, and especially her cotton crop, will be cheapened and greatly injured in case of war. I shall not vote to involve them in war if we can procure the independence of Cuba without it. But I see no real good that we can accomplish except to declare for independence, and if Spain resist it, then we will defend our course. It is the part of statesmanship to take every possible precaution and to make every reasonable sacrifice to prevent war.

We were taught by our blessed Master in his memorable Sermon on the Mount, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." We are taught in the same blessed old book that God never fails to carry out His promises to His afflicted children. This is fully illustrated in His deliverance of the children of Israel from the bondage of Egypt and restoring to them the land of Canaan when the hosts of Pharaoh perished in the sea. Our blessed Master came as the Prince of Peace. He has never taught us that peace was to be purchased at the cost of honor or at the sacrifice of human life and in total disregard of the rights of humanity.

While it is our first duty to protect our own people and save them, if possible, from the horrors of war, we can not live alone to ourselves. We belong to the family of Christian nations and, thank God, in the past we have never lived alone for selfish purposes. The great heart of the American people is always right. We have ever stood in favor of relieving distress and suffering and in favor of peace and mercy. The people of the South are conservative, patriotic, loyal to the flag of our country, and are anxious to live in peace with the world; but they are also against tyranny and oppression and human butchery, and if they must fight to preserve the honor of the nation or to relieve the suffering and distress, and prevent the unjust effusion of the blood of their neighbors, they are not afraid to do so.

They are not cowards, but are a brave, peaceable, just, and patriotic people. What ought our country to do under such circumstances as exist now? What will we be justified in doing in the sight of all Christian nations? What should be the policy of our Government? If we shape a policy, it should be a just one, and then we should enforce it peaceably, if possible, but forcibly if the policy can not be peaceably accomplished.

We should undertake no policy that looks short of the independence of Cuba. No other policy is just, and no other remedy will cure the disease. Let it be accomplished, if possible, by peaceable means, but if it can not be accomplished any other way except by war, let us meet the crisis like a just, brave, and fearless people, and there can be but one result. Let us exhaust every reasonable means to accomplish it by peace. Let us intervene at once on humanitarian grounds, and say to Spain and the Cuban insurgents that the United States is ready to mediate between the two parties.

This offer on our part ought to be accompanied with a request to cease all hostilities for thirty days, to permit us to settle the differences and end the war. Let Spain know that no settlement will ever be satisfactory to us that does not give absolute independence to these people. During the pending negotiations, if our mediation is accepted, we should take care of the suffering Cubans.

If our mediation should be accepted by Spain we should appeal to her reason and statesmanship, and say to her that this great struggle had been protracted for three years at the sacrifice of life and treasure and that it is utterly impossible to reconcile the people of Cuba to the Spanish Government. We should say to the Spanish Government that the interest of humanity and Christian civilization demands the absolute freedom and independence of these people. We should say to Spain that due consideration for her honor and interest demanded the independence of these people. This would be friendly intervention.

If Spain would not accept our mediation, or in case she did, and failed to harken to the voice of reason and humanity and give these people absolute independence, then we would have exhausted all peaceable means to accomplish our policy. Then we should at once acknowledge the independence of Cuba. If Spain resisted it, we should drive her army and navy from Cuban soil.

Our Government in forcing this humane policy would have the support and sympathy of the civilized world. We can declare for independence without a declaration of war. We can acknowledge her independence; we can treat the Cubans as a free and independent nation, granting to them all the rights and privileges of an independent nation without any overt act of war toward Spain. In all probability Spain would treat this act on our part as an interference in her affairs and declare war against us, but if she did, we would land an American army on Cuban soil and end the barbarous war, relieve a distressed and starving people, and give to them the God-given right to form and put in operation a government of their own choosing.

We would send an American army to Cuban soil and teach Spain that American patriotism and American valor in this nineteenth century will not tolerate the cruelty, tyranny, and oppression of the Dark Ages. We could then say to her that the United States exhausted every possible peaceful means to convince the Government of Spain that the interest of peace, Christianity, and the cause of humanity demanded the independence of these people.

We then could say to the civilized world Spain would not listen to our appeals, and in the interest of justice and mercy and in the advancement of the cause of liberty we have decreed that these people shall be free, and that decree, if resisted, will be enforced by the Army and Navy of a Government that never went down in defeat. Say to the world we do not want one foot of Cuban soil. We do not ask or expect any pecuniary benefit resulting from their independence. Say to the world that we were prompted in the course that we have pursued by no selfish or unpatriotic purposes. Say to Spain that we gave them independence to make them free, happy, and self-supporting. Say to Spain that our chief desire was to relieve the suffering and distress of this starving and grief-stricken people, and to place them in a position where they could govern themselves. Mr. President, to accomplish this noble, unselfish, and patriotic purpose the Empire State of the South will do her full share.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I would not at this time trespass upon the Senate—and I shall only do so for a few minutes—were I not impelled by a sense of duty to give expression to the views which will influence and actuate me in casting my vote in the coming crisis.

I appreciate how terrible a thing is war. I know something of its horrors, something of its miseries, something of the destruction which it entails. I realize that only overwhelming reasons should permit a conflict between nations to occur. They should be reasons which involve national honor, without which no people can be truly a nation. They should be reasons which bring conviction to every sincere lover of his country, and which will make him ready to sacrifice his life, if need be, in the maintenance of the right. They should be reasons formulated without haste or passion, neglecting not the principles of justice, having always in view the honor of the nation, and resting on the broad and solid foundations which underlie national existence. When such reasons exist, a nation, if it is worthy of the name, becomes a nation of warriors. If it is not worthy of the name, it is in danger of ceasing to be known as a nation. Nations may battle for principle and be defeated, and yet stand higher than ever among the peoples of the world. The nation which has no principles to fight for must cease to exist.

The history of the United States is the history of a nation. Its foundation is the broad principle of liberty, which it demands for itself and concedes to others. Liberty has brought with it the responsibility of truth and justice, which have ever marked our intercourse with the world. We have ever been patient, slow to wrath, seeking the right rather than the advantage, fully realizing that in the former only lies the victory.

Such has been the attitude of the United States throughout the Cuban troubles. A great nation has long watched with patience, but with sympathy, the struggles of a people who seek the freedom which we enjoy. It has been mindful of the claims of Spain and jealous of its honor as of its own.

THE FAIRNESS OF THE ADMINISTRATION.

The Administration, imbued with the national spirit of fairness, has dealt with the questions that have arisen with the conservatism and dignity which become the representatives of a great people. Though the principal actors have been men of war, their actions have been those of men of peace. President McKinley, General Woodford, and General Lee have won distinction on the field of battle, and the laurels which came to them through the smoke of conflict will never fade. They there showed the bravery born of conviction. In the no less trying times of peace they have shown an equal heroism born of the national spirit of justice and the vivid recollections of the horrors of war. They have been the true representatives of a patient nation which loves peace and abhors war, but which will spring to arms at the first tap of a drum and fight as Americans can, and will fight for the honor of their country and their flag.

Mr. President, more than once has the sympathy of the United States gone out to Cuba. More than once has its indignation been aroused by the cruelties inflicted by Spain upon the people of that island. But with all its sympathy, with all its indignation, it has been patient, unwilling to do aught that might touch the pride of a friendly nation; unwilling to do aught that truth and right would not justify. It saw waged a war whose horrors increased in number and took on the character of barbarism. It saw murders by wholesale under the guise of military executions. It saw methods of warfare introduced which before the world were only methods of treachery and crime. It saw at last an officially organized plan for the starvation of more than a million people, and of this number it saw 600,000 die according to the programme of the Spanish Government. Not the barbarity of the Duke of Alva in the Netherlands could compare with the barbarity of General Weyler in Cuba. And this barbarity continues to this day and within four hours' steaming of our shore. In four hours one passes from a land where men are free to one where they are starved by law because they want the freedom which we enjoy.

NO MORE DELAY.

How long, Mr. President, could a generous people be expected to look with patience upon such a scene; how long withhold their demand that this great disgrace to Christian civilization should cease? A little more delay, and we should become accessories to the greatest crime of modern times. But the patience of a great nation has its limits, and that of the United States has been reached. Right, justice, and humanity demand that barbarism on our very shores shall cease, and the people of the United States have demanded that it shall cease—as it shall.

We have too long complied with Spain's desires in using our fleets to prevent succor from being taken to her Cuban foes. We have spent too much money in acting the part of friend to an enemy of a people fighting for freedom. Too long have we sent to men and women starved by law the food which keeps them alive within the Spanish lines. It has been a labor of love, in which men and women of all classes and conditions have most gladly taken part, and to which the nation, through Congress, has liberally given from the public Treasury. It has appealed to the charitable individual and to the charitable associations, and until the need is passed it will be continued. But it will be continued among those who are free, and great will be the generosity of this great people in their efforts to bring back to health and strength the hundreds of thousands among whom Clara Barton, that angel of mercy, has so long walked with stricken heart.

DESTRUCTION OF THE MAINE.

But we are at peace with Spain, and have constantly desired that peaceful relations be maintained. We have shown our confidence in her honor toward us by sending a ship into the harbor of Havana on a visit of peace. When the Maine steamed by Morro Castle on the morning of January 25, she went with the sincere hope of the nation that her presence would be instrumental in promoting a better understanding between Spain and the United States, to the end that the pacification of the island might follow.

She went under agreement with the Spanish minister at Washington. She had no hostile message to carry and no hostile purpose in view. She lay in the harbor of Havana, swinging with the tide, while her officers visited the shore as friends, made social and official calls upon the Spanish, attended places of amusement, and endeavored to pass the time as pleasantly and to make themselves as agreeable to their hosts as possible. No word or act of theirs was other than that of friends. No word or act of the Spanish was other than that of enemies.

On the evening of February 15 the United States battle ship Maine was utterly destroyed as she lay at her moorings. Two hundred and sixty-six officers and sailors were then killed or shortly after died of their wounds. Nearly all had been in their hammocks asleep, and awoke only to meet death in its most horrid shape. The battle ship sank where she lay, a mass of jagged iron which imprisoned beneath the water more than a hundred American sailors. Destruction had come, swift, sudden, and complete. Death had come as in a whirlwind of fire, and the number of the dead was equal to that of many a stubborn battle.

A BRAVE MAN'S COMMAND TO THE NATION.

Then occurred what must forever be regarded by the world with wonder and admiration. In his message announcing the destruction of his ship, Captain Sigsbee used two words which will make him famous in all history as a hero and a patriot, "Suspend judgment;" and a brave nation obeyed the command of a brave man, and, with hushed breath, sat still until the truth might be proven by indisputable evidence. The first thought of the people of the United States was of Spanish treachery. The ill-concealed delight of the Spaniards of Havana strengthened that suspicion. It was known that the Maine was looked on as a hostile vessel and that its destruction had been predicted. There was no reason to believe that the destruction of the great ship was by accident; but there was no proof, and loyally the people of the United States, though hot with wrath, obeyed the wish of the brave captain, and "withheld judgment."

Long and minute has been the examination of the wreck of the Maine to learn the story which it has to tell. Patiently were details gone over that there might be no error, no chance for disagreement, no opportunity to question the verdict. Longer than the Saviour wandered in the wilderness have the people restrained themselves, although sorely tempted to break bounds by the facts which became known to them. For more than forty days and nights has it withheld its judgment until it could have before it the final report of the court of investigation. This has been presented, and its verdict has been unanimously affirmed on the strength of the evidence.

SPAIN'S CRIME.

The Maine was blown up from the outside. It needs not the great bulk of evidence presented to establish this fact. It only requires to be known that the bottom of the ship is bent upward, with bow and stern pointing downward, while a mass of iron that came from the extreme bottom is in the wreckage 40 feet above its original position. All other evidence is cumulative. The fact is established beyond the possibility of a doubt by the position of the bow and that of the iron from the bottom where the mine first took effect.

By whose act, Mr. President, did this destruction of life, this annihilation of a great battle ship, occur? Surely not by the act of friends. Neither by accident, for such quantities of high explosives as accomplished the ruin wrought in Havana Harbor are not by accident at the anchorage of a ship of war. None were found near the Spanish war ship that was safely swinging at her moorings in the same harbor. It was by design that these explosives were where they were. Was it by design that they were exploded beneath the Maine? The people believe that it was, and I am one of the people. If by design, was it the act of the Spanish Government or of an unofficial person? I believe that the latter may be exonerated.

THE HARBOR UNDER MILITARY CONTROL.

No private person was likely to have such access to the harbor that he could plant such a destructive mine without the knowledge of the military officials. It has always been under absolute military control. No boats are at night permitted to ply on its waters, and if they do they are overhauled by the guard boats. It is apparently impossible that anyone could have planted a mine at the Maine mooring buoy without the knowledge and consent of the military officials. If the mine was planted with their knowledge and consent, the Maine was placed over it at their command by the Government pilot through the order of the harbor master, who designated the anchorage.

If placed knowingly over a mine by Spanish officials, is it to be supposed that the Maine was destroyed without their knowledge and consent? Is it conceivable that she was destroyed except by their order? If it were a floating mine or torpedo floated from the shore, official cognizance is as strongly established. No private person in Havana could have secured so great an amount of explosives without the consent of Spanish officials, for every cartridge, every pound of powder, dynamite, or other explosive or war material passes exclusively into their hands and leaves them only to get into the possession of those they trust.

HOSTILITY TO THE MAINE.

No unofficial person in Havana could have made a floating mine without securing the explosives from the Government, and could not have launched it and placed it under the Maine's side without official cognizance. Weyler often boasted that the harbor of Havana would be fatal to hostile vessels, and he knew whereof he spoke. And the Maine was considered a hostile vessel not only by the populace of Havana but by the Spanish officials. The very day that she entered the harbor Consul-General Lee telegraphed to the State Department that the—

Authorities profess to think United States has ulterior purpose in sending ship. * * * Ask that it be not done until they can get instructions from Madrid and say if for friendly purpose as claimed delay unimportant.

But the ship was already on her way, and entered port not long after this message was dispatched. In view of this, can it be doubted that the Maine was regarded as a hostile ship, and if hostile, that an effort would be made to make true Weyler's boast? But that she was regarded as hostile is further evidenced by the treatment of its officers by the Spanish officials. There were none of those friendly visits to the Maine which occur in friendly ports. Official visitors were few, constrained in manner, refusing hospitalities, and clearly showing that hate, not friendship or even courtesy, brought them there.

It has been stated, and not officially contradicted, that at the time of the destruction of the Maine all the electric lights connected with the main system of the city of Havana went out. This is a coincidence of great importance and one calling for further investigation as corroborating the evidence that the Maine was blown up from external causes.

The temporary extinguishment of electric lights would indicate that the electricity had been diverted to another channel; and when it is known that a powerful current is necessary to explode a mine, the occurrence of the explosion simultaneously with the extinguishment of the lights is one of the strongest links in the chain of proof against Spain.

WHERE THE MINE WAS MADE.

In this connection, too, must be taken the statement of Joseph Panell Gibbons, a submarine mine manufacturer of London, who, over his signature, states that he made 56 ground mines and 25 buoyant mines for Spain, which were shipped in a Spanish naval vessel to Havana and Ferrol. The mechanism of the firing apparatus is such that the mines could not be exploded by accident, and could be fired only with the knowledge and consent of two Spanish officials, whose cooperation is necessary. Mr. Gibbons is confident that the Maine was deliberately destroyed by one of his mines, containing 500 pounds of gun cotton.

I am prepared—

to satisfy by demonstration any jury of reasonable men that this is the true explanation of the destruction of the Maine.

A SUGGESTIVE COINCIDENCE.

There is a coincidence in connection with this wholesale murder in Havana Harbor to which, I think, not enough prominence has been given. A few days before, the Spanish minister, Senor Don Enrique Dupuy De Lôme, had been compelled to resign his office.

As the representative of a great power he had been received here with every honor by the Government, and every courtesy which society could bestow had been his. He was one to whom all doors were open and to whom all hands were outstretched in friendly greeting.

But while accepting all the offerings which a generous people could give, a letter which he acknowledged showed that he had not only been acting the part of a trickster, but that to duplicity and treachery he added insults to the President of the United States and to the people. He was forced to leave Washington, and scarcely had he departed when the Maine was destroyed in the harbor of Havana. Can we not see in the Washington incident a contributory cause, influencing sympathizing Spanish officials in Havana to seek revenge for the discovery of the duplicity of the Spanish Ambassador?

MURDERS IN COLD BLOOD.

Mr. President, I do not think that an impartial judge can fail to fix the responsibility for the destruction of the battle ship Maine and 266 brave men upon Spain. I do not know of any characteristic of the Spanish people or any fact in the history of that nation which would render a belief in such treachery untenable. I do not think that a nation which produced an Alva, to boast that he had killed in cold blood 18,000 men and women on account of their religious belief, and a Weyler, who can calmly make and enforce a plan for the deliberate starvation of a whole people who hold different ideas of liberty from his, will be found lacking in men who will blow into eternity 266 sleeping sailors.

Spain is to-day at heart as cruel, as treacherous, and as heartless as it was when the people of Madrid welcomed back from the Netherlands the bloody butcher of the bigot Philip—the same people who welcomed back Weyler from his 600,000 Cuban murders. I believe—I see no reason for any other belief—that on the Spanish nation rests the responsibility for the most hideous crime of the nineteenth century. It was a crime characteristic of the people. It was a crime to deeds like which in all ages they have given the name of war. And it was, Mr. President, in my opinion, an act of war, and as an act of war it will be regarded by the world.

The manner in which Spain's attention has been officially called to the destruction in one of her harbors of a battle ship of the United States is an evidence of the forbearance of this country, which can not fail to impress all nations. No intimation of complicity was made. Only the plain facts were placed before her. Were Spain guiltless, Spanish honor should have compelled an immediate, full, sincere, and friendly reply and an offer of reparation which would have satisfied the most sensitive American. But there came no offer of reparation. There came no condemnation of the deed which has shocked the world. There came only the insult of the naval attaché of the Spanish legation, that the Maine was blown up because of the carelessness and incompetency of her officers and the lack of discipline on board. This insult was echoed back from Spain. Had such a deed been committed in the harbor of any other nation of the world, all the power of its government would have been exerted to discover and punish the criminals. Not to do so would have been considered as culpable as the crime itself. But Spain made no effort in that direction. The attitude assumed was one almost of defiance. It was the attitude of one who is conscious of responsibility. It was one which strengthens the belief in Spain's complicity. The sole suggestion made was that the matter be arbitrated.

GOLD CAN NOT ATONE FOR BLOOD.

I believe in the principle of arbitration and have voted here in accordance with that belief. But there are questions that do not admit of arbitration. Men do not arbitrate questions of honor. Neither do nations. The treachery and cruelty involved in the destruction of the Maine place it beyond the pale of arbitration.

It was an outrage upon this country which struck at the national honor and which can not be atoned for through the mediation of a third party, and for which the payment of gold can not atone.

Mr. President, the battle ship Maine was destroyed and 266 brave men were killed in the cause of freedom. It is a cause in which the United States has fought more than once, and in which we stand ready to fight again. We have with sympathy and patience long watched the struggles of a heroic people fighting for liberty. They have proven to the world that they desire it, and that they will have it is written down in the book of fate. The United States stands ready to assist the cause in which such grievous loss has come to her by the recognition of the independence of Cuba and by intervention in behalf of the struggling people should Spain refuse to relinquish her claim to an island which she has wasted with fire and sword and half depopulated by deliberate starvation.

Mr. President, if war must come, we are conscious of the justice of our cause. Appealing to the God of nations, let us press forward in the cause of humanity, our banner bearing the inscription:

Teach us to sow the seed of many a noble deed;
Make us determined, undaunted, and strong;
Armed with the sword of right, dauntless amid the fight,
Help us to level the bulwark of wrong.

[Applause in the galleries.]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 20,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States dated March 28, 1898, together with the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the U. S. battle ship Maine; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I desire to present an amendment which I shall offer to the bill at a later date.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, before this subject passes from the attention of the Senate this morning I shall ask its indulgence for a few brief moments for the purpose of giving expression to the sentiments which I hold bearing upon the grave questions now pressing upon the American people, and also because I desire to place upon the records of this body the overwhelming sentiment which I believe exists among the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent.

Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with the humane and patriotic sentiments which have been so eloquently and forcibly expressed by many distinguished members of this body in favor of recognizing the independence of the heroic men upon the Island of Cuba who for years have been engaged in a death struggle against tremendous odds in the effort to achieve their liberty and to secure for themselves the God-given right of self-government. I give my unqualified indorsement, and shall gladly give my vote, for a resolution authorizing and directing the President of the United States to employ the armed forces of the nation and all its resources that may be necessary for the purpose of bringing to an immediate termination the barbarities now being practiced upon those persecuted, stricken, and helpless people.

Mr. President, I shall not stop here to repeat the tale of murder, of starvation, and all the unspeakable atrocities visited upon those hapless victims of Spanish tyranny. Suffice it for me to say that they stand unsurpassed in the bloodiest and most infamous pages which history has yet recorded.

The details of this story of savagery and suffering have been told by lips far more eloquent and impressive than mine. The cold, bare, indisputable facts have been laid before the Senate and the country by men whose word can not be questioned. The distinguished Senators from Vermont, New Hampshire, Nebraska, and Mississippi have seen these things with their own eyes and heard with their own ears, and from their lips we have learned the whole wretched truth.

And as a result, Mr. President, the heart and conscience, the sympathy, and the indignation of the American people are aroused and stirred as they have not been for a third of a century. And the great body of the people, rising above all selfish and partisan considerations, responding to the demands of outraged humanity, stimulated by that love of liberty bequeathed to them by the fathers and founders of our own Republic, stand ready to declare that the limit of endurance has been reached, that patience and forbearance in this case have ceased to be virtues, and that in the name of persecuted humanity, in the name of liberty, justice, and peace, and in the sacred name of a just and outraged God this murder of helpless men and starving women and children, too long tolerated, must cease.

Mr. President, it is true that in deference to the aroused indignation of the American people, and in the hope, no doubt, of changing the issue and diverting us from our manifest purpose, Spain has within a few days adopted what upon its face seems to be a more humane policy toward the victims of her past cruelty. But this act of reparation comes too late to be of value. In the light of her past record, no one believes that Spain's action is prompted by a genuine sentiment of sympathy, or that any promises that she may make under duress would be kept for a single moment if the fear of intervention by the United States were removed.

Besides, Mr. President, this eleventh-hour repentance can not now atone for the enormities of which she has been guilty or restore to life and usefulness the 400,000 men, women, and children whom she has deliberately starved to death. Moreover, it must not be forgotten that, although seven long weeks have passed since the destruction of the Maine in the friendly harbor of Havana, up to this moment no expression of regret has been tendered and no offer of reparation has been made by the Spanish Government, although it must now be apparent to the most skeptical and unbelieving that our ship could never have been so destroyed and her crew mercilessly slaughtered except by the connivance and with the knowledge of Spanish officials.

Mr. President, I have no wish or intention of criticising or casting the slightest reflection upon the Administration in this trying hour. I have no doubt but that the distinguished man who stands at the head of this nation has pursued and is pursuing what seems to him a wise and patriotic course, and that he has earnestly endeavored, through the necessarily slow channels of diplomacy, to bring about a settlement which should, if possible, avoid an armed conflict, preserve peace, and do substantial justice to all concerned.

But, Mr. President, it must be evident to every reflecting mind that the time for diplomatic adjustment of these issues has passed. The American people have been patient and long-suffering; for while all their sympathies were with the struggling Cubans, they have yet resigned themselves with calmness and fairness to the heavy burden of expense involved in maintaining neutrality and a just observance of their international obligations. At a cost of millions of dollars we have policed the seas with our ships and have stood guard for Spain along our coast.

We have borne with resignation the loss of an immense trade and the destruction of valuable American property. We have seen our flag insulted and our citizens unjustly incarcerated and assassinated. But all this time we have endeavored to restrain our just anger while waiting for Spain to restore order in Cuba and make reparation for the injuries done us. And while the American people, at great cost, have striven to maintain neutrality, and thus given aid and comfort indirectly to Spain, what, Mr. President, has been her conduct and how has she repaid us? She has violated every principle of civilized warfare and every sentiment of humanity by waging a cruel war of extermination—not against armed soldiers on the field of battle, not against foemen capable of defending themselves, but against old men, against the wounded and sick; against weak women and innocent children. And to this has been added the crowning infamy of all her offenses, the murder in cold blood of 266 officers and men of the American Navy, and the destruction of an American battle ship in a Spanish harbor, while floating at a mooring assigned to her by a Spanish official, by a submarine mine laid and fired by Spaniards.

Mr. President, if I understand the sentiment and the wishes of the great body of the American people aright, what they demand now is not the polished phrases employed in diplomatic negotiation, but open, aggressive, decisive action, such as befits American traditions and American character. They ask that diplomacy and circumlocution and every sort of subterfuge be laid aside, and that the cry of humanity and the demand for justice be now heeded.

Mr. President, we have often been told in the discussion of this grave question that war is a terrible thing and that it should never be resorted to except in the last extremity and in defense of the national honor. We are told that if we are to go to war it must be in a cause that is sacred—such a cause as will fully justify us in the eyes of the civilized world; such a cause as shall sanctify every sacrifice that must be made in its prosecution—in short, a cause so righteous that the individual and national conscience shall be satisfied and clear and the arm of every citizen nerved and strengthened by the solemn conviction that it is being raised for humanity, for justice, for honor, for God, and the right.

Accepting the test of these conditions as our rule of action and applying them at this time, I do not hesitate to declare that in my judgment our Government has ample justification and that it becomes our solemn duty, in the circumstances now surrounding and confronting us, to recognize the independence of Cuba and to use armed force, if necessary, to give such recognition full and complete effect.

Beyond this, but upon wholly separate and distinct grounds,

I believe that we shall be fully justified in declaring war against Spain for the destruction of the Maine and the cowardly murder of her crew, and in prosecuting it with all the vigor and power at the nation's command until that wrong shall have been avenged, until the national honor shall have been vindicated, and until full and complete satisfaction shall have been rendered the American people.

Mr. President, while holding these pronounced views, I shall yet await with calm confidence the action of the great committee of this body having this grave subject in charge, satisfied that out of the fullness of their ripe judgment, their profound statesmanship, and their exalted patriotism will be evolved a plan of action which shall meet all the demands of this trying situation, which shall do justice to the oppressed, which shall vindicate the courage and Christian character of the American people, which shall enthrone liberty in Cuba and preserve unsullied the honor and dignity of the nation, and which shall declare to the world that there is no room beneath the folds of our flag or within its shadow for inhumanity and injustice, for humiliation or fear.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator from Utah, unless he desires to occupy more time than I think we ought to spare from the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. How much time does the Senator desire?

Mr. RAWLINS. I think not to exceed fifteen minutes.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, the facts in our relations to Spain and Cuba are known. The case has been made up, and the question now is, What are we going to do? It is not a question for solution, in my judgment, by the executive department. It is a question which belongs peculiarly to Congress. It is for us, the representatives of the States on this side of the Capitol and the representatives of the people on the other side of the Capitol, to decide in this emergency what we are to do. It is for Congress under the Constitution to declare war, and Congress ought to be willing to take that full responsibility when the grave and critical emergency arises. The President is not vested with that power. The President, after war is declared by the competent constitutional authority, may, with the consent of two-thirds of this body, terminate the war by a treaty of peace.

I do not rise to make any censure of the President of the United States. If any censure now is to go to any tribunal or authority, it must be to that which is clothed under the Constitution with this profound responsibility.

The facts being known, the case being made up, shall we declare war or shall we decide for peace? Mr. President, it is not necessary to wait upon the President to know whether in view of the exigencies which have arisen and the facts which are known we shall have peace or war. We can decide to have peace—peace with incidental Spanish outrage and clandestine murder. We can decide it to-day and relieve the President from all responsibility and connection with it. As against the peace, we can, under the Constitution, by virtue of our authority, have war. I am free to say that we ought not to declare war except for grave and sufficient reasons. It seems to me that those reasons exist.

Mr. President, we are asked to delay. The Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, composed of the ablest and wisest statesmen in our nation, has had this subject under consideration, and I doubt not that this body has full confidence in the judgment and wisdom of that committee. I am informed that that committee have decided in their own minds what action should be taken, and that they are prepared to make it known to the Senate. I am informed that they are asked from another department of the Government, for some reason or for no reason, not to report to this body the conclusion to which they have arrived. I am informed (how true that may be of course the members of that committee will well know) that the executive authority knows what the proposed action of our committee is in relation to this grave subject. I am informed, but I may be mistaken in it, that our committee have not been advised by the Executive as to what his purpose or his policy in respect to this matter is to be. He wants more time.

Every member of Congress of this coordinate and equal department of the Government should endeavor to maintain, so far as we can, the equipoise as provided in the Constitution between the equal and coordinate departments of the Government. We are desirous of acting in full harmony with the Chief Executive of this nation, because we know that when we declare war we shall have discharged our duty and responsibility in that regard. The President, as Commander in Chief of the Army, has the duty of waging the war to a successful conclusion.

Why are we asked to delay? How long has it been since the destruction of our good ship Maine and the 266 men in the service of their country by the explosion of a submarine Spanish mine placed in the harbor by Spain at the buoy, which shall hereafter be known in history as No. 4, and anchored there, and the decisive moment awaited when it should by wind and tide be drifted to the fated spot, then an explosion and then the clandestine murder of our seamen? Forty-eight days have gone by. That is one fact that is known; but it is not all.

For three years we are told that many American citizens, guilty of no offense against the Spanish authority, have been without just cause imprisoned and some have been assassinated in their prison cells. American citizens engaged in peaceful pursuits in the management of their own property, lawfully within the Island of Cuba, have been by Spanish officers and soldiers taken out into the highways and shot to death. The consuls of the United States have not been derelict in the performance of their duty and have undoubtedly advised the executive department of the Government of all these heinous outrages against American citizens and against the American nation.

We appealed to the Executive to send us months ago those advices—the evidence of those outrages upon our people. What answer has been made to us? That it would not be safe—it would not be compatible with the public interests—must be the answer. Because if what our consuls in Cuba have reported concerning the heinous, clandestine, and treacherous outrages upon American citizens should be communicated to the American people, it would so inflame our people and our members of Congress, who alone have the authority to declare war, that they could no longer be restrained, and they would rise in their majesty and avenge the outrage which has been perpetrated upon them.

Mr. President, we have appealed in vain for that official information to which we were entitled, and its nonpresentation to us can be excused only upon the ground that Spain is without honor, that she has no control over her officials, that her officers and her soldiers are prepared even to strike a clandestine and treacherous deathblow to our representatives in that island. We have waited month after month and day after day until the feeling has permeated and impregnated the very bones of the American people that our patience has been exhausted, and that if we are a self-respecting nation we ought to act.

But, Mr. President, let us think of it a little further. Why should we longer delay? We were told last week that the Executive was desirous of keeping himself in harmony with the undoubted sentiment of the American people and of the American Congress; that he, too, had come to the conclusion that some decisive and heroic action was necessary, but that he wished a little delay should take place for a few days—to Thursday or Friday of last week. The most confidential friends and advisers of the President in Congress told us that he would be content with nothing less than the absolute independence of Cuba, and that in his opinion the declaration of such independence would be inadequate, but that it must be accompanied by armed intervention.

At the time that declaration was made, when we were asked to delay on that account, there was being penned the message in the Executive Mansion of the private and confidential secretary of the President, addressed to one of the leading newspapers, deprecating the disposition of the majority of Congress and invoking the exercise of influence by leading and influential citizens throughout this country to induce a majority to cease all further action in this regard in order that there might be further and more protracted negotiations with Spain to bring about peace.

We were next informed that the Executive had presented an ultimatum of some kind to the Kingdom of Spain, and we in some vague way were told or advised that with that ultimate declaration to Spain this Government would be content with nothing less than the absolute independence of the Island of Cuba.

Mr. President, we are told from across the water, in what purports to be an official interview, by the prime minister of the Spanish Kingdom, that in the whole progress of the negotiations there has never been a suggestion of the independence of the suffering people of Cuba. Does he speak true? Does any one doubt the authenticity of that message? The President has accredited his veracity and his sense of honor and of justice in a message which he has communicated to the American Congress. We have been advised that we should have peace, peace, glorious peace, at any price, with all the incidental and infamous outrage which Spain can inflict upon us, and we are now told that a little delay will bring about that result. We are told in circular letters emanating from the city of New York and the city of Philadelphia, and it is whispered about in the corridors of the Capitol and intended to reach every object whereby the result might be accomplished, and what is it?

That Spain has no respect, that Spain has no fear for the American nation, that any proposition of settlement emanating from this Government would be treated by that Government with contempt, and that it would be disregarded. Accordingly, having come to that abject and humiliating situation of degradation, we are to invoke Great Britain or Germany or some other nation for whom the Spanish people have some respect and of whom they have some fear, contrary to the traditions and policy of our Government that foreign interference is incompatible in the affairs of the American continent and would not be tolerated. We are asked to invoke those nations to use their influence to bring Spain to a position where she might be willing to accept some proposition which it is supposed that the Executive of this Government had then presented to her authority.

Mr. President, if this Government had taken heroic and decisive action, which is often the highest conservatism, in the performance of the duty which it owes to every one of the citizens who are ready to render it allegiance, there would have been no necessity for us to call upon foreign nations to aid us in bringing any foreign government to just and reasonable terms in respect to any outrage which may have been committed upon our citizenship. But for years our Government Administration, our conduct in respect to the Cuban question, our relations to the Kingdom of Spain, have been so cowardly and pusillanimous, so unworthy of any self-respecting people in this wide world, that the Spanish people are justified in holding us in contempt. Had it been that they respected and feared us, as they would fear and respect any other self-respecting government, our ship Maine would not have been treacherously destroyed and the bodies of our sailors would not have been mangled and lost. That crime must be charged to our indecision and cowardice.

I do not desire to use strong language; perhaps I may use too harsh a word when I say cowardice, but it was that which, in its nature and in its effect under the circumstances of the case, was equivalent to cowardice: it was a display of weakness which a nation and a people like Spain would ever be ready, if known, to take advantage of.

Mr. President, I do not care to take very much of the time of the Senate, because it seems to me the time has arrived when we should act rather than talk. It is the case of American citizens assassinated, American citizens unjustly imprisoned, American ships willfully destroyed, with no evidence of contrition or regret expressed in any form that we have heard of; repeated peaceful protests made against the outrage which has been committed, strenuous efforts which philanthropy made to bring relief to the peaceful inhabitants who have been driven in, detained without provision to shelter, feed, or clothe them, and thereby causing their willful destruction to the numbers of hundreds of thousands by starvation, and of protests made useless.

I have no doubt that our Government has objected that these things should take place, although we are not officially advised of it. But if so, our protests have been ignored and disregarded. For years such has been the case. I ask any reasonable man how we can expect that a further effort in that same direction will have any other or greater effect than it has had in the past.

And what are you going to do about it? is the question which we must decide. Mr. President, the introduction of the resolution by me which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations seemed to me the proper thing to do about it. It was to recognize the independence of the Republic of Cuba. But we are advised categorically and absolutely by Spain that any peaceful effort on our part to bring about that result will not for one moment be entertained; that it will be regarded as an unfriendly act. To make effective that recognition armed intervention is a necessity. Ought we to stop with a declaration that the President if necessary should make armed intervention?

It seems to me to take that course would be to endeavor to unload the responsibility and duty devolved upon Congress on the shoulders of the President. For instance, if we pass a resolution declaring that the President if necessary shall use the Army and Navy to drive the Spanish soldiers or the Spanish navy away from Cuba, we are undertaking to direct him to commit an act of war, and we endeavor to delegate to him in his discretion to decide whether or not we shall have war. We ought not to do that. We ought not to undertake to delegate or devolve upon the President a duty and a responsibility which must belong to us. Knowing that armed intervention means war, knowing, because we are officially advised of the intimation of Spain that it will be regarded as an act of war, we can not now consistently stop there and direct the President to use the Army and Navy in forcible intervention in behalf of Cuba without making a declaration of war.

Mr. President, armed intervention necessarily means war. Now, shall we make a declaration to that effect and relieve the President of all further responsibility and insist upon that question? Undoubtedly the Committee on Foreign Relations will take that question into consideration. But it seems to me that if we simply content ourselves by passing a resolution to the effect that it should be armed intervention and leave it to the President to determine whether the Army or the Navy would be employed for that purpose we will have taken no step in advance except as indicating an expression of desire on the part of Congress, rather than a final and conclusive declaration.

If we pass such a resolution will not those gentlemen whose influences are desirous of peace at any price, those humanitarian associations, which so far deprecate the idea of bloodshed that they would be willing that this Government should ignore any affront or outrage which may be committed upon us, appeal to the President and say to him, "Wait; wait a little while. Spain may after all be willing to do justice and voluntarily withdraw her forces from Cuba. Wait a little while. The insurgents themselves may succeed in expelling the Spanish soldiers from the Island of Cuba. Wait a little while; six months or a year; wait, and if by that time it appears that it will be impossible for the Cubans to attain their independence without the use of the Army of the United States, then will be time enough for the President to employ force."

They will also further say, I take it, to the President that Congress having undertaken to load the responsibility upon the President of committing an act of war, which is equivalent to a declaration of war, that power being vested in Congress alone, the President ought to ignore it. I am not sure but that that argument would be justly taken. The President ought to hesitate to commit an act which amounts to a declaration of war when this duty and this authority have not been committed to him by the Constitution of our country.

Now, Mr. President, I have no greater desire for war than the most peaceful man in the Senate. If Congress shall decide that the resolution declaring war against Spain or recognizing the independence of Cuba should not pass, it would be equivalent to an expression of purpose no longer to interfere in behalf of the people of Cuba. If we should decide upon that finally, and let it go, while it will be to the shame and the disgrace of our country, it would be far better, in my judgment, to so conclude, and drop this question and let it alone, than to continue in the hopeless state of exasperation and uncertainty with which the country has been inflicted for the months and the years that have gone by.

If we shall decide for war, let us do it openly and absolutely and unequivocally; let the President of the United States, as it would be his duty and no doubt his pleasure, proceed to employ the Army and the Navy, waging that war immediately and decisively to a conclusion. Probably four weeks would decide the contest; and in my judgment it would decide it without the loss of a life. That may be regarded as a very hopeful outlook for the situation.

Mr. President, 35,000 Cubans, unarmed, without recognition as an independent government, without any ships, or without any instrumentalities, relatively speaking, for the purpose of carrying on war, dared to take up arms against the Kingdom of Spain, and in the course of a three years' struggle have fought her almost to a standstill, and they have not only encountered all the forces that Spain could bring to bear in order to bring them into subjection, but they have encountered the opposition of the United States, whose resources in a measure have been employed in order to intercept any supplies that might be carried to the Cubans.

Thirty-five thousand poor, struggling Cubans are now upon the point—so it is claimed by the men who desire peace at any price—ready and competent to bring about their own independence, and yet we speak through chattering teeth about the dangers of a conflict with the Kingdom of Spain. Decisive action would prevent any serious trouble, in my judgment, and we ought to take it.

Mr. President, I rose simply for the purpose of setting forth in this desultory and informal way the reason why I thought we ought to pass a resolution recognizing the independence of Cuba and declaring war against Spain.

IMPROVEMENT OF INDIAN RIVER, FLORIDA.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we shall now proceed with the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the indulgence of the Senator from Iowa having charge of the sundry civil appropriation bill to permit me to report a bill from the Committee on Commerce and to put it on its passage. I think it will occupy but a moment of the time of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. QUAY. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report, as originating in that committee, a bill to amend an act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved June 3, 1896; and I ask unanimous consent that it may be placed upon its passage.

The bill (S. 4332) to amend an act "Making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1896, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That that part of the act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved June 3, 1896, which reads, "Improving Indian River, Florida: By dredging channel at Negro Cut, near Indian River, $7,500," be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows: "Improving Indian River, Florida: By dredging channel at Negro Cut, near Indian River Inlet, and construction of training wall or piling for the protection of the dredged channel, $7,500."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PENROSE in the chair). The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which has been read. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF NAVAL COURT OF INQUIRY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States, dated March 28, 1898, together with the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the U. S. battle ship Maine, in Havana Harbor, February 15, 1898, and the testimony taken before the court, 13,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 6,500 for the use of the Senate.

VENEZUELAN CLAIMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of January 17, 1898, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, accompanied by copies of correspondence exchanged between Henry Woodruff, trustee and of counsel for the holders of a majority of the first-mortgage bonds of "The Railway of the East," of Venezuela, et al., and the Department of State, and by a list of claims of citizens of the United States presented after August 1, 1868, and, so far as appears, not settled by Venezuela, nor disposed of by the commission of 1889-90.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 4, 1898.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to inquire about the item on page 5, for the purchase of the Union Building, which was laid over with the understanding, I think, that it would be taken up this morning. I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he is prepared to consider that item at this time?

Mr. ALLISON. It was passed over without any special understanding, so far as I know, as to the time when it should be again taken up. I should be glad to go on with the bill, and leave that item for consideration later, when there is a fuller Senate, if the Senator will allow me. There is no haste about it, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. The only reason why I ask for the consideration of the amendment in relation to the Union Building is that I think it a very irregular way to pass over important items in an appropriation bill and then have them come up later when possibly Senators who are interested in them may not be here. I have very pronounced opinions about this proposed purchase of the Union Building, and there is no telling when we shall have a larger Senate than we have now. We certainly can call a quorum and thereby get a full Senate. I wish the amendment might be disposed of this morning. I have made an investigation of this matter, and I should like to state my conclusions to the Senate rather than possibly have this item go over to some time when I may not be here. That is all.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] may also have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. QUAY. I have been paying some attention to this subject; and if the Senator from New Hampshire is so exceedingly anxious that the bill shall be taken up when those interested are present, it seems to me he might have waited my presence in the Chamber the other day when the item was under consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not look to see whether the Senator was in the Chamber or not. It is his duty to be here. I am not his keeper.

Mr. QUAY. It is the duty of all Senators to be here, and therefore the occasion of the consideration of this amendment might as well be at one time as another if duty alone is to be regarded in the case. I do not know but that the Senator from New Hampshire is right that this question might be disposed of as well at one time as at another, though I suppose from the disposition indicated in the Senate the other day that it is scarcely worth while to expect a favorable result.

The clause went over when it was last before the Senate on the questions, I think, first, of the assessment of this property as indicative of its value, and, second, upon the desire of my distinguished friend from New Hampshire to know what officer or person represented the Government in suggesting the construction of the building. I asked that the clause might be laid aside until I could procure the information which was desired. I have inquired of the president of the corporation, first, how the assessment compares with the assessments of similar property in the city of like value, and, second, at whose suggestion the building was constructed. I have the following reply:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 4, 1898.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to my talk with you respecting the purchase of the Union Building, its character, cost, and assessment, I beg leave to state for your information that the building was built in 1891-92 of steel, is practically fireproof, and capable of carrying enormous weights, as shown by the report of the architect, which report can easily be verified by the Architect of the Capitol.

In a report made to Congress the Public Printer stated that it was nearer fireproof than any building outside of a Government building in Washington. It could easily accommodate 2,500 people. I do not claim that its assessed valuation in any manner represents the value of the property. The present assessment is $173,962; it was formerly assessed at $207,500. The Corcoran Building, corner of Fifteenth and F streets, is assessed at $200,278 and could not be bought for less than $700,000. The National Safe Deposit building, corner of Fifteenth street and New York avenue, is assessed at $154,468 and could not be bought for less than $600,000. The Atlantic Building, F street between Ninth and Tenth streets, assessed at $99,335 could not be bought for less than $400,000, and the Inter-Ocean Building, Ninth street between E and F streets, assessed at $55,885, can not be purchased for less than $175,000.

Property owners in Washington usually get the lowest rate of assessment possible and then feel they are paying taxes enough.

Owing to the uncertain rental of this building, leases being made from year to year, I represented about a year ago to the board of assessors that the rate of assessment was too high; on this statement it was cut down. This should not be regarded as any evidence of valuation. The building cost the present owners exactly $635,000. There were some other items of expense which came in incidentally, so in my letter to Mr. CANNON I stated that the cost was $650,000.

The erection of the building was suggested by the Postmaster-General, who, in 1891, was very much in need of quarters for the city post-office. It was therefore built with the view to accommodate Government needs.

Very truly, yours,

MYRON M. PARKER.

Hon. M. S. QUAY,
United States Senate, City.

That is the reply to the inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire. I do not know that I have anything further to add to what I said on Thursday last in relation to the question of economy to the Government in purchasing this building. As I said then, the Government is paying $47,000 per annum rent for it, and in my judgment it will save money by the purchase. If, in the opinion of the Senator from New Hampshire—or the Senators from New Hampshire, I should say—and other Senators, the price is too high and the Government is in need of additional accommodations, it is very easy to so amend the suggestion that the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of the Interior or some other officer of the Government shall, in his discretion, if it is essential to have this building for the purposes of the Government, examine and condemn it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senate will bear me out in the statement that a moment ago, when I very courteously asked the Senator having charge of this bill [Mr. ALLISON] whether or not this proposed amendment was to be considered this morning, I was simply negotiating with the Senator as to the question involved in my inquiry, and that the criticism uttered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] was not justified by anything I had said or done. The amendment was not before the Senate, and it would not have been considered, certainly so far as I am concerned, in the absence of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, I am opposed to this amendment absolutely, totally, and forever. I believe it is utterly vicious, and that it ought not to be in this bill. Since the Senate adjourned on Thursday last I have received two letters from a certain distinguished citizen of Washington concerning this property. One is dated April 1 and the other is dated April 4, and as they are almost identical in terms, I presume that "the babies got mixed," and that the author of the letters intended to send the second letter to some other Senator instead of sending it to me, although in both instances I am addressed. It is evident that this gentleman, who is a large owner in this building, is very anxious to sell it to the Government, or he would not have written me twice in three days concerning it. In the first letter he says that the building cost the present owners $650,000, and in the second letter he says it cost $635,000. I am prepared to show to the Senate that it did not cost either of these sums or anywhere near either of these sums.

It will be remembered that when we were discussing the Globe Building the proposition was for the Government to pay the owners of that building $45,000; and yet that property was offered to a private citizen within two or three months, to my own personal knowledge, for $35,000; and it is a matter of history—as Senators can find out for themselves if they will go back a few years—that this building figured in a bill before Congress for something over $100,000—this same property. It was proposed then to unload it on the Government for over $100,000, and now it is proposed to unload it on the Government for $45,000, when it was offered to a private citizen for $35,000.

I was told yesterday that this proposed amendment was going to be adopted no matter what I should say about it. I do not believe it is going to be adopted, Mr. President, and I shall not believe it until the vote is counted. The letters that I have in my hand, addressed to me by a prominent citizen of this District, say that he owns one-third of the building, and a certain distinguished gentleman who was once a member of this body is likewise a large owner in it, and he makes the statement, as I have said, in one letter that it cost $635,000 and in the other that it cost $650,000. The discrepancy is trivial, yet it shows a want of exactness.

Mr. President, I have seen a gentleman who owned this building not a great while ago—at least he owned a very large interest in it—who informed me that when it was purchased by its present owners it was capitalized at $384,000, and stock was issued to that amount. That stock was purchased of the present owners, some at par and some for less than par, and it is idle for anybody to come here and say that that building cost the present owners $650,000. The gentleman to whom I allude said to me that, in his judgment—and he has had experience in that direction—the building can be duplicated to-day for at least $75,000 less than it cost seven or eight years ago, because of the greatly decreased cost of iron, steel, brick, and almost everything else that enters into the construction of a building. My judgment is that $300,000 would be a very large price for that building; but I am satisfied that the Government does not want to buy it at any price, and I think I shall show conclusive reasons why the Government does not want it at any price.

Mr. President, I took the trouble to consult a builder who has had intimate knowledge of that building and who has been all over it time and time again, and I asked him if he would kindly make me an estimate of what he thought that building could be duplicated for. He did so. He is a gentleman of integrity and of much experience in building operations. He says that the land cost $107,000; that is, at $5 a foot, but nobody would think of paying that for it now on the street where it is located; but he admits that the sum of $107,000 was paid for it. He makes a further estimate and says that in his judgment—he did not say he would duplicate it himself, but my impression is he would—the building can be duplicated for $227,000, not including the part under the ground. I then asked the gentleman with whom I had previously conversed and who at one time was a large owner in the building what he thought the basement of it cost, and he said $40,000 would be a fair price, which would make a total of $267,000.

It is a well-known fact that there is some steel and iron in this building, but it is likewise a well-known fact that the best iron frames, ready to go up, cost at this time only 2¼ cents a pound, while they cost about 4 cents a pound when that building was constructed; and I have ascertained from competent authority that steel beams to-day, not fitted, can be bought for a cent and a half a pound, which is the lowest amount that steel beams probably ever have been sold for in the history of the world, and very much less than they cost when that building was constructed.

Mr. President, if the Government wants a building like the Union Building, why does not the Government advertise for 20,000 feet of land in some eligible part of this great city and advertise for proposals to duplicate that building? That would be business. There is a vast amount of land that men want to sell in this city, and they would like the Government for a customer. There are constructors in this city who would be glad of an opportunity to duplicate that building at a fair price, and I say that if the Government really wants a building of that kind, the business proposition, and the only business proposition, is for the Government to advertise for the land and to advertise for proposals to duplicate the building precisely as it stands to-day.

I have not any doubt, Mr. President, but that if the Government will do that, the Government will get a proposition to duplicate that building for less than one-half what it is proposed to pay for it in this bill. That is my deliberate conviction. I may be wrong, but that is my judgment. Believing that, of course I can not vote for a proposition that the Government shall pay the present owners of that building $650,000 for it.

Mr. President, I walked through that street the other day. It is not a very wide street; it is rather a narrow street; and I noted the accessories to that building, the surroundings, and I want to read them to the Senate, and then ask my colleagues if they think that the Government ought to buy a building situated as that building is, and at the price proposed.

It will be remembered that when the Government constructs a building in any town or city of the American Union the Government demands that there shall be a clear space of 40 feet around the building. In the little city in which I live there is a beautiful Government building costing $200,000, and we had to pay $60,000 to get land such as the Government demanded we should have, so that there should be an open space of 40 feet entirely around the structure. That is the requirement in every instance, and that requirement goes into every bill which passes this body for the construction of a public building, and yet we are calmly asked to purchase a building upon a narrow street in the city of Washington that is hemmed in by other buildings of the most inflammable kind and without any protection whatever, so far as fire is concerned, beyond the fact that gentlemen say it is a fireproof building. The term "fireproof building" is a very elastic one, as we chance to know by observation and experience in this country. A great many so-called fireproof buildings have gone up in smoke.

As to the surroundings. I went on the south side of G street, rather a narrow street, and I started in at Seventh street. First, I encountered an eating house and saloon; next, a residence; next, a small shop occupied by a sign painter; next, a steam laundry; next, a dairy lunch room; next, a small shop occupied by a jeweler; next, a lunch room; next, a Chinese laundry; next, a small shoe-repairing shop; next, a small oyster saloon; next, a scouring establishment; next, a harness shop; next, three residences, and wound up on the corner of Sixth street with a large liquor establishment and pool room.

I then went across the street on the side where the Union Building is located, and I again started at Seventh street. I found first a lunch room; then a billiard room; next a small shop for repairing shoes; next a sign painter and barber shop; next a small cigar store; next a small machine shop; next a large livery stable; next to that another livery stable, running up directly to the walls of the Union Building. I went beyond the Union Building and found there tumble-down carpenter shops, probably with a frontage of 150 feet; and the carpenter shop next to the Union Building is occupied by a gentleman to whom it was willed with the understanding that he could occupy it just so long as that building should remain; and he is going to occupy it just as long as the clapboards or pieces of timber are in that building, because if the building is removed, he loses his interest in the property. Next, I came to a Chinese laundry. Then there were several cheap shops, and then a bakery and eating house.

Mr. President, these are the surroundings of the Union Building, and I submit that if the Senate of the United States concludes to purchase a piece of property located where this property is, at this excessive valuation, it will be a greater surprise to me than I have ever had during my public career.

I do not arraign the Committee on Appropriations in this matter at all. The members of the Committee on Appropriations are hurried, busy, and overworked—they must be. I do not suppose that any member of the Committee on Appropriations took the trouble or had the time to go to G street and look at the surroundings of this property, nor is it very likely that they have had the time to make an investigation as to its real value. They have taken the word of some distinguished gentlemen in the city of Washington whom we are always glad to believe if we choose to do so.

Mr. President, this proposition was submitted to the House of Representatives, where appropriation bills properly originate, and after investigation the House refused to put it in the bill—at least it is not in the bill as it comes to the Senate; and I submit it is not the part of wisdom, after the House made investigation and sent this appropriation bill over here, that we should load it down with propositions such as this. I do not believe the Senate is going to do it; I do not believe that the Senate is going to vote $650,000 to buy a piece of property without the most careful and conscientious examination of the matter.

We should ascertain, first, is it worth the money? Second, do we want the property on a street such as G street is between Sixth and Seventh streets? And third, whether in this emergency, when the public Treasury is not oversupplied with money and there may be a demand for every dollar that can be raised by even increased taxation, we want to purchase a building that it has not been shown the Government needs at the present time, at, as I have said before, a value that in my judgment is absolutely out of proportion to the cost of the building, or to its duplication, if such duplication should be had.

I feel very warmly on this subject, I confess, Mr. President. I feel that if this proposed amendment goes through, it will be a notice to every real-estate holder in the city of Washington that if he can only make it appear that the Government needs additional accommodations, and can furthermore make it appear that somebody connected directly or indirectly with the Government suggested that it might be well to erect a building somewhere and that the Government would lease it for a time, there will be a very excellent opportunity given for all such men—and this city is full of them—to come here and ask us to buy all sorts of properties. We have a job lot of Government buildings in this great capital city at the present time, scattered all over the city, and some of them ought not to be located where they are.

Now, it is proposed not to mass these buildings, if we are to erect more, not to have any system in regard to where they are to be placed, but that we shall go down on this little street occupied by drinking houses and eating houses and Chinese laundries and barber shops and invest $650,000 to purchase a building that we do not want at the present time and that we ought not to buy under any circumstances which can possibly arise.

I have had laid on my desk at this moment—I do not know who sent it—a memorandum which says, "This building and land cost $384,000, as the treasury books will show." I do not know from whom that came, but my investigation on Saturday last persuaded me that that was precisely the amount of money that was represented in this building by stock, some of which was bought at less than par by the present holders.

I regret, Mr. President, that the committee have not withdrawn this amendment after the debate which occurred on Thursday last. If they still insist upon it, I trust that the vote of the Senate may be a notice to the gentlemen who hold real estate in this city that they would like to unload on the Government of the United States that we do not propose to buy their buildings unless they are offered at a fair price or unless the Government actually needs them and unless they are located in proper parts of the city.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I am opposed to the appropriation of such a sum of money for the purchase of a building like the Union Building. In my judgment, the building and ground are not worth $600,000. I am told that the building was erected in 1891 at a cost of $384,000. A building which cost $384,000 in 1891 can be built to-day, I think, for 60 per cent of the then cost, on account of the decline in the price of labor and material. That would furnish a measure of value which is more nearly in accordance with my idea of the proper value of this building. The Government has already paid rent for it, as I understand, to the amount of $350,000, and its assessed value is $175,000. If the building is worth $650,000, it would be assessed for more than $175,000. The building is not located in a good part of the city where property is likely to maintain its present value.

Again, I do not think the building is fireproof; and if the Government needs buildings, why not erect modern fireproof buildings, buildings that will last hundreds of years, or five hundred years, buildings with all modern improvements? The Government is entitled to have the best buildings for its service, and the buying of inferior buildings is bad economy, in my judgment. It is not a good investment. It is not such an investment as I should make as a private citizen, and I can not consent to make it for the Government for the reasons I have stated and the figures I have given.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I do not desire to reply at any length to the Senator from New Hampshire. The facts are that the Government does occupy this building, and it seems that it does need it, for it is paying to-day $47,000 rent for it. The fact is that in the purchase of other buildings the Government paid no attention to the liberation from adjoining buildings. In the case of the Maltby Building and other houses which the Government has purchased they adjoin other buildings. They may not be liquor houses and laundries, but there are other buildings butting right up against them.

The radical difference between the Senator from New Hampshire and myself (and I must confess that I have no personal knowledge as to the value or indeed as to the location of this property) is first as to the needs of the Government and second as to the value of the property. If the Government does not need this property, I have no desire to urge that it shall take it. If the property is not worth the $650,000, I have no desire that the Government shall pay more than it is worth.

Now, I suggest the following amendment: In line 9, strike out the clause and insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if in his opinion it is for the interest of the Government, to acquire—

Then insert the description of the property—to secure the same by condemnation.

I think I will have to ask the Senator from Iowa to pass the item over until I can draft the amendment. It is a little complicated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it go over temporarily.

Mr. QUAY. Let the matter be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over, without objection.

Mr. QUAY. I will try to arrange it so that the property will not be taken unless the Government needs it, and that the Government shall not pay more money than a jury of citizens of the District decide it is worth, which it seems to me will meet all the requirements of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. While the Senator from Pennsylvania is preparing his amendment, I desire to give notice that I shall not agree to the Government acquiring any property, except under the most urgent conditions, by condemnation——

Mr. QUAY. I did not expect——

Mr. GALLINGER. We have had some experience in that direction.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask that the amendment to the amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment has not yet been prepared.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the matter be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the matter may go over temporarily until he can prepare his amendment to the amendment. If there is no objection, it will be passed over. The reading of the bill will be proceded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 36, line 15, to increase the appropriation for continuing ethnological researches among the American Indians, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, etc., from $45,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy," and in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the preservation, exhibition, and increase of the collections from the surveying and exploring expeditions of the Government, and from other sources, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employees, $170,000, of which sum $5,500 may be used for necessary drawings and illustrations for publications of the National Museum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 21, to increase the appropriation for continuing the construction of roads, walks, bridges, water supply, sewerage, drainage, etc., in the National Zoological Park from $60,000 to $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed to the end of line 2, on page 39.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, some weeks ago I offered a proposed amendment to this part of the bill under consideration and sent it to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which committee reported it favorably, and in turn sent it to the Committee on Appropriations. That amendment proposed to increase the appropriation $5,000 and to use the appropriation of $5,000 for the construction of a studio for artists, to be built under the direction of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution and the superintendent of the Zoological Park. In behalf of that amendment I had the warm approval of Dr. Baker, who is the superintendent of the Park, and the written approval of Mr. Langley, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, which approval of Mr. Langley I now hold in my hand.

The amendment went to the Committee on Appropriations, and I was granted the courtesy of making a statement to the committee, and I left flattering myself that possibly I had made some impression on the kind hearts of the committee, and that I might get this little appropriation of $5,000 to carry out one of the objects of the park which Secretary Langley alludes to, to wit, "the advancement of science and the instruction of the people." But when the bill came back I found that the general appropriation had been increased $5,000, but that the committee had lost sight of the amendment I had proposed.

I wish to state that, in my judgment, there can not possibly be an appropriation made by Congress in connection with the Zoological Park which will be so valuable to the people of this country as the one I propose, considering the smallness of the amount. I met in the Yellowstone National Park last summer artists who had gone from New York, Philadelphia, and elsewhere to study the habits of animals, spending several months of time in the park, riding all over the park, and in some instances they failed to find the animal of which they were in search even when their vacation was concluded.

Artists have said to me that in all this country there is not a place where animal painters can go and work and under proper conditions study the anatomy, the pose, and the habits of animals, and I have simply asked that $5,000 shall be appropriated for a building where the animal artists of this country, and they are becoming a very important class of people, illustrating our magazines and writing books, can go and quietly, away from the public, have an animal brought in in a cage and where they can sit and paint the animal. I have been informed by the superintendent of the Zoological Park that there is an old building in the park which can be reconstructed and made available for the purpose I propose.

Mr. President, I regret that the committee dropped out this little amendment, and I desire to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee if he is willing to have this matter go into conference by increasing the item of $65,000 to $70,000, and have these words added:

And $5,000 shall be used for the construction of a studio for artists, to be built under the direction of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution and the superintendent of the Zoological Park.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the arrangement made when the bill was taken up, it was understood that the amendments of the committee should first be disposed of. After they shall have been considered I am perfectly willing to take up this question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I have now in readiness the amendment I propose to offer to the clause relating to the Union Building, on page 5, and I think it may as well be disposed of. I have nothing more to say, except to take the sense of the Senate upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out from line 9 to line 15, inclusive, on page 5, and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, if in his judgment for the interest of the Government, is hereby authorized to acquire by condemnation lots B and C, 3 and 4, in square No. 454, situated on the north side of G street between Sixth and Seventh streets in the city of Washington and District of Columbia, improved by a building known as the Union Building; and upon approval of the award delivered in condemnation of said property by the Secretary of the Treasury the amount thereof shall be paid out of any money not otherwise appropriated in the Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have two objections to the amendment. The first is that I am not aware of an instance where the Government has proceeded to condemn land within the District of Columbia except where the Government urgently needed land, and it has not been shown that there is any urgent need on the part of the Government for the Union Building on G street. I have an objection in addition to that which runs in this wise: As far as my observation goes, the Government has never condemned land in the District of Columbia without paying about twice what it is worth. We have juries in the District of Columbia to condemn land, and about three-fourths of the citizens of the District of mature age and of business capacity are real-estate dealers, and I do not propose, if my vote can prevent it, to send this proposition to a jury of that character. I hope the amendment to the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. QUAY. This proposition is simply to take the property, if the Government needs it, leaving that question in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and to pay for the property what it is worth in the judgment of a jury of citizens of the District of Columbia, who know what property in the District of Columbia is worth. I desire a vote of the Senate upon it, and am indifferent as to the result.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. QUAY and Mr. NELSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], but on matters of this kind we are at liberty, by our understanding, to vote, and I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] who is out of the Chamber. I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to ask whether the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. GEAR. I withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 43; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before a vote is taken on the amendment, I desire to state that I have received a telegram this moment from one of the dearest friends I have in the world, who telegraphs me from a city a good many hundred miles from Washington: "I am asked to request you not to oppose purchase of Union Building. Hope you can do this." My friend has not converted me. I am against the purchase of the Union Building.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 19, page 41.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 19, on page 41, in the appropriations for the Fish Commission, in the items for Woods Hole (Mass.) Station, I move to strike out the word "skilled" before the word "laborer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Fish Commission," on page 42, line 9, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "five," and in line 11, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "four;" so as to make the clause read:

Wytheville (Va.) Station: Superintendent, $1,500; foreman, $900; fish-culturist, $900; laborer, $360; in all, $3,420.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 14, after the word "dollars," to insert "foreman, $1,200;" in line 15, after the word "each," to strike out "two assistant fish-culturists, at $720 each" and insert "skilled laborer, $720;" and in line 19, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred and twenty" and insert "seven hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Leadville (Colo.) Station: Superintendent, $1,500; foreman, $1,200; two fish-culturists, at $900 each; skilled laborer, $720; cook, $480; in all, $5,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to page 44, line 20.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire at this point to make an inquiry of the Senator in charge of the bill, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I do it simply for the purpose of having the Senator make a statement that I can communicate to my people.

There is a fish hatchery authorized to be built in the State of New Hampshire, and the present Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries a little time ago sent me a letter which I submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, saying that in his opinion the superintendent and other officers should be provided for in this bill. I called it to the attention of the committee, but they in their wisdom have not inserted it. To-day I received a letter from a prominent citizen of my State, in which he says:

The money has been paid and the deed has passed conveying to the United States the land and water for the fish hatchery. This you are doubtless aware of, but you are probably not aware that our people are a little uneasy at the present status of the matter in so far as the appointment of a superintendent for the same is concerned, or rather the lack of such an appointment.

Mr. President, I think I understand the attitude of the committee. They think it will be time enough to provide for these officers in the next appropriation bill; but I wish that they would see their way clear to make the appropriation now, contingent upon no money being paid to these officers until the hatchery is fully built and in operation. The building will probably be completed during the summer months, and if we go over until next May before we pass another sundry civil appropriation bill the hatchery will stand completed eight or nine months without any officers in charge of it.

I would not be willing that the appropriation should be made for the officers and have them assume their duties now and draw pay from the Government during the construction of the building, but it seems to me that we might provide for their salaries with a proviso that they shall be available until the building is ready to be turned over to the Government and is ready for operation.

I hope the committee will concede that and permit me to offer an amendment without invoking the point of order, after the reading of the bill is concluded. Still I will not antagonize the committee. They have been very kind. A great many things have been asked of them, and I am not here for the purpose of putting myself in antagonism to the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The understanding that we have is that the hatchery will not be completed until December or January. It has been usual not to make appropriations for superintendents and other employees until the building is completed. My own belief is that it will not be completed even at that time, although, of course, I do not know. But it is usual, it has frequently been the practice, to use the general appropriation for the maintenance of hatcheries to temporarily pay the employees in the service until a regular appropriation can be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can that be done?

Mr. ALLISON. That can be done; and we have increased that appropriation $8,000 beyond the amount appropriated by the House of Representatives. So I apprehend that there will be no difficulty about the matter if the hatchery shall be completed before the 1st of January.

Mr. GALLINGER. Upon the statement of the Senator from Iowa that it has not been usual to appropriate for these officers until the building has been constructed, and the further statement, which is very gratifying to me, that there is a fund that can be used temporarily for that purpose, I am content.

The reading was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 47, line 3, to increase the appropriation for propagation of food fishes from $133,500 to $140,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 5, to insert:

For construction of buildings, and repair and improvement of buildings and grounds, at the United States fish-cultural station at Leadville, Colo., $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 9, to insert:

For repairs to buildings, and rebuilding wharves, at the United States fish-cultural station at Woods Hole, Mass., $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 12, to insert:

For the completion of the fish-cultural station at Erwin, Tenn., including construction of ponds, buildings, roads, grading, and other necessary constructions and equipment, $4,818.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 16, to insert:

For the purchase of 40 acres of land (known as Crow Farm) adjoining the fish-cultural station at Erwin, Tenn., $1,200.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 19, to insert:

For the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of North Carolina, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment of same, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the site for the same, to be selected by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, shall be donated to the Government for the purpose of the said station before any expenditure hereunder.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 21, page 48, after the words "North Carolina," I move to insert "purchase of site;" and to strike out all after the word "provided," in line 23, and insert:

That not more than $1,000 of said sum shall be used for the purchase of a suitable site for the purposes of said station.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 2, to insert:

For the establishment of a fish-cultural station at Cold Spring, Meriwether County, in the State of Georgia, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment of the same, $15,000: Provided, That the site for the same, to be selected by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, consisting of about 16 acres, shall be donated to the Government for the purpose of the said station before any expenditure hereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 10, to insert:

For the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Washington for the propagation of salmon and other fishes, and construction and equipment of station, $10,000: Provided, That the site for the same, to be selected by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, shall be donated to the Government for the purpose of the said station before any expenditure hereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interstate Commerce Commission," at the top of page 50, to strike out:

For all other necessary expenditures to enable the commission to properly carry out the objects of the "Act to regulate commerce," including expenditures for counsel, to give effect to the provisions of said act and all acts and amendments supplementary thereto, and including not exceeding $1,500 for the purchase of necessary books, reports, and periodicals, and not exceeding $1,500 for printing other than that done at the Government Printing Office; and not exceeding $10,000 to enable the commission to more effectively carry out the provisions of the act in the matter of investigations and prosecutions under the act, which last-named sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be audited by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, in the same manner as provided in section 291 of the Revised Statutes, the certificate of the chairman of the commission to be deemed a sufficient voucher for the sum therein expressed to have been expended, $209,000.

And insert:

For all other necessary expenditures, to enable the commission to give effect to the provisions of the "Act to regulate commerce," and all acts and amendments supplementary thereto, $209,000, of which sum not exceeding $25,000 may be expended in the employment of counsel, and not exceeding $1,500 may be expended for the purchase of necessary books, reports, and periodicals, and not exceeding $1,500 may be expended for printing other than that done at the Government Printing Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous objects under the Treasury Department," on page 51, after line 9, to insert:

Reimbursement of Quandt Brewing Company and others: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the following parties amounts paid to the late collector of internal revenue for the Fourteenth district of New York in advance for internal-revenue stamps, which stamps were never delivered to said parties, namely: To the Quandt Brewing Company, $2,343.03; to Ruscher & Co., $2,925.92; to S. Bolton's Sons, $13,458.75; to Taylor Brewing Company, $416.25; to D. Mayer Brewing Company, $250; in all, $19,393.95.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 12, after the word "laboratory," to insert "and law library, at a cost not to exceed $100;" so as to make the clause read:

Punishment for violations of internal-revenue laws: For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations, $75,000; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall make a detailed statement to Congress once in each year as to how he has expended this sum, and also a detailed statement of all miscellaneous expenditures in the Bureau of Internal Revenue for which appropriation is made in this act: Provided, That necessary books of reference and periodicals for the chemical laboratory and law library, at a cost not to exceed $100, may be purchased out of the appropriation made for the fiscal year 1899, for salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, fees and expenses of gaugers, salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay of assistant custodians and janitors," on page 55, line 23, after the word "buildings," to insert "outside of the District of Columbia;" so as to make the clause read:

That all court-houses, custom-houses, post-offices, appraiser's stores, barge offices, subtreasuries, and other public buildings outside of the District of Columbia which have been heretofore purchased or erected, or are at present in course of construction, or which may hereafter be erected or purchased out of any appropriation under the control of the Treasury Department, together with the site or sites thereof, are hereby expressly declared to be under the exclusive jurisdiction and control and in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall have full power to take possession of and assign and reassign rooms therein to such Federal officials, clerks, and employees as in his judgment and discretion should be furnished with offices or rooms therein.

Mr. HAWLEY. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this provision. I am thinking at the moment whether there are other illustrations besides the post-office at Fortress Monroe, which is upon Government land. It is proposed to give the entire jurisdiction of these buildings to the Treasury Department. Every square foot of land there has, for certain purposes at least, been placed under the control of the commanding officer, who has a right to order anything destroyed or removed in case of war or necessity. I do not know that there will ever be any practical trouble about it.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the public building to which the Senator refers?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a post-office.

Mr. ALLISON. A post-office on the land devoted to military purposes?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is on the military reservation. This provision puts the entire control of it in the hands of the Treasury Department. The supreme control of it has to be in the commanding officer really—the final control.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will see that the provision as it came from the House placed all public buildings under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury. We have inserted the words "outside of the District of Columbia." How would it do to say "outside of the District of Columbia and military reservations?"

Mr. HAWLEY. I think there would be less likely to be any controversy in that case.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that amendment. After the words "outside of the District of Columbia" I move to insert "and military reservations."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 56, line 13, after the word "lights," to insert "supplies;" in line 15, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "three thousand;" in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "one assistant for the same purposes, $2,500;" and in line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Inspector of furniture and other furnishings for public buildings: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to employ a suitable person to inspect all public buildings and examine into their requirements for furniture and other furnishings, including fuel, lights, supplies, personal services, and other current expenses, $3,000; for one assistant for the same purposes, $2,500; and for actual necessary expenses, not exceeding $2,000; in all, $7,500.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "dollars," in line 15, I move to insert "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 58, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "of which a sum not to exceed $5,000 may be used in payment of salaries of firemen and other employees required for the operation of said plants;" so as to make the clause read:

Operation of pneumatic tubes: For supplying necessary power, and repairs to power plants, for operating pneumatic tubes for the transmission of mail matter, court-house and post-office buildings, Philadelphia, Pa., New York City and Brooklyn, N. Y., and the post-office and subtreasury building, Boston, Mass., $20,000.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 11, page 61, the last paragraph read being as follows:

Enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion act: To prevent unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States, by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto, and for expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation, and for enforcing the provisions of the act approved May 5, 1892, entitled "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States," $100,000.

Mr. WILSON. On page 61, line 11, I had intended, after the words "one hundred thousand dollars," if I could in any manner secure the consent of the committee, to offer the following amendment:

Provided, That $1,000 of said amount shall be paid to the collector at Port Townsend.

The fact about the business is that that is the objective point for all Chinese seeking to enter the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will not press the amendment now.

Mr. WILSON. At the request of the chairman of the committee, I will not press the amendment now nor make the statement I intended, but will do so hereafter.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 61, after line 21, to insert:

Numbering and adding machines: For purchase of registering accountants, numbering machines, and other machines of a similar character, for use in the Treasury Department, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 62, to insert:

District of Columbia: For the purpose of opening Cathedral avenue in accordance with the highway extension plans, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to convey all right and title of the United States in and to a parcel of land bounded on the north by block 2 of the subdivision called Meridian Hill, and on the east by the east line of said block 2 extended southward, and on the west by the east line of Sixteenth street west as said line is now extended and laid down through said block 2, and on the south by a line parallel to W street of the city of Washington and distant 90 feet north from the south line of said W street, to the parties owning a good and unencumbered title in fee simple to lots Nos. 22 to 29, both inclusive, in block No. 5 of the subdivision called Woodley Park, in the District of Columbia, containing about 100,500 square feet of land, and adjoining the land of the United States embraced in the Zoological Park, upon the conveyance by said parties of the said lots to the United States: Provided, That said lots in said Woodley Park, when so conveyed to the United States as aforesaid, shall become part of the said Zoological Park and shall be subject to the inclusion of so much of the same on said Cathedral avenue as may be necessary for the purpose of opening the said avenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 9, to insert:

To provide flags for the east and west fronts of the center of the Capitol, to be hoisted daily under the direction of the Capitol police board, $100, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 13, to insert:

For continuing the work of cleaning and repairing works of art in the Capitol, including the repairing of frames, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 17, to insert:

For necessary repairs and improvements to the steam heating and ventilating apparatus of the Senate, including increased boiler-flue service, kitchen ventilation, and all machinery pertaining thereto in the Senate wing of the Capitol, including the Supreme Court, under the supervision of the Architect of the Capitol, $4,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 24, to insert:

That the unexpended balance, amounting to $2,724.99, of the appropriation of $55,000 for the improvement of the ventilation of the Senate wing of the Capitol made by the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1897 is hereby made available, and may be used for a ventilating exhaust fan for the attic story near the Supreme Court and the ventilation of the public closet in the basement story of the north wing, and for such other purposes in connection with the work as the Architect of the Capitol may deem necessary.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the following clause on page 66, from line 6 to line 16:

EXPENSES OF THE COLLECTION OF REVENUE FROM SALES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Salaries and commissions of registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 each, $465,000: Provided, That the salary of the register and receiver at Sitka, Alaska, shall be $1,500 a year each until June 30, 1899, from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In line 13, on page 66, after the word "shall," I move to strike out the word "be" and insert the words "not be less than;" and in line 14, after the word "hundred," to insert "nor more than three thousand."

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be stated from the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, line 13, after the word "shall," it is proposed to strike out the word "be" and insert "not be less than;" and in line 14, after the word "hundred," to insert "nor more than three thousand;" so as to read:

Provided, That the salary of the register and receiver at Sitka, Alaska, shall not be less than $1,500 nor more than $3,000 a year, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Registers and receivers receive $500 a year, and then they receive fees up to the amount of $3,000. There are not many of them who are receiving the full amount of $3,000; and it is not right, in my opinion, that we should pay out of the Treasury $3,000 to registers and receivers in Alaska. That would be higher in proportion than the amount paid to any other officers, unless the provision is properly qualified. I think the chances are that their pay will scarcely amount to anything. I am willing to guarantee them $1,500 a year, but to say that the Secretary of the Interior may fix the salary at $3,000, whether or not these officers receive any fees, I do not think is right. I enter my protest against it and shall put my vote on record against it.

Mr. ALLISON. When the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] showed me this amendment, I understood that it was proposed in order that the salaries of receivers might be made conformable to existing law. As the provision stands in the bill, a receiver or register in Alaska would only receive a salary of $1,500 a year, although the receipts of the office might be very large. As I understand it, the only object of this amendment is to bring these receivers and registers within the general law, with a minimum of $1,500 salary instead of $500.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment does not do that, however.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment does not do that, however, but I trust we may be able to modify it so that it will; and I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands to the matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to that proposition, but I have decided objection to the other.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The object of the amendment is that registers and receivers in Alaska shall receive not less than $1,500 per year and not more than $3,000. The purpose of making the minimum $1,500 is for the reason that it costs a great deal more to live in Alaska than in any part of the country. In fact, I have information which goes to show that the register who is now at Sitka is obliged to pay from twelve hundred to eighteen hundred dollars a year to maintain himself and wife in Alaska at the present time. So it is proposed to make the minimum $1,500 and the maximum $3,000, which is not any greater than the salaries received by registers and receivers in other parts of the country.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] says that this amendment will not accomplish the purpose desired. I call his attention to the fact that it will accomplish it if the words "not more than $3,000" be left out. Then it will make the minimum $1,500 instead of $500.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will add just a word or two more, it will then be right. I suggest that it be amended so as to read: "and with fees, not more than $3,000." Then you will have it.

Mr. ALLISON. I call the attention of the Senator to line 11 of this very paragraph, providing for the salaries of receivers of public moneys "at not exceeding $3,000 each." That means that that shall be the maximum salary. Why? Because the law fixes the minimum at $500 and the maximum at $3,000. The object of the Senator from North Dakota, of course, is to allow the receivers and registers in Alaska to have a minimun of $1,500 instead of $500. I see no objection to that and think the amendment ought to prevail.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is the only change proposed.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the maximum ought to stand just as it is in the present law. So it seems to me that the words "not more than $3,000" should be stricken out. Then these officers would come under the general statutes providing for not less than $1,500. I submit to the Senator from Missouri if that will not cover his point?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it will, but to make the matter more specific I suggest that we say, "shall not be less than $1,500, and with fees not exceeding $3,000." Then there will be no trouble about it.

Mr. WILSON. Say "fees and commissions."

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, "fees and commissions."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not see any objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection to the amendment, it will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to offer an amendment to come in after line 16, on page 66, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

For salaries and commissions of registers and receivers of two additional land districts in the District of Alaska, $12,000: Provided, That the salary of each of said registers and receivers shall not be less than $1,500 nor more than $3,000 a year, until June 30, 1899, from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I would suggest the insertion in the amendment of the same language which has been adopted on the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read as it will then stand.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That the salary of each of said registers and receivers shall not be less than $1,500, and with fees and commissions not more than $3,000 a year, until June 30, 1899, from and after the passage of this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 67, line 7, after the words "shall be," to strike out "selected by the Secretary of the Interior, and;" so as to make the clause read:

Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp lands and swamp-land indemnity: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands, $110,000: Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 21, after the word "persons," to strike out "to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior for duty;" and on page 68, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

Protection and administration of forest reserves: To meet the expenses of executing the provisions of the sundry civil act approved June 4, 1897, for the care and administration of the forest reserves, to meet the expenses of forest inspectors and assistants, and for the employment of foresters and other emergency help in the prevention and extinguishment of forest fires, and for advertising dead and matured trees for sale within such reservations: Provided, That forestry agents and supervisors, and other persons under this appropriation, shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, $50,000.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided further, That the Executive orders and proclamations dated February 22, 1897, setting apart and reserving certain lands in the States of Wyoming, Utah, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and South Dakota as forest reservations, be, and they are hereby, suspended, and the lands embraced therein restored to the public domain the same as though said orders and proclamations had not been issued: Provided further, That the provisions of the "Act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1897, authorizing the settler or owner of land included within the limits of a public forest reservation to select other land in lieu thereof, are hereby extended and made applicable to any State or Territory to which public lands have been or shall be granted, reserved, or pledged for the use of schools, colleges, or other purposes therein, wherever such lands or any part thereof, either before or after being surveyed, are included within any forest reservation; and other public lands of equal area are hereby appropriated and granted and may be selected by such State or Territory in lieu of such lands so included within such forest reservation.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to accept the amendment which I now offer, on page 68, in line 22, after the word "reservation," to insert the following:

And to the Yosemite, Sequoia, and General Grant National Park, California.

Mr. COCKRELL. What will be the effect of that amendment?

Mr. PERKINS. Simply where land is located within these reservations that on lands granted for colleges or other purposes those reservations shall have the same privileges which have been provided in reservations in other States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I notice that on the face of this amendment it destroys all the reservations which were created by the proclamation of February 22, 1897. I had supposed that important forest reservations had been made under that act which it was desirable should be preserved, but it seems that the committee have proposed an amendment which wipes them out entirely.

I am not very familiar with this subject. I have not kept track of the various controversies which have ensued since those proclamations and orders were issued. I knew that modifications of those proclamations and orders had been sought for, possibly had been obtained, but here we shall have apparently an act of Congress annexed as an amendment to an appropriation bill for the protection and administration of the forest reserves which wipes out all the forest reservations created by those proclamations and orders.

I think that if so important an amendment as this is to be adopted there should be a very clear and satisfactory explanation given as to the reasons why radical action of this kind is necessary upon the sundry civil appropriation bill. I therefore ask the chairman of the committee, or other Senators familiar with the subject, to tell us why we need to take this radical action upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The proclamation setting apart the reservations mentioned in this bill was suspended by the sundry civil act of last year for one year, which expired on the 4th of March. There was then made an appropriation of $150,000 for a survey of these reservations under the direction of the Geological Survey, with the expectation and belief that there would be modifications of these reservations respecting their area if the survey should disclose that modifications were necessary. The surveys were made, and, as I understand, no modifications were made of the area of the reservations.

Mr. CLARK. If I may be allowed, I wish to suggest to the chairman of the committee that the difficulty about this is that the time specified had elapsed. I think the bill was passed on the 21st of June of last year, and the time was so short that there was no opportunity to go over any considerable portion of the area. Consequently we are in the same position, really, as when the bill was originally passed.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand. In other words, there has been no change respecting the area of these reservations.

Mr. CLARK. No change.

Mr. ALLISON. There was great pressure upon the committee to recommend a suspension of the Executive orders and proclamations; and having dealt with that subject in the former sundry civil bill, I was myself quite willing to extend this suspension for another year; but a majority of the committee thought it was wise to suspend the proclamation absolutely, because at any time the President of the United States may reestablish reservations by proclamation under existing law, making such modifications as he may deem best; and a majority of the committee were of that opinion. Hence the recommendation of the pending amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Iowa whether the Secretary of the Interior, who has charge of the care of the public domain and the forest reservations made in pursuance of law, is in favor of having these Executive orders and proclamations entirely wiped out?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand he is not.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask whether there is any written communication from the Secretary of the Interior either way on this subject?

Mr. ALLISON. I think there is no written communication other than that contained in his annual report, which makes recommendations respecting such reservations.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I understand that the Secretary of the Interior has been engaged in preparing modifications of those Executive orders and proclamations, relieving those orders and proclamations from some of the injurious effects of which complaint has been made by Senators and Representatives from some of the States where the reservations exist, and that the Department will from time to time make changes and exceptions in those orders, under, I suppose, the legislation of last summer, which will entirely relieve those proclamations and orders from just criticism or objection. If the Secretary of the Interior is engaged in doing this work, and will do it satisfactorily to the country as a whole, whether his actions be entirely satisfactory to all the persons interested in this subject, it seems to me it is unwise for Congress to entirely destroy the forest reservations; but the declaration here is explicit, "the lands embraced therein"—that is, in the proclamations and orders—are "restored to the public domain the same as though said orders and proclamations had not been issued."

There we are, Mr. President. We are to utterly annihilate and destroy all that has been done in this direction, and the lands will be restored to the public domain. Before we know it, titles will be created here and there, and whenever the President undertakes to make orders and proclamations over again those titles are likely to be in the way of action; they will be pleaded as a reason for nonaction, and we shall have lost all that we have gained in connection with this great work of forest reserves in the various Western States.

Mr. President, I believe that it is quite as important to the future welfare of the States in which these reservations are made, so far as I can understand the subject, that the reservations should be kept intact as it is to the United States as a whole; and for one I very much deprecate this radical action, which is being pressed upon the Senate by the Senators from those States.

It seems to me that if those Executive orders and proclamations were too broad, if they reserved forests or reserved lands which ought not to have been reserved, the true way is to continue the authority to the Secretary of the Interior to make exceptions in those orders and proclamations, and that it is as unwise a thing as we can do to utterly blot out and destroy everything which has been accomplished so far in the direction of making the forest reserves.

Mr. President, I counsel moderation on the part of the Senators from the States where these reservations have been made, and I urge them to let those proclamations stand, to have proper exceptions made, and not to undertake to wipe them entirely out in this radical and overwhelming fashion.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I think this amendment is very proper. The reservations were improvidently made. It was never intended that 30,000,000 acres of land should be taken out of settlement without some knowledge as to what land was being reserved and without some knowledge of the number of settlers included or the number of mining operators. To strike in the dark, to take 30,000,000 acres of land without any knowledge as to how it would affect the Western country, it seems to me, was the most improvident order ever applied to any country. If these reservations are to be made—they never were intended to be made otherwise—they should follow an examination as to the propriety and necessity of making them, and a survey. It never was intended that the entire West should be withdrawn from settlement, whole States together.

If that was intended, it ought to have been done before you organized the Territories into States. After the people have gone there, to make reservations over settlers and miners indiscriminately, without preliminary investigation to know where you are going, it seems to me is entirely wrong. The only way to undo this work is to abolish that improvident order and let the Department go on with its survey and reservations, as intended in the original act. I do not suppose anyone wants to stop settlement in any one of these States or to make needless reservations over farms and mines and improvements. I do not suppose anybody desires that; and if not, get rid of these improvident orders. I think the committee have acted very wisely, and I feel under obligations to them for the wise action they have taken.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Executive orders made at the close of the last Administration are by this provision to be revoked. I wish to state what everybody who is familiar with the Western country knows, that they were made without any examination, without any care, and in absolute violation of the rules of the Department with reference to the making of forest reservations. None of the conditions and restrictions provided for were observed. It is not proposed that there shall be no forest reservations. All that is proposed here is that we shall begin anew, and that the President of the United States shall not be hampered or obstructed by these orders made at the close of the last Administration.

The President, as soon as this bill becomes a law, can have the proper officers designate to him what are the proper reservations to be made, and make them. You can not say much more about it than that, except to speak of the general worthlessness of the examination that was made and the outrage that was perpetrated in the making of these reservations. On that point I think I will leave it to some of the Senators who have special interest in it, for it does not touch anything in Colorado, to express their opinions and state the facts.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLINGTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. TELLER. I have not concluded.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thought the Senator had. Will the Senator allow me to make a motion to amend the paragraph? I should like to get it of record so as to show what I think ought to be done.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to suspending my remarks for a moment to enable the Senator to make his motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, in lines 7, 8, and 9, I move to strike out the words—

> And the lands embraced therein restored to the public domain the same as though said orders and proclamations had not been issued.

And insert:

> For six months from the date of this act.

Mr. CLARK. Six months will not do any good.

Mr. TELLER. That will do no good. If the Senator from New Hampshire, who I know does not desire to embarrass the people of the Western country, would listen a little to those who know something about the subject and would believe for a moment that the Senators representing those States are quite as much concerned in the protection of timber as are people in Massachusetts or anywhere else, I think he would find that there is no attempt here on the part of the Western Senators to do any injustice to their own States or anybody else.

We have had a good deal of trouble with these forest reservations, and we have had it because the Government has employed a lot of agents to go out through that country who came from sections of the country different from where they were going, who had absolutely no acquaintance with the subject, who were too indolent, as a general rule, to go over the country and examine its geography and topography and characteristics and the necessity for forest reserves, who would sit down in their offices and make these reservations, including large communities, doing the utmost injustice to the people of that section of the country. We have gone through that in Colorado. None of these last orders, however, touch anything in Colorado.

I do not mean to say that every Senator, including the Senator from New Hampshire, is not entitled to have his opinion on these questions, but it is nothing that any Senator need take offense at when I say that the Senators representing those States are quite as well qualified to determine what ought to be done as anybody else and quite as much interested in the preservation of the timber. The State of Colorado has several of these reservations. The State of Colorado has taken more pains to protect the timber on the public lands than the Government of the United States has taken. We have more efficient laws with reference to the punishment of those who shall set out fires or allow fires to get into forests than the Government of the United States has, and we know something of the danger of fire.

I have before me a report, which I have not entirely read, made under the auspices of the Geological Bureau, by Gifford Pinchot. It is entitled Report on the Survey and Examination of Forest Reserves. This gentleman seems to have had some knowledge of some portions of the country, and of portions not very thorough knowledge; but he states on page 52 of his report something of the destruction of forests by fire, a matter to which the National Government has practically paid no attention. The Government of the United States has directed its attention to preventing the cutting of timber on the public land, and these reservations are allowed to be invaded by fires without any provision, practically, although this gentleman recommends some legislation on that point. I myself have stated in the Senate a number of times that there were hundreds of acres of timber burned where one was cut by the ax. On page 51 he says:

> The larger part of the reserve south of Tongue River appears to have been burnt over about twenty-five years ago, as is indicated by the young growth which has sprung up since that time, and clear traces of other older fires may also be discerned. The open grassy parks, which are estimated to cover at least one-half of the reserve, are directly due to fire. Repeated burnings finally overcome the reproductive power of the lodge-pole pine, grass takes possession of the soil, and the subsequent return of the forest is very slow. Since the parks are due to fire, it is true that by far the largest part of the reserve has been burnt over. Probably the whole area, in the past, has been swept clear, over and over again.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this statement:

> During the past summer alone about 70,000 acres were devastated by fire. The stand of this area, if untouched by fire, can not reasonably be estimated at less than 2,000 feet per acre. It is interesting to note that the total product of all the mills drawing their timber from the reserve is less than 2,000,000 feet per annum, while the 70,000 acres burnt over last summer would have been capable of producing 140,000,000 feet, or seventy years' supply, if they had been permitted to grow uninjured by fire.

It would take the ax and the mill seventy years to do what the fire did in one single year, and yet during the last fifteen years the attention of the Government has been directed to destruction by the ax and the mill and practically no provision has been made for the preservation of timber from fire. The only exception I know was made in 1882 or 1883, when the Department took the position that the preservation of the timber was the primary object of the legislation and that the Department could use the fund that was in its hands for its preservation for the purpose of putting out fires as well as punishing those who had denuded the land by the ax.

The next Administration held that the authority did not exist to use money so appropriated for the purpose of putting out fires, and that it could only be used for the purpose of protecting the timber by preventing the cutting and punishing those who had cut. In one single year, 1879, in the State of Colorado there was more timber burned than has been cut since the settlement of the country in 1859. I speak advisedly about that, because I think there is not any considerable portion of Colorado which I have not seen during the last forty years from one to a dozen times. On page 70 of this report he again calls attention to the fires. He says:

> Fires have done more injury in this reserve—

Speaking of another reserve—

> than all other causes put together. It is believed that fire has occurred in every township within the reserve and in nearly every section, and it is evident that many hundred thousand feet of timber have been destroyed.

Then he goes on to show the difficulty of putting out fire. I desire to state that it is my recollection—and I speak from recollection—that while the Department did so use the money, the putting out of no fire cost the Government more than sixty or seventy dollars. If these fires are taken in proper time they can be put out, and that should really be the purpose for which we appropriate money, and not to prevent the cutting of a few trees by a few settlers.

I find on page 73 that he again refers to fires:

> Fire has done less damage on the western than on the eastern slope. Still, its ravages have been exceedingly severe.

He is speaking of a particular section.

If a little common sense could be applied to this question, which has not been applied, there would be very little difficulty about it. The Department a few years ago created a reservation on a very high table in Colorado, a piece of land lying between two great rivers coming to a point like a flatiron where they united. Upon the point of this mountain were a large number of lakes and small streams, and the people of that neighborhood had been in the habit of going up there and occasionally taking a lake and putting a dam across the mouth of it, letting it fill in the early spring and using it for irrigation below.

As soon as it was made a forest reserve the Government gave orders that nobody should impound water on that reservation. While ostensibly the whole reservation had been made for the purpose of securing to the farmers below the water for irrigating purposes, yet they were forbidden by the Department and threatened with prosecution if they should put any dam at the mouth of these streams. There was not any way to get rid of it. The result was that the farmers went up there and put dams over without reference to the General Government. I do not know that they have ever been punished. But the idea that the Department should say to those people, "You can not impound water here; you can not put the dams there and keep the water until it is time to let it down for irrigating purposes," was so absurd that the good common sense of the people there rebelled and they went to work and treated it as they ought to have treated it, in my judgment.

The table composing this reservation or high mountain is so high that no agriculture can be carried on upon it at all. It was covered with more or less dead timber. At the instance of some of the settlers I applied to the Department for permission for the settlers to go up on the table and haul down the dry timber lying upon the ground. I was told by the Department, and the Department insisted upon it and would not make any change in the ruling, that if the settlers went there and hauled that timber off that they would have them prosecuted for violating the law by going on the reservation.

The danger to the pine timber that stands on these reservations—for it is practically all pine or spruce; it is all coniferous—arises very largely from the fallen timber in the woods. It is the fallen tree and the dead tree which stands that spread the fire. If the Department would allow the dead timber to be hauled out, it would save the forests from these invasions of fire which it is almost impossible to prevent, brought about by campers, by Indians, and sometimes by lightning striking trees. It is almost impossible perhaps to prevent fire in the mountains, but its spread would be very much retarded if the fallen timber could be taken away.

The people living at the foot of the mountain on the plain had no other place to go for timber except upon this high reservation. The result was that they went up, notwithstanding, and got the pine timber, greatly to the benefit of the Government and to their own benefit; and yet every one of them, according to the Department's theory, was a violator of the statutes concerning these reservations.

Mr. President, what we complain of is that these reservations are made without the slightest attention to the wants of the Government if the Government wants to save the timber. Whole communities are included within an order. The moment they are included within it the settlement laws are all suspended as to that land. Within one reservation in Colorado there are 135 farmers living, and they were there fifteen years ago, and of course no one else can go in. We did make some modification by law that applies to Colorado alone as to our reservations, but the general rule is that when a forest reservation is made, that is the end of settlement there.

The writer of this report says it ought not to be so; that agricultural land ought to be allowed to be taken. These orders of which we complain, made at the close of the last Administration upon reports by gentlemen who themselves admitted that they had never been within hailing distance of the land and never had seen it, some of whom had not been within forty or fifty or a hundred miles of some of the land, are what make the forest reserves unpopular, not that the people are opposed to the preservation of the timber.

I repeat, that nobody has so much interest in the preservation of the timber as the people who live in the neighborhood of the timber. All we have asked in this provision is that this order, so improperly and improvidently made, may be set aside. It does not in the slightest degree hamper or prevent the President from making proper reservations, if he shall do it under the regulations now existing, after consultation, as he should, with the Senators or Members who represent those sections of the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Suppose the orders were set aside and the President makes new orders and proclamations. Can any private title have been acquired to any portion of the land in the meantime?

Mr. TELLER. If it is agricultural land, a man can go on and make title. If it is mineral land, he can make title. He can make no title to timber land. I will not say that. There may be portions where he can, where it is more valuable for timber than anything else, under the laws; but he pays $2.50 an acre for the land. That is all the land is worth. If he buys it for the timber, he will take better care of the timber than the Government of the United States will.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me further, I have been afraid that intervening titles would make a great deal of trouble, and I can not see why the friends of this measure who I concede know more about it than I do, as the Senator from Colorado tells me they do——

Mr. TELLER. Does not the Senator think we ought to know?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; I understand. The Senator kindly concedes that we have a right to an opinion and to a vote.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thank him for that much. Why is it not just as well to let the proclamations stand and give to the President and the Secretary of the Interior the right to make the exceptions that are so much desired by the Senators living in those States? Why raise apprehension on the question as to whether new reservations will ever be made?

Mr. TELLER. If new reservations are not made, it will be the fault of the executive department of the Government.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to one of the evils of this system. There are hundreds of settlers who had made their first movement toward acquiring title under our land laws; and people can now only acquire title according to the land laws under the homestead laws. Consequently there is no speculation in lands under it anywhere in the United States today—I mean in getting public lands. The settlers who had made the first step, going on and building their cabins, making their applications, were precluded, and are precluded as it now stands, from making title, and they will be precluded if the Senator's amendment shall prevail, which ties this matter up again for six months.

It is utterly impossible for the Department to go to work and pick out each one of these people and segregate that piece of land from the great body; and when the orders are made, the President should reserve to the men who have already taken the initiatory step, who have an inchoate and uncompleted title, as he can if he chooses, the right to go on and complete their title.

No harm can come by any revocation of these orders, because no harm would come if there were no reservation made for ten years yet to come. That is the truth about it, Mr. President. These lands are not being despoiled. The timber is not being destroyed. On many of these reservations the timber is of no commercial value whatever, and the Government will never be able to make any money out of it.

The people, I repeat, are interested in preserving the timber. The Anaconda Mining Company are the greatest consumers of timber, I think, on the American continent, and yet this report shows that they are the only people in that section of the country who have made an attempt to save the timber. The special agent says they have offered rewards for the punishment of those who set fire to the timber. Why, Mr. President? Because they desire to preserve the timber so as to have it for use in the future. The Deadwood Mining Company in Dakota is another company which has made some effort to preserve the timber, and the mining people all through that country are anxious to preserve the timber. But we are anxious to have it done in accordance with justice and right. We shall be entirely satisfied, with the knowledge the Department now has and may get in another six months on this subject, to allow the present Administration to go to work and reorder, if I may use that term, into forest reservations much of that land; but we do hope that they will segregate the towns and the county seats and the populous places from the provisions of this order.

There is one other thing I wish to say. I do so because this goes to the gist of the whole question. When the Government of the United States made the State of Colorado a State it gave to the State of Colorado all the power that any sovereign State could have. That power included the right to tax every single acre of public land, unless we stipulated that we would not tax it. The United States has for many years whenever it has admitted a State required the State to put in its constitution a provision that it would not tax public lands. We agreed that we would not tax public lands in Colorado. Five or six years ago we had a proposition to take more than one-third of the entire area of Colorado and put it into forest reserves.

I can show a forest reservation in the State of Colorado that has six townships, or more than 100,000 acres of land—one hundred and twenty-odd thousand acres of land—upon which there is not timber enough to load a two-horse wagon; and that is the way, the improvident way, in which these things have been done. I can show mountains that are valuable for mining, absolutely worthless for timber, which have been covered with this prohibition against any miner going in and prospecting. That is why we complain of these orders. It is not that we want to despoil the timber. It is not that we want to get it in an improper manner.

But we want these reservations made in such a way that injustice shall not be done to the people of the State. The Government of the United States has no right to say to us in Colorado, "There is arable land; there is some timber on it, and we do not want to let it be settled now; we want that timber preserved for some succeeding generation; and although you have stipulated that you would not tax it upon the theory that we were going to sell it under the land laws, we do not now propose to do it."

I think Senators who are interested in this matter can see the injustice that is being done to the new States. You have taken away from us the power to settle and the power to tax the lands. Every acre of arable land should be open to settlement, for the value of a settlement, as stated here in this report, is infinitely greater than that of a forest reserve. There is not a quarter section anywhere in the United States which is not better if you can get a farmer on it to cultivate and that is not doing more good than to reserve the timber, I do not care whether it is in the great forests of the Western slope or on the scattered hills and mountains of Colorado, where practically there is no timber at all.

I have given some little attention to this question, and I confess that I have had a great deal of irritation about it. I have had irritation because I have seen the outrage that has been perpetrated upon some of my constituents. I have seen a settlement started, and then I have seen it abandoned because they knew they could not get any more settlers in there, and they could not build a schoolhouse or a church, and land that might have been settled and occupied was left unoccupied because of the improvident manner in which the reservations were made. We have had as much of it in Colorado as anywhere; but, as I said, we went to work and we got a statute passed that would allow a miner to go in there and mine. Yet that does not apply to any of the other States that I know of, unless it has been extended to them. I think it has not been.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say on this subject except to repeat that I will join anybody for the protection of the forests in any method that does not outrage the people of the States where the forests are located. I want to repeat what I have said before, and I have said it here on this floor again and again, that the place to direct your attention, if you want to preserve the forests, is to the fires and not to the ax. Every time a settler goes and cuts down a tree he puts it to valuable use. Fire puts it to none. Fire not only burns up the timber, but it burns up the soil. It will be a generation before the trees will start after a fire, while after the ax they will start at once. I can show you in Colorado where the ax has denuded the side of a mountain and there are now trees 40 or 50 feet high, but where the fire had denuded the mountain in the same neighborhood there is not anything growing at all except grass. Everything is burned up by the tremendous fires that occur; and the danger to the forests is fire, not the consumption of timber by the settler or the mill owner or anybody else.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I shall not occupy the attention of the Senate more than a moment. This question was pretty thoroughly discussed in the last Congress. The conditions that prevail in the State that I in part represent are of such a character that I am constrained, however high my esteem may be for the Secretary of the Interior, if it comes to a vote to vote for the committee amendment.

One or two observations by the Senator from New Hampshire might be answered by the statement that in the forestry reserves now many of the settlers are abandoning their homes. Settlements are made in advance of surveys, and new settlers will not go into a new country and settle there unless they can have the hope that their friends and relatives can follow them and settle around them.

An examination of this map [exhibiting] will show that in the State of Washington they have erected around the State almost what might be called a Spanish trocha. In the Olympic Forestry Reservation we have 2,188,000 acres withdrawn from settlement. In the county of Clallam, a county organized and fully equipped, they have withdrawn over 900,000 acres of the 1,000,000 which constitute that county. In the county of Jefferson, on Puget Sound, they have withdrawn 84 per cent of all the land in the county.

Mr. MASON. I wish to ask the Senator from Washington a question for information. Under what process do they withdraw the land? Will the Senator explain it?

Mr. WILSON. It is done under an act of Congress authorizing the President of the United States to withdraw certain timber lands, Government lands, for the purpose designated in the act, to be known as forest reserves. It was an act passed, I think, in 1890. I am not certain as to the date.

Mr. PETTIGREW. March 7, 1891.

Mr. WILSON. The act was passed in 1891. We had before that act one reservation in our State. We now have three, known as the Washington, the Pacific, and the Olympic, and they comprise an area larger than the State of Massachusetts. In the Washington forestry reserve, when the debate was in Congress a year or so ago, I showed that we had over 5,000 mineral locations, upon which $2,000,000 worth of work had already been done. By proper examination they could take the Olympic forest reserve and make a reservation there of from 800,000 to 1,000,000 acres and probably not affect any settlers or anybody.

I am told that sometimes these reservations are made for the purpose of reserving the water supply. This could not possibly have been the reason for the reservations in western Washington, as we have an annual rainfall on the western side of the Cascade range that averages about 82 inches per annum and in some places in the Olympic forest reserve it is even greater than that, so that a reservation of the watershed was hardly necessary. In the Washington forestry reserve all of our streams are supplied from the glaziers, and it was not necessary in that respect. The Pacific forestry reserve would have been all right under the original withdrawal, as some of the water rights on the eastern side of the mountain are used for irrigation purposes.

Mr. STEWART. Could they not adopt a plan that would reserve the reservoir sites and use the water for irrigating purposes?

Mr. WILSON. Oh, no; you can not affect the irrigation in that section of the country at all, because in the season of the year when you desire water for irrigating purposes we have the largest supply of water. The water is not low on the eastern side of the mountains until September and October. All the streams are full in the months of May, June, and July, when water is used for irrigation purposes. Therefore the withdrawal of the forestry reserves does not in any manner affect the water supply so far as those reservations are concerned.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Colorado stated that they wanted to use water for irrigating purposes in the mountains connected with a reservation and they would not let them use it for that purpose, and would not allow them to go there. I have heard complaints of that kind in regard to several other places. The idea of reserving it to preserve the water and not use the water, it seems to me, shows how intelligently the matter is managed by people in this part of the country who know nothing about the situation out there.

Mr. WILSON. I had hoped to have a letter here and have it read from a citizen who is a resident within the forestry reserve in Clallam County; but I did not think the subject would come up to-day, and I shall take opportunity to present it to-morrow.

There is another matter in connection with this subject, and at the proper time I shall move to recede from the committee amendment. If these forestry reserves are to be preserved, there must be some authority under the Secretary of the Interior to designate the men who are to be employed. You must lodge that authority somewhere. If we are to have forestry reserves, and if we are to employ men to put out forestry fires and to guard the reservations, we certainly do not want to be restrained by having to hunt up a civil-service man to engage in that occupation.

I think that the committee amendment ought to be receded from in view of the fact that there is small employment for those men. It is only for three or four or five months during the year. They will not be employed during the winter. Their employment is not necessary then. There ought to be a place where they could be designated quickly and certainly. It seems to me that if the item for the protection and administration of forestry reserves is to go into the bill, the authority should be lodged with the Secretary of the Interior to designate the men who are to take charge of them. Therefore at the proper time and with the consent of the chairman of the committee, I shall move that the Senate recede from the amendment in line 21, on page 67.

I hope that the amendment brought in by the committee may be agreed to, and that at some time in the future in making these reservations they may be designated with a due regard for the settlers of the various States and the welfare of commerce.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, the Executive order of February 22 of last year did the State of Idaho, which I have the honor in part to represent, a grievous injury. I am therefore in favor of the committee amendment. There are two reservations, the main portions of which are in the State of Idaho, namely, Bitterroot Reservation and Priest River Reservation. The Bitterroot Reservation has an area of 4,238,160 acres. The Priest River Reservation has an area of 1,065,000 acres. In the Bitterroot Reservation there are about 200,000 acres already covered by squatters either as timber lands or agricultural lands. Some of the farms are well improved, having good houses and good outbuildings, well fenced, and have bearing orchards on them. I wish to state in this connection that in my judgment there was not one member of the commission which set that forest reservation aside who had ever seen one single acre of that reservation.

A good portion of the Priest River Reservation is covered by the alternate sections of the Union Pacific Railway Company. In addition to that, something over 20,000 acres have already been settled upon. I allude to this in order that the Senate may understand that these reservations were located without any knowledge as to what they contain, or as to the quantity of timber lands or the quantity of agricultural land accessible on the reservations. I therefore shall vote to sustain the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to modify the amendment by substituting for "six months after the date of this act," the words "until March 4, 1899."

Mr. COCKRELL. Where does that amendment come in?

The SECRETARY. It is proposed after the word "suspended," in line 7, on page 68, to strike out the following words:

And the lands embraced therein restored to the public domain the same as though said orders and proclamations had not been issued.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Until March 4, 1899.

Mr. STEWART. That amendment would not answer the purpose any more than it did last year. The people are on the ground and they do not know whether they can make homes or not. The reservations include a vast number and they have this uncertainty hanging over them. They can not make any homes. Many of them have already left. Many mines have been discovered, large expenditures have been made, but the people do not know whether they can go on the land or not. To keep those people in suspense is almost as cruel as the original act withdrawing all that region of country without any knowledge on the part of the commission as to what they were doing. I do not think in all the annals of Administration there can be found a more unwarranted, useless, and flagrant order ever made.

It is perfectly ruinous, and it was not made according to law. There was not notice given, and no reference was made to the rights of the people out there or to the interests of the country. It was simply just a strike. It seemed to be an effort to injure the West and to injure those States. It was a hostile act entirely. Now, to suspend it and keep the settlers there waiting another year before they know whether they can build houses or not, and keep the miners waiting before they can know whether they can go on with their operations or not, is very bad. If the Government wants reservations, let it select the land and make reservations, and not have any more sweeping orders. The sooner we can get rid of that act and repeal it as the committee propose, the better.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a very important question and involves details. I hope that by to-morrow morning some adjustment can be made so that the reservations may be in some way at least partially suspended. With a view of seeing whether an adjustment can be made, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 5, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 4, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

REPRINT ADDITIONAL COPIES OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Printing at this time.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Your Committee on Printing, having had under consideration House resolution No. 277, beg leave to report the following in lieu thereof, and ask that the same be agreed to:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States issued March 28, 1898, together with the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the U. S. battle ship Maine, in Havana Harbor, February 15, 1898, and the testimony taken before the court; 13,500 for the use of the House of Representatives and 6,500 for the use of the Senate."

The Public Printer estimates the cost of this work at $3,560.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let me ask the gentleman, why not let this matter lie over until we get the next message of the President and print them both together?

Mr. PERKINS. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is a very large demand for this report, and I think we had better order the printing of it now.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But it would be a great deal better to have a complete report and understand exactly what we are doing.

Mr. PERKINS. The report is complete in itself, and the country is anxious that the information shall be given.

I ask for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution to its passage.

Mr. LITTLE. Perhaps we will not get the other report in any reasonable time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the resolution was considered and adopted.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to consider now a resolution I send to the desk.

Mr. BABCOCK. I have asked for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois desires, as the Chair understands, to present a matter before the House of public importance.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to report from the Committee on Appropriations, with favorable recommendation, and ask that it be considered at this time—which will take but a minute or two, I presume—a matter which I send to the desk. I refer to Senate joint resolution No. 129.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. 129) relative to suspension of part of section 355 of Revised Statutes, relative to erection of forts, fortifications, etc.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in case of emergency, when, in the opinion of the President, the immediate erection of any temporary fort or fortification is deemed important and urgent, such temporary fort or fortification may be constructed upon the written consent of the owner of the land upon which such work is to be placed; and the requirements of section 355 of the Revised Statutes shall not be applicable in such cases—

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, is this presented as a matter of privilege?

The SPEAKER. It is presented, as the Chair understands, for the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. Speaker, before any other preparations for war are made, I want to know whether we are going to have war. I object to the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the consideration of the resolution at this time.

Mr. CANNON. Then let the bill take its place on the Calendar. Or I move, if I may be recognized for that purpose, to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I have the floor.

Mr. CANNON. I would ask the gentleman, as this is an important matter urgently recommended by the Chief of Engineers and passed by the Senate, to allow it to proceed at this time.

Mr. BABCOCK. This is District day and we ought to be able at least to control a considerable part if not all of the time.

Mr. CANNON. This is very much more important than District day. There will be plenty of time for District days hereafter. This will take, I will say to the gentleman, but very little time.

I will ask recognition, Mr. Speaker, to suspend the rules and pass the resolution that the Clerk has read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to suspend the rules and pass the resolution, which will be again reported.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand a second.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the resolution read again. There was so much confusion that it was impossible to hear it, and I ask that there be order while it is being read.

The resolution, in the absence of objection, was again reported.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Texas agree that a second may be considered as ordered?

Mr. BAILEY. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to do anything in the way of the discussion of this matter except to have the following letter read from the Chief of Engineers, and will then call attention to the section of the statute which is proposed to be suspended.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., March 26, 1898.

MR. SECRETARY: Section 355, Revised Statutes, prohibits the expenditure of any public money for forts, fortifications, etc., upon any site or land purchased by the United States until the written opinion of the Attorney-General shall be had in favor of validity of title and consent of legislature of State in which land may be to such purchase has been given.

I have the honor to suggest, in view of the present emergency, that Congress be requested to temporarily suspend this act during time of war, as there are important points on our seacoast where it will be absolutely necessary to erect temporary works immediately in case war should be declared and funds are available.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. WILSON,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.

Hon. R. A. ALGER, Secretary of War.

Approved.

R. A. ALGER, Secretary of War.

MARCH 31, 1898.

Mr. CANNON. The Senate passed the resolution which was read a few minutes ago. I ask the Clerk to read that resolution again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman begins, I will call his attention to the fact that the resolution does not make any limitation upon the time within which it shall operate. It strikes me that if this is an emergency resolution, it ought not to be perpetual in its operation.

Mr. CANNON. It has the emergency clause in it—in cases of emergency.

Mr. McMILLIN. But you leave it entirely to the discretion of the Executive to determine when an emergency exists.

Mr. CANNON. In the discretion of the President; that a temporary fort or fortification may be built if in the judgment of the President an emergency exists. Now, this is an amendment of the law covering such cases, and the law ought to be that permanently. It ought always to have been that.

This matter was very fully considered and inquiry was made by the subcommittee of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] is a member, and after consideration we believed it our duty to report this bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MAGUIRE. When do you understand that operations could be commenced under this resolution, if it should pass?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, at once; wherever it is necessary.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Then, if operations may commence in time of perfect peace, when will they cease, under the language of the law?

Mr. CANNON. If this law is passed, it will go into effect as permanent law.

Mr. MAGUIRE. That is what I thought.

Mr. CANNON. Modifying section 355 of the Revised Statutes so that in cases of emergency the President shall have discretion to erect temporary forts and fortifications without awaiting the cession of jurisdiction by the legislature or the acquirement of title, only requiring that in such cases of emergency, for the erection of such temporary fortifications or forts, he shall have the written assent of the owner of the land.

Mr. MAGUIRE. But the President is permanently empowered, so long as this law stands, to be the judge of what constitutes an emergency requiring such action.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely, as the law, in the opinion of your committee, ought to be.

Mr. LENTZ. I desire to offer an amendment that will cover that ground.

Mr. CANNON. There is no amendment. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. You can not amend.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if the gentleman from Texas desires time, I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LENTZ. Will the gentleman permit an amendment to that?

Mr. CANNON. No; I can not do that under the motion. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that on several occasions within the last thirty days this House has been called upon to vote appropriations and permissions to meet extraordinary cases, and yet this House is not in the possession of any fact which warrants it in supposing that the executive department believes that any extraordinary emergency is upon the country.

Only a short time ago we were compelled to vote to place $50,000,000 under the absolute discretion of the President of the United States. The situation at that time appeared so critical that no gentleman on this side was willing to resist that; and we all voted for it.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ARNOLD. Is this motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. Quite so.

Mr. BAILEY. It is, for twenty minutes on a side. I voted for that measure because I believed then that we were on the perilous edge of war. Nothing less than that could have justified it. I will go further. I do not hesitate to declare that if a Democratic President had asked a Democratic House for the absolute control of $50,000,000 I would have denied it. I would have said to him, "Send in your estimates and let Congress judge whether that money of the people ought to be expended or not." Those in power did not see fit to require such a course, and believing that a war was imminent the minority did not hesitate to vote for a proposition which, if our position with the majority had been reversed, we would never have asked them to support.

It is many days since we appropriated that $50,000,000, and much of it has been spent, yet the House has no knowledge of the manner in which it has been spent.

Again, to-day, we are asked to meet an emergency. What are the circumstances? Last Wednesday, when this House was called upon to meet a vital question, and to take decisive action upon it, the majority refused to meet it, and refused to take that action.

They declared that the question was soon to be settled. Everywhere they asserted that to-day the President of the United States would be ready to inform Congress of the state of his negotiations with Spain. The House was adjourned from Friday until to-day to give the President time and opportunity to prepare his message. The hour that such messages usually reach this House has passed, and every well-informed man on both sides of the House knows no message will come from the President to-day. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me important that the country shall understand what Congress is doing and intends to do.

It seems to me equally important that this House shall know what the executive department is doing and intends to do. We ought not to be asked day after day and week after week to provide for an emergency which gentlemen on that side believe has either passed or never existed. I am ready, and every gentleman on this side of the Chamber is ready, to sustain the Administration in every proper measure to prepare for war. We are ready and eager to vote for every measure which may be necessary to conduct that war to a glorious and successful termination. [Loud applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman will suspend. The Chair desires to say that the gallery must preserve order. It is not suitable that there should be expressions of either approval or disapproval. People who are occupying the gallery are occupying it as spectators.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, these galleries are but the American people in miniature; and if this Congress could face the people they would hear a condemnation infinitely more overwhelming than that which comes from the galleries of this House. [Applause on the Democratic side and further manifestations of applause in the gallery.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be obliged, if there is applause in the gallery, to clear the gallery of the House.

Mr. STEELE. I think that is hardly fair, in view of the fact that the gentleman is talking to the galleries. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not interfere with members.

Mr. BAILEY. I might as well speak to the galleries, for when I speak to that side of the House I appeal to deaf ears and hardened consciences. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am not seeking to excite or exaggerate. I am refraining from it; but I am simply stating to the majority of this House that they have trifled with the minority and the country too long.

I say now, and after I have said that I reserve the remainder of my time, that if the President wants one day, or two days, or three days to prepare a message that will be approved by the American people we will be silent until he sends it here, but if the President of the United States wants two days, or if he wants two hours, to continue negotiations with the butchers of Spain, we are not ready to give him a minute longer for that purpose. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I believe I have the right to close, and as I want not more than two or three minutes, I will ask the gentleman to consume some more of his time.

Mr. BAILEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE].

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, in reply to my question a few moments ago, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] stated that the pending measure is not intended to meet a present emergency and that its effect is not confined to times of actual war. It makes a permanent change in the law, giving unusual power to the President of the United States to put the country on a war footing at his discretion. It seems to me that we have gone far enough in that direction. We have gone far enough toward abdicating of the constitutional power of Congress to declare war, to provide for the common defense, and to regulate the land and naval forces of the United States.

I am willing to vote for a resolution putting such power in the hands of the Chief Executive temporarily in time of war; but I insist that such extraordinary power should be confined to times of actual war. My understanding of the existing law is that the President now has this very power in times of war, so that the purpose of the resolution is taking advantage of the present war scare to clothe him with this important power in times of peace. To this I am opposed. It is simply another step in the scheme of centralization which this emergency is being used to promote. A few days ago we appropriated $50,000,000 of public money to be expended by the President independently of Congress and without requiring any specific statement of even the emergency which it was intended to meet.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS? Does the gentleman say that no precaution should be taken in advance to prepare for war?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes; proper precautions should be taken, but in times of peace Congress should provide for the precautions by specific appropriations.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman hold that this Government should not proceed with measures of defense before actual hostilities commence?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Congress should take steps by specific appropriations for specific purposes to be executed by the President, except when the emergencies of actual war render it impossible to follow that course. In times of war, but in times of war only, the President should have the discretionary power given by the pending measure.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. The President is Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, does the gentleman believe that the Chief Executive should point out in advance what he is going to do before any hostilities commence, or is it not better to make preparations for these fortifications without doing it with brass bands?

Mr. MAGUIRE. In times of war he should not be required to point out in advance what he is going to do, but in times of peace—and we are assured by our Chief Executive that these are times of peace—he should not be made a dictator and should not be given absolute power, independently of Congress, to do that which the Constitution of the United States expressly commits to Congress. All provisions for the national defense to be made in times of peace should be made upon recommendations of the Chief Executive by specific appropriations voted by Congress for definite purposes. That is what I contend for. If this legislation is necessary to meet the exigencies of presently imminent war, let it be so frankly stated, and let the legislation be limited to the occasion.

Mr. BAILEY. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Nine minutes.

Mr. BAILEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ].

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if we are sincere, the gentleman from Illinois will permit these words to be added to the resolution which he offers. I ask that they be taken to the Clerk's desk and there read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the independence of Cuba is hereby immediately recognized by virtue of the passage hereof.

Mr. LENTZ. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that last fall Corporal

Tanner said in my presence, in addressing the Union Veteran Legion, that Spain accorded belligerent rights to the Southern States within thirty days after they fired on Sumter. It seems to me, two years after the adoption of the St. Louis plank on the Cuban question by the Republican party, it is high time that we retaliate by adding this declaration to this resolution and show by our acts as well as our words that we are in sympathy with Cuba in her struggle for freedom. Every patriotic gentleman on that side of the House must be absolutely wanting in any reason or excuse for preventing that declaration in behalf of Cuban independence to be added to this legislation. I therefore request that we have the consent of the gentleman from Illinois that these words be added.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have just heard the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ]. I wished to take the floor merely for the purpose of saying that I think it is inopportune right now to urge that amendment. I believe that when we move as Democrats or as citizens we ought to move in phalanx, in line. As a party we have already offered a similar amendment. We have indicated the position of this side of the House clearly to the country, and I do not think it necessary that that position should be emphasized just at this moment and in this way any further; and I think, further, the emphasis of it to-day and in this way would do more harm in the way of division than good in the way of expression of opinion.

One word more, Mr. Speaker. I agree with what has been said by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. When this motion comes up we will vote upon it not as Republicans, not as Democrats, but it is well enough for the country to understand that while we are in favor of all authority possible under the Constitution being given to the President as Commandant in Chief in times of war, we are not willing to invest him with the power of dictatorship in times of peace. But upon the understanding that this is an emergency war measure, we shall treat it, I hope, as such, and not as a mere peace measure, and consequently vote for it.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in behalf of myself——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I rise to a point of order. There is too much disorder in this Chamber, and we can not hear.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken. Will gentlemen have the kindness to take their seats?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I speak for myself alone. I regret to differ with my friend from Texas, but I favor this resolution. I believe the statute ought to be amended as set forth in the resolution.

The idea of our seacoast cities being exposed to destruction, and that we must go into a court of equity to get a title to property before we can erect forts and fortifications to protect that city or seaport, as the case may be, seems to me to be absolutely ridiculous and absurd, and I think it ought to receive the unanimous vote of this House.

Mr. Speaker, we are promised that we are to have a message from the President outlining his policy in regard to our relations with Spain or declaration of war, perhaps. Now, you gentlemen on that side of the House upon whom devolves the responsibility for this war, if we are to have war—I want you, for the satisfaction of my constituents and the country, to make out your indictment under the international law that controls civilized nations and support it by proof showing wherein there is cause for war with Spain. And I want you to go further and show that there is no other honorable method by which our differences can be adjusted without resort to arms.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I heartily agree with the sentiments of the gentleman from Georgia, but I want to correct one statement. The responsibility rests on no side of this Chamber. It rests on every individual Representative on this floor.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I thought that way until within the last two or three days. [Laughter.] I had supposed that when you proposed to enlist soldiers——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. MADDOX. I wish I could have a few minutes more time.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Three minutes.

Mr. McRAE. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] whether he can not yield some time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX]?

Mr. CANNON. I will yield the gentleman from Georgia a few minutes of my time.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I have said that in rising here this morning I spoke for myself. I speak as an American citizen, as a representative of the United States, not as a representative of any party or any section, when it comes to war. [Applause.] We can disagree on questions in regard to domestic policy or economic issues, but when we are to have war with a foreign country, then we should lay aside party and act as representatives of the United States, not members of any party. When any man is asked to enlist and fight the battles of his country if we should have war, I do not suppose the question will be put to him whether he is a Democrat or Republican.

When the expenses of this war are to be paid, I do not suppose that the tax collector will ask the question whether the taxpayer is a Republican or a Democrat. War, if we have it, will be a war of the United States—a war in which we shall all be interested. But I say some remarks which have been made on the other side of the House within the last few days would lead us to believe that the war we may have is to be a Republican war. And for that reason I have asked that when you make out your indictment against Spain, you make it out specifically; stating exactly what the causes are that you are going to fight about, and support them with evidence showing that they really exist, so that the country may understand the case exactly.

Up to this time, so far as I am individually concerned, I know nothing in regard to this "emergency" except what everybody else in the United States knows; and that is what we get from the newspapers. I do not know that we have any cause for war. I do not know that there are any differences with Spain that can not be settled peaceably. If they can be, they certainly ought to be. [Applause.] We should not engage in any war unless it is a just war—a war in which the people will sustain Congress and the Administration in bringing it about. [Applause.] And every Representative on this floor has the responsibility resting upon him in the event that war is declared.

I do not forget, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the late war. I have heard my comrades of that war, men of more mature age, when they were at rest, censure the Congress that brought on the last war and cite the fact that most of the men composing that body were in hiding places and in bombproof positions when the real conflict came on.

I want to call your attention to this fact, gentlemen, that when we come to decide this question every member on this floor ought to decide it intelligently and for himself. The question with each of us should be, Is this a cause that I am willing to fight for? This is the question which every man of us should decide before we give our consent to declare war. [Applause.]

And you should not forget in this matter that we act for the nation and not for the advantage of any party. There has been a great deal said on this floor and at the other end of the Capitol about the cruel manner in which the war is being prosecuted by the Spaniards against the insurgents in Cuba. It must not be forgotten that Cuba is a Spanish province and has belonged to Spain since the discovery of America; that they have a greater right to subdue rebellion in that island than the United States had to force the Confederate States back into the Union; and whilst I do not approve the methods adopted by General Weyler in attempting to suppress the insurgents in Cuba, and heartily join with many gentlemen on this floor in condemning the brutal practices resorted to by him, and I sincerely sympathize with the unfortunate Cubans who have been herded together in the fortified cities of that island like cattle and allowed to starve for the want of shelter and food, is that a cause for war? If it is, it no longer exists. The Spanish Government has repealed the Weyler order and the reconcentrados are allowed to return to their places of abode, and the Spanish Government has appropriated $600,000 to feed these people and enable them to build up their homes.

Sympathy for others will not justify us in hazarding the lives of thousands of American citizens and plunging this country into war. Gentlemen who are crying aloud for war on account of the cruelties practiced by the Spanish on the peaceable citizens of Cuba would do well to read the history of their own country, and especially that of the late civil war, and you will find out that other people as well as the Spaniards have resorted to methods to accomplish their purposes when their passions were aroused that were not at all creditable to a civilized nation.

Mr. Speaker, if we have a cause for war, according to my limited knowledge of the facts, it is in the destruction of the battle ship Maine and the killing of our marines; but has that matter progressed to that point that we would be justified in declaring war? Our own commission does not justify this conclusion. They find that our ship was destroyed by external agencies, but can not fix the responsibility on any person for the act.

The Spanish commission decides that explosion was internal; that the ship was not destroyed by them. They disavow all connection with it and ask that the matter be arbitrated. If this ship was destroyed by some person or persons not connected with the Government, and it is shown that the Government of Spain was not connected, either directly or indirectly, with its destruction nor had any knowledge of the affair, no gentleman can or will contend that that will justify war upon our part. Under these circumstances we can only contend for indemnity.

But, Mr. Speaker, if after we have fully investigated the matter and we find that the Spanish Government is responsible for this act, then nothing but the blood of Spaniards can atone for the insult to our flag and the murder of our marines. And I would favor a war that would not cease until the Spanish flag was driven from the face of the earth. Any government or nation that would be guilty of such an act should not be allowed to exist in the world; and I repeat again, if we have any cause for war, it is based upon the destruction of our battle ship and the murder of our marines, and that is not a mere incident to the real issue, as some contend. But we should be sure we are right and that our cause is just before we turn loose the dogs of war.

It will not be out of place to take into consideration our condition financially and otherwise while we are talking about war. This country is not in a prosperous condition, and no man with a due regard for the truth can say so. We owe over a billion dollars growing out of the late civil war. We are burdened with an enormous pension debt, the result of that war. Our national income is not equal to our expenses, and we are creating a large deficit. We have not a dollar in the Treasury except that derived from the sale of bonds.

The Supreme Court has decided that we can not tax the incomes of the rich. Down in my own section we have indeed a hard burden to bear. We not only have to pay our portion of the national indebtedness, help pay the pension debt, and get nothing in return, but we have to submit to the manufacturer's tax levied indirectly by the tariff laws, and products bring but little, if any, net results, owing to what we believe to be the contraction of the currency and the adoption of the single gold standard. We have not been able as yet to restore our own country to what it was before it was devastated during the late civil war.

We are burdened with State, county, and municipal taxes. Our coasts are unprotected. In addition to this, we are obliged to consider the horrors of war in all its forms. Are we ready to call out the flower of our youth and plunge them into war? We must know that we have a just cause for a war before we become involved in all of its terrible details. Let every man understand that the responsibility is on him, and I apply the rule I have suggested. Is it a cause that I am willing to fight for myself? If it is, you can afford to vote for war.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be misunderstood. I am opposed to war if we can avoid it honorably, but when we have been fully informed as to all matters relating to our trouble with Spain, and it is necessary to fight to maintain the honor and integrity of our common country, I will not fail to do my duty, and no section of the country can or will, according to numbers, furnish more troops to sustain the nation in its hour of peril and none will bear with more fortitude the hardships of war and none will give a better account of themselves on the field of battle, than mine.

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I regret exceedingly to differ with the distinguished Democratic member from California regarding this resolution. I certainly have sufficient confidence in the present Administration to give them all the authority suggested in this bill. I do not think that any member of this House will deny that we should be prepared in every way for war before hostilities are actually declared, and as this act merely gives the President power to order the immediate erection of any temporary fort or fortification in case of an emergency, I think it should receive the vote of every member of this House.

I called at the War Department this morning regarding the question of search-lights for Boston Harbor, so that in defense of that port the officers in charge might be enabled to distinguish at sight any hostile torpedo boat or other craft that might wish to attack our city. The officer in charge said they were doing the best they could; that Congress had delayed until the last moment, and now everything had to be rushed, and that the responsibility, if any came, for our seacoast defense not being in proper shape, did not rest with the War Department, but rather with Congress for not appropriating the funds sooner.

Since I have been a member of this House I have steadily pursued a course that would call for wise and liberal appropriation for our Navy and coast defenses, and I advocate that policy still. I can not see how any member of this House can vote to let this matter drop until hostilities have actually begun, because we may be too late. Act now, gentlemen. Let there be no delay, so that when the time does come, we can face the American people with the record of duty well done and faithfully performed. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to say in closing that my purpose was to see whether gentlemen on the other side would venture any information to those on this side which would justify us in the belief that an emergency does exist. I desire to call the attention of the House and of the country, if the country will hear what I have to say, to the fact that on last Thursday the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] notified us that this question was going to be settled by the Republican party, and settled right.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman does not want to misinterpret my language. What I said was that we would settle this question with the help of the Democratic party. I meant that portion of the Democratic party that puts country above a temporary effort at party advantage or success.

Mr. BAILEY. There is no part of the Democratic party which does not do that, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio; and we will prove it to-day by the fact that notwithstanding you refuse to inform us as to the necessity for the adoption of this resolution, we are going to vote for it in the belief that there may be an emergency that you will be compelled to meet against your will. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON resumed the floor.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me to make simply one statement—that this joint resolution is, as I understand, reported unanimously by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. CANNON. It is reported from the committee. Now, I want to make just two observations, then I will yield to one or two gentlemen, and then ask a vote.

Mr. Speaker, there is a time for speech and a time for silence. There is a time for action. What is this resolution?

To permanently change the law as it ought to have always been, and give to the President in times of emergency, at his discretion, power, under the written consent of the owner of the land, without waiting for a cession of jurisdiction on the part of the legislature, or waiting for a perfect abstract of title, to build temporary forts or fortifications. What for? Take the harbor of New York, or a harbor of our Southern ports, anywhere on our 10,000 miles of seacoast, that the President may make a temporary fortification, and that moneys that may be available for the public defense may be so used. That is all there is in the resolution. It is proposed permanently, forever and a day, to make it a permanent law, unless this or some other Congress shall change the law or repeal it.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman say to the House just what is intended and whether this proposition is designed to meet a present emergency?

Mr. CANNON. The "gentleman from Illinois" will give the ground for the opinion he entertains.

A MEMBER. That is an excellent answer.

Mr. CANNON. And I will not have to get away, in giving that answer, from what is the fact.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from Illinois, before he leaves this question, state the substance of the proposition which he now submits to the House?

Mr. CANNON. I have done so twice, but I will do so again for the information of the House.

Unless, Mr. Speaker, the statute is changed there can be no fortification erected on points of land necessary for the public defense now owned by private persons until the Government obtains a perfect title, and until the legislature of the State having jurisdiction shall have been assembled and has taken action in the premises.

Now, we know that this will take from six months to twelve months, or even five years. There is no knowing how long it may take.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman from Illinois mean to say that they can not, in time of war, take such steps as are contemplated in this resolution? This, as I understand, is a war measure.

Mr. CANNON. It can not be done in time to meet hostilities which may be forced upon us at any moment; and I think, with all due respect to the gentleman from Texas, who seems to be departing from his usual good judgment for the purpose of posturing, and taking a position on this question, it seems to me that he could well have agreed at this time to meet an occasion which might arise, before we are actually called on to take steps which may be necessary under the conditions which confront us.

I am talking business now, and the gentleman from Texas is simply posturing before the galleries and the country. I want action to properly defend the country in case of war.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the conference committee on the fortification appropriation bill is not resisting the increase made by the Senate on that bill for the construction of new fortifications even at this very time?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is trying to fight a man of straw. The President of the United States has authorized to be spent seven and a half millions to perfect the fortifications, under the emergency appropriation heretofore made, and can expend $20,000,000 more if necessary. The gentleman, like a cuttlefish, is trying to muddy the water so as to obscure the real issue.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all. I am merely stating facts which are matters of record.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire further to proceed with this matter. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] such time as he may want.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, the resolution reported from the Appropriations Committee has the approval of every member of that committee. A few days ago this House unanimously voted to place $50,000,000 in the hands of the President for the purpose of taking such steps as in his judgment might be necessary to provide for the defense of the country wherever necessary. A portion of this money is to be used along our seaboard for fortification purposes.

As has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, the War Department is prevented by law from erecting fortifications on any site unless the legislature of the State in which the site is located has previously granted jurisdiction to the General Government and the title to the site selected has been approved by the Department of Justice. To obtain the consent of the legislature as to jurisdiction and to examine and approve titles will require a much longer time than the exigency of the situation will permit.

Now, the President is the Commander in Chief of the armies of the United States. He is charged with the defense of the country, and in my judgment there ought not to be the slightest objection, under the present emergency, to the passage of this resolution. And I desire to say here and now, and once for all, that pending this crisis, in whatever may be necessary to put the country in a state of complete defense, and in whatever may be necessary to protect the honor and to enforce the duty of this Government, I stand ready to assist by my voice and by my vote. I believe that the resolution should receive the hearty and unanimous indorsement of every gentleman on this side of the Chamber. [Applause.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I do not consider it fair for the gentleman from Illinois to have left me under the impression that he did not intend to use his time, and then, after we had used all ours, undertake to use the balance and make the vicious attack upon me which he did a minute ago, and which I intend to answer before this day is over.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that I gave him no understanding that I would not use a part or all my time.

Mr. BAILEY. When I concluded my statement you indicated that. I ask for the reporter's notes.

Mr. CANNON. The notes will not show that, and I have the right to use the time. Now, I am giving the time to the gentleman's side of the House. So far as making any personal attack upon the gentleman from Texas is concerned, I have had no desire to do so, and if under the condition existing I did so, I desire to withdraw any personal attack that I have made. I only aimed to criticise the gentleman's public utterances and his position on this bill, and this bill only. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is recognized.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire only a moment. Whatever may be the outcome of the present emergency, I intend, so far as my vote is concerned, that Congress shall be acquitted of responsibility. If just and proper criticism shall be made by the people, our votes should be so cast as to fix responsibility elsewhere. I supported the joint resolution now pending in committee, and I support it now, because its provisions may be availed of in the present crisis, and because I believe with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that it should find a place in our permanent statute.

During the last ten years Congress has appropriated, in the regular bills, nearly $40,000,000 for fortifications, their armament, submarine mines, and torpedoes. A large part of the $50,000,000 appropriated recently as a war measure for the national defense has been allotted for fortification purposes, and this bill very properly supplements that appropriation by enabling the President, in the language of the joint resolution, to secure sites for "temporary forts" upon obtaining the written consent of the owners of land. The President, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, should have the power granted by the resolution for emergent purposes as the emergencies may arise, both now and for the future.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the action of the Executive may be in respect to the present situation, but, speaking for myself only, I may say that I do not look to Spain for relief from the horrors of starvation and pestilence which now afflict the Cubans. I do not expect the so-called "honor" of the Spanish Government to avenge the officers and seamen of the Maine who died in the harbor of Havana. As an American citizen, so far as my vote can influence results, it will be cast in support of all appropriate measures to put this country in proper condition for offensive and defensive operations, hoping, at the same time, that peace may come, but only upon terms honorable to the people of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, is my time exhausted?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute left.

Mr. CANNON. I will say that, although I have agreed to yield to others, I will cancel that, and if the gentleman from Texas thinks I attacked him personally, I am sorry that I have not more time to yield to him; but I will yield him that minute, which is all I have got.

Mr. BAILEY. No; I do not choose to take that. It will take more than a minute to make the reply that I desire to make.

Mr. CANNON. All right; I will yield the minute to the gentleman from Iowa, if he is here. Otherwise, I will ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the House suspend its rules and pass the joint resolution which has been reported.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the joint resolution was passed.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended and the bill (H. R. 9253) for the better organization of the Army be considered with forty minutes debate at the conclusion of the vote to be taken on amendments reported from the committee and then the bill to final passage.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask for a second on that.

Mr. SAYERS. I trust the gentleman will not bring that before the House.

Mr. HULL. I will withdraw the resolution and move to suspend the rules. A second will give the forty minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, that ought not to pass.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa, he withdraws his motion and moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. HULL. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill. If a second is demanded, it will give us forty minutes' debate upon the bill, with the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. There was a motion which the gentleman from Iowa submitted, was there not, to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The first motion was for the consideration of the bill, and he withdrew that.

Mr. BAILEY. That requires unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Chair think this was a privileged report from the committee?

Mr. HULL. It does not require unanimous consent to suspend the rules.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand, but the first motion——

The SPEAKER. The first motion was a motion by the gentleman from Iowa individually.

Mr. BAILEY. But it was not a motion to suspend the rules——

The SPEAKER. It was a motion to suspend the rules, but that is withdrawn.

Mr. BAILEY. And now he makes another motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. He makes the motion which is before the House.

Mr. BAILEY. He made two motions to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. This is that the rules be suspended and the bill passed as amended.

Mr. BAILEY. On that I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. A second is demanded.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, and I think that more than twenty minutes should be allowed for debate on either side. I think we ought to have at least two hours of debate on each side.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing——

The SPEAKER. If the House would please be in order, it would be easier to come to an understanding.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing, if I can get unanimous consent, to have a more extended debate, and to open the bill for amendments. I am perfectly willing, but inasmuch as we can not get unanimous consent, I have no other way left than to move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. One moment. Let the House please be in order first. The gentleman from Texas desires——

Mr. HAY. I would like to hear what is said.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Texas will address the Chair, and speak so that the Chair can hear, perhaps members may hear.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask if the gentleman from Iowa who has charge of the bill will agree that we may have debate of two hours a side upon it, for the reason that this is a most important measure, and, in my judgment, ought not to pass without proper consideration.

Mr. SULZER. I trust the gentleman from Iowa will agree to that. Is is a very fair proposition.

Mr. HULL. "The gentleman from Iowa" is perfectly willing to agree that the bill may have two hours' debate, one on each side.

Mr. SULZER. Two hours on each side.

Mr. HULL. If we could arrive at unanimous consent to take it up on a day and consider the bill, it would be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. SAYERS. That would be satisfactory.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope that will be agreed to. There ought to be an opportunity for consideration on a particular day.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up for consideration immediately after the reading of the Journal on Wednesday next.

Mr. BAILEY. I supposed we were going to have a message from the President on Wednesday.

Mr. HULL. I have not finished my statement.

Mr. BAILEY (continuing). Suppose you make it Thursday or Friday.

Mr. HULL. I was not through.

The SPEAKER. Will gentlemen please be in order?

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman from Texas will wait a minute until I get through. [Continuing.] And that in the event that a message shall be received from the President at that time, that it shall give way to that, and that we take it up immediately after the consideration of the message.

Mr. ADAMS. I would offer the further suggestion that it should not interfere with any report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. COLSON. I thought the Committee on Foreign Affairs were to report to-day.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee one question in regard to this matter. As I understand, your proposition is this: That the bill go over until Wednesday, with two hours' debate; but if a message comes from the President, then the bill goes over until it is disposed of, and then we have two hours on each side?

Mr. SAYERS. Two hours on each side.

Mr. COX. I do not care anything about the time.

Mr. HULL. My proposition does not limit it to two hours; but it is that it shall be taken up and considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MARSH. I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa includes the right to offer amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If I can have the attention of the gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana (to Mr. HULL). Nobody can hear what you say.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is possible that the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House may have something to bring in upon Wednesday. Can you not add that?

Mr. SULZER. We ought to hear from them to-day.

Mr. HULL. If this matter is to be taken up at that time, it is not to interfere with any report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs or messages from the President.

Mr. SIMPSON. If the gentleman will allow me a question, it is this: Do you not think it is of enough importance that this bill be passed that the President can be induced to withhold his message for another day? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HULL. We will let the President decide that question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 9253 shall be in order after the reading of the Journal on Wednesday morning. Is there objection?

Mr. HANDY. I object.

Mr. HULL. Then I ask for a vote on my motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that.

Mr. SULZER. I ask for order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. If gentlemen will take their seats and cease conversation, there will be something like order.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that this bill comes from the Committee on Military Affairs by a unanimous report entirely; that there is no dispute nor any disposition in the committee on either side to oppose this bill. It is a very simple bill, one which can be very easily understood; and in my humble judgment a debate of twenty minutes on each side is amply sufficient for this House to be put in full possession of the entire purpose and arrangement of this bill. It deals only with the infantry arm of the Army. It does not touch the cavalry or artillery. Therefore I hope that unanimous consent may be granted that this bill may be debated at this time and disposed of. It is just as much an emergency bill as any other bill that has been presented; it is just as necessary that it should be passed, and passed soon, as any other bill, and therefore I trust that gentlemen——

Mr. MAGUIRE. Is not this a bill increasing the standing Army to 100,000 men?

Mr. HAY. Only in time of war. This bill does not increase the standing Army in time of peace at all; only in time of war.

Mr. McCLELLAN. And then only after Congress has officially declared war or that a state of war exists.

Mr. HAY. Yes. Under the bill the Army can not be increased in time of war until a declaration has been made by Congress of war or that a state of war exists.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly satisfied in my mind that a misconception of this bill has been thrust into this House. There is but one section of this bill that touches the Army in time of peace. The war part of the bill——

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to grant the gentleman's request, but it can not be done without unanimous consent. [Laughter.] If gentlemen will have the kindness to cease conversation and regard public business as of more value than their conversation, we could manage to have quiet enough to know what is going on. Will gentleman have the kindness for just a few minutes to remain quiet?

Mr. HULL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Was a second considered as ordered?

The SPEAKER. The second was not considered as ordered. The discussion is going on by unanimous consent in order to arrive at some agreement, if the House desires so to do. If not, the gentleman from Iowa has a right to ask for a vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent again that the time for the consideration of this bill be set for next Wednesday morning immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I was recognized by the Speaker and I do not propose that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] shall introduce his point here at this particular time. [Laughter.] If I am recognized, I will proceed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is only recognized under consent of the House.

Mr. COX. Well, if anybody objects, all right.

Mr. SAYERS. If I can get two minutes, I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Tennessee shall speak in behalf of this bill.

Mr. COX. I do not propose to buy my time of the gentleman from Texas; if he objects, let him object.

Mr. SAYERS. I will object, then, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COX. Very well; the gentleman will regret it.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I understood that to-day was set aside for members to move suspension of the rules in relation to private bills, and I think that takes precedence.

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has made a motion and a second has been demanded.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, has the bill been read?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That hereafter the peace organization of each regiment of infantry now in service shall embrace 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 2 majors, 10 captains, 12 first lieutenants, 10 second lieutenants, 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 chief musician, 2 principal musicians, 2 battalions of four companies each, and 2 skeleton or unmanned companies; the organized companies to be constituted as now authorized by law: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as abolishing the office of chaplain in each regiment of colored troops.

SEC. 2. That in time of war the President, in his discretion, may establish a third battalion for each infantry regiment, consisting of four companies, to be supplied by manning the two skeleton companies, and by organizing two additional companies. The quartermaster, commissary, and veterinary sergeants provided for in this section shall have the pay and allowances of sergeants of their respective arms.

SEC. 4. That when recruited to their war strength, the President may add one second lieutenant to each troop of cavalry and company of infantry, and one first lieutenant and one second lieutenant to each battery of artillery; such officers to be filled by promotions by seniority in their respective arms of the service and by appointments as prescribed by existing law.

SEC. 5. That to facilitate the recruitment to their war strength of troops, batteries, and companies, the President, in his discretion, may, in time of war, authorize each or any regiment of the Army to draw its recruits from such

State or States as may be designated by him; the recruits thus obtained to be credited as a part of the quota of troops called for by the United States from any State so designated.

SEC. 6. That in time of war the President shall cause the batteries of artillery authorized by law to be organized as heavy or field artillery, as in his judgment the exigencies of the service may require.

SEC. 7. That in time of war the pay proper of enlisted men actually serving in commands operating against an enemy shall be increased 20 per cent over and above the rates of pay as fixed by law: Provided, That in war time no additional increased compensation shall be allowed to soldiers performing what is known as extra or special duty: Provided further, That any soldier who deserts shall, besides incurring the penalties now attaching to the crime of desertion, forfeit all right to pension which he might otherwise have acquired: And provided also, That no bounty or money gratuity shall be paid by State or local authorities to a soldier as an inducement to enlist in the United States military service.

SEC. 8. That whenever the strength of a company of infantry, as established by the President, shall exceed 150 enlisted men, the captain or other officer commanding it shall be mounted, and be entitled to the pay and allowances of a mounted officer of his grade.

SEC. 9. That in time of war every officer serving with troops operating against an enemy, who shall exercise, under assignment in orders issued by competent authority, a command above that pertaining to his grade, shall be entitled to receive the pay and allowances of the grade appropriate to the command so exercised: Provided, That a rate of pay exceeding that of a brigadier-general shall not be paid in any case by reason of such assignment.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be read as it will be when amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] moves that the rules be suspended and the bill be passed as it will be when amended as recommended by the committee. The Clerk will read the bill as it will be if the amendments of the committee are adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Omit the part in brackets and insert the part printed in italics.]

A bill for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the peace organization of each regiment of infantry now in service shall embrace 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 2 majors, 10 captains, 12 first lieutenants, 10 second lieutenants, 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 chief musician, 2 principal musicians, 2 battalions of 4 companies each, and 2 skeleton or unmanned companies; the organized companies to be constituted as now authorized by law: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as abolishing the office of chaplain in each regiment of colored troops: And provided further, That the vacancies in the grade of major, created by this section, shall be filled by promotion according to seniority in the infantry arm.

SEC. 2. That [in time of war] upon a declaration of war by Congress, or a declaration by Congress that war exists, the President, in his discretion, may establish a third battalion for each infantry regiment, consisting of four companies, to be supplied by manning the two skeleton companies and by organizing two additional companies. The vacancies of commissioned officers in the additional companies shall be filled by promotions by seniority in the infantry arm and by appointments in accordance with existing law.

SEC. 3. That [in time of war] upon a declaration of war by Congress, or a declaration of Congress that war exists, the enlisted strength of a company, troop, and battery, respectively, may, in the discretion of the President, be increased to comprise not exceeding:

For each company of infantry: One first sergeant, one commissary-sergeant, [ten] twelve sergeants, [ten] twelve corporals, three musicians, three artificers, two wagoners, two hundred and [twenty] sixteen privates; total enlisted, 250.

For each troop of cavalry: One first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 6 sergeants, 8 corporals, 2 farriers and blacksmiths, 2 trumpeters, 1 saddler, 1 wagoner, 78 privates; total enlisted, 100.

For each battery of field artillery: One first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 veterinary sergeant, 6 sergeants, 15 corporals, 2 farriers, 2 artificers, 1 saddler, 2 musicians, 1 wagoner, 141 privates; total enlisted, 173.

For each company of engineers: One first sergeant, 10 sergeants, 10 corporals, 2 musicians, 64 first-class privates, 63 second class privates; total enlisted, 150.

The quartermaster, commissary, and veterinary sergeants provided for in this section shall have the pay and allowances of sergeants of their respective arms.

SEC. 4. That when recruited to their war strength, the President may add one second lieutenant to each troop of cavalry and company of infantry, and one first lieutenant and one second lieutenant to each battery of artillery; such offices to be filled by promotions by seniority in the respective arms of the service and by appointments as prescribed by existing law.

SEC. 5. That to facilitate the recruitment to their war strength of troops, batteries, and companies, the President, in his discretion, may [in time of war] authorize each or any regiment of the Army to draw its recruits from such State or States as may be designated by him: Provided, That each State or Territory, including the District of Columbia, shall first be allotted its proportional quota of such recruits; the recruits thus obtained to be credited as a part of the quota of troops called for by the United States from any State so designated.

SEC. 6. That in time of war the President shall cause the batteries of artillery authorized by law to be organized as heavy or field artillery, as in his judgment the exigencies of the service may require.

SEC. 7. Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to repeat his request to make this a special order for Wednesday next, not to interfere with any reports from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. HULL. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I renew the request.

Mr. SULZER. I hope there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill be taken up as a special order after the reading of the Journal on Wednesday next.

Mr. BAILEY. Not to interfere with any reports of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. It can not interfere with any report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BAILEY. We desire to except that, and that was the request of the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put it that way, although it is the same thing. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill be taken up as a special order on Wednesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, not to interfere with any report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CAB SERVICE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for the regular order. I first ask consideration for House joint resolution 189.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to locate on the streets or parts of streets adjoining the stations of any railroad company in the District of Columbia a stand for cabs, carriages, and other vehicles for the conveyance of passengers to and from the said railroad stations, said service to be established by the said railroad companies. That the rates of charges for the service to be rendered by the said railroad companies shall not at any time be greater than the rates charged for similar service in the city of New York.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "shall," in line 10, and insert in place thereof the words "be fixed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and that at no time shall the schedule exceed the rates now in force in the city of Washington."

Mr. MOODY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] whether this bill has been extensively altered since it was last before the House?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is now an entirely different measure.

Mr. MOODY. Does it give the Pennsylvania Railroad Company any exclusive right?

Mr. BABCOCK. It gives no exclusive right. The measure applies to the depots of both companies. It has been so altered as to meet the objections which were made on the floor.

Mr. MOODY. As well as I could understand the reading, the bill seems to me now entirely unobjectionable.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. MCEWAN. I think this bill ought to be explained somewhat, so that we may understand its effect.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. ODELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred House resolution No. 189, authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to locate a cab service, and for other purposes, after a careful consideration beg leave to report the same to the House with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all of lines 11 and 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "be fixed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and that at no time shall the schedule exceed the rates now in force in the city of Washington."

The resolution herewith recommended avoids the objectionable feature of a bill granting the sole right to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, which was laid upon the table. No exclusive rights are conveyed by the resolution herewith reported, and to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia is granted the full authority, both as to the location of such cab stands and the regulations for the services rendered. It will add to the transportation facilities of the city of Washington to a great degree. The service which is proposed to be established under this bill is similar to that now in use in all of the large cities of the country. It may be said, in conclusion, that the measure has the approbation of the District Commissioners.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. MCEWAN addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] yield?

Mr. BABCOCK. How much time does the gentleman from New Jersey want?

Mr. MCEWAN. Only a few minutes.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield five minutes.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, it is not with any hope of having this bill defeated that I rise to speak upon it. What I wished to do is to express my sorrow that any bill of this kind should be brought before the House. My objection to it is this: I think all legislation ought to be in such a line as to keep up the greatest number of men who own their own business. I believe, as history tells us—the history of England, the history of France, the history of all countries—that when we have a large number of men who are engaged in business for themselves it is much safer for the durability of the country than when we have a great number of men who are receiving salaries. Hence I deprecate the passage of this bill and of all legislation that looks to diminish the number of men holding and conducting their own business. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman please state how this bill is obnoxious to any such objection?

Mr. McEWAN. Certainly. The purpose of the bill is to put this transportation service under the control of the railroad companies.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh no.

Mr. McEWAN. That is the effect of the measure, whether so declared in the bill or not, because the chairman of the committee has stated on this floor that the service which this bill proposes to establish will be entirely in line with similar service in New York and other large cities. Now, the gentleman knows and I know that in New York City the New York Central Railroad and the Pennsylvania Railroad own and conduct the cab service.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will not the same number of persons be required, in any event, to drive these carriages?

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, all I want to say——

Mr. RICHARDSON. How does this bill take away the occupation of any man?

Mr. McEWAN. I did not use the word "occupation." I am sorry the gentleman did not do me the honor of paying attention to my remarks. There is a principle involved here; the principle that there ought to be in any country a large number of men owning and conducting their own business rather than a large number of wage earners, on the same principle that there ought to be a large number of householders rather than a large number of rent payers.

The question being taken, the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER was proceeding to put the question on the passage of the bill, when

Mr. FITZGERALD said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether there has been any time limit fixed upon the debate on this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was putting the question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to say something upon the measure, if it is not too late.

The SPEAKER. It is not too late. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. BABCOCK. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know.

Mr. McEWAN. Upon what are we about to vote—on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill; but both sides of the question had not been taken when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] intimated that he desired to address the House.

Mr. BABCOCK. The bill has been read the third time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like to hear the bill read as it stands at present, with the amendment that has been adopted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be again read.

The bill as amended was read.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the chairman of the committee answer one question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has yielded how much time to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BABCOCK. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the chairman of the committee one question. What is the necessity for giving to the railroad lines that come into the city of Washington exclusive control of the cab service at the depots or in that vicinity?

Mr. BABCOCK. The bill does nothing of that kind.

Mr. TAWNEY. It so states.

Mr. BABCOCK. It is not exclusive.

I have stated several times heretofore—not in the discussion to-day—but will state again, for the information of gentlemen, that this is a great convenience and saving of expense to passengers coming to and going from these railroad stations in the city of Washington to the several hotels or to other parts of the city. The lowest charge is 15 cents for each passenger. Under the bill these cabs will be required to carry at least two passengers for 15 squares at a cost of 25 cents each. This is a reasonable charge for strangers coming into the city, who will not be subjected to the unjust charges which are sometimes made against them for such cab service. Under this arrangement they can have their baggage taken from the depot to the hotel, and from the hotel to the depot, without any unjust and unreasonable charge being made upon them.

Mr. TAWNEY. But is it not possible, I would ask the gentleman, to accomplish that saving now by limiting the charge to those already engaged in the business, whether it be a service connected with the railroad stations or not?

Mr. BABCOCK. There is an ordinance already in force, I will state to the gentleman, in this city limiting the charges of cabs and fixing the distances on which charges shall be made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who made an arrangement of that character? Is that contemplated in the bill? I would like to ask by what authority or under what regulation a specific charge has been fixed for this cab service?

Mr. BABCOCK. There is such a provision already embodied into law, and in the schedule accompanying this bill we have simply adopted the existing law as a part of the bill, instead of putting it in specifically. Gentlemen will see that the bill provides that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall be authorized to make a schedule not to exceed that in force now. They are limited in that regard by the existing law.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is there any limitation fixed by this bill on the space which the Commissioners may grant to the railroads as a cab stand?

Mr. BABCOCK. The control is entirely in the hands of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman think that it is well to put a limit on the powers of the Commissioners in that regard?

Mr. BABCOCK (continuing). Of course the gentleman understands that there would not be a sufficient number of cabs to occupy 100 feet of the roadway. That would take sixteen or eighteen cabs belonging to one company——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But I understand that this would authorize the Commissioners to exercise the right of fixing the stations. Now, they might fix it, as the former bill provided, to occupy a space of 100 feet on each side of the street. They recommended a bill containing that provision.

Mr. BABCOCK. We assume that the Commissioners will determine that question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi (continuing). In passing a bill of this character, of course we can not in determining our own duty be controlled by the reflection that somebody else will or will not do theirs. It is our duty, in the enactment of legislation of this character, to take into consideration what is best for the interests of the people here.

Mr. BABCOCK. In the opinion of the committee the pending bill, which we ask the House now to adopt, will meet the difficulties which have heretofore been encountered with reference to measures of this character.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman think that this bill meets all of the objections?

Mr. BABCOCK. I am inclined to think that it does. Great care has been given to it, and it meets the approval of the Commissioners.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But there is an ordinance already in force now limiting these charges for cab service.

Mr. BABCOCK. The matter is in the hands of the Commissioners. This proposition, however, is regarded as absolutely essential in order to protect strangers coming into the city from unjust and injurious charges by cabmen and others. Of course the gentleman understands that there could not be a sufficient number of cabs to occupy, say, 100 feet on each side of a street. It would require sixteen or eighteen or more cabs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the explanation of the gentleman from Wisconsin with reference to this bill, and am unwilling to give it my vote.

If the House should incorporate this resolution into the laws of the land it would give the exclusive rights and privileges that are now enjoyed, of taking persons to and from the depots, to the Pennsylvania and to the Baltimore and Ohio corporations, and they will not only enjoy the sole and absolute right to transport passengers to Washington in the steam cars, but after the passengers arrive in this city these corporations will be given the sole and exclusive privilege of transporting them to and from all parts of the city from the depots by reason of the rights granted them under this bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is nothing of that kind in the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If that is so, we will withdraw the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. We will withdraw the bill if there is anything of that kind in it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I certainly can gain no other impression in reading the bill. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] for a moment.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will look at the wording of the resolution, he will see that the railroad companies have the exclusive right to establish this service. That is contained in the first paragraph of the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The resolution says:

Said service to be established by the said railroad companies.

Mr. TAWNEY. The places are to be fixed by the Commissioners, but the service can not be established by any other persons, under the authority of this resolution, than the railroad companies.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is so expressly provided in this resolution; and it is a question whether we want to give the railroad companies the exclusive right of transportation of passengers to and from the depots.

Mr. DALZELL. You do not do that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In line 8 of the resolution, as I have it, and as I heard it read a few moments ago at the Clerk's desk, it says:

Said service to be established by the said railroad companies.

I should like to know what authority the District Commissioners have to invest the power of establishing this service in any other persons than these corporations under that resolution?

Mr. BABCOCK. Without this the railroad companies would have no right to go into the cab business or to transport passengers by cabs. They have no authority under their charters to do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They ought not to have it. That is what I contend. I think they have all the privileges they should have in transporting passengers to and from this city, and I contend that it is unfair and it is the creation of a monopoly to grant rights which this resolution gives with respect to the transfer of passengers to and from these depots to the Pennsylvania Railroad corporation and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad corporation.

During the past four or five months I have been importuned time and again and called from this House by persons who were seeking employment in the city of Washington, and I do not think it is fair to increase the number of persons who are out of employment by giving to these corporations the sole and absolute power and privilege to carry people to and from the depots in this city, thereby throwing out of employment hundreds of men who have invested their hard-earned savings in a horse and carriage.

Mr. BABCOCK. This law will increase rather than diminish the opportunities for employment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do you understand that this resolution will prevent you from employing any cab driver or carriage driver in the city to carry you anywhere you want to go when you come in on the railroad? If it does that, it ought not to pass.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand it gives exclusive rights to the railroad corporations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no doubt that if this resolution is enacted into law every available space in the neighborhood of the depots will be given to these corporations by the District Commissioners, and the poor man who owns a single horse and team will be placed at such a distance from the depots that he will be to all intents and purposes shut out. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill, and I hope the members of the House can see the justice of my position. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. That is true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think any privileges should be given to any corporation to take passengers to and from the depots of this city, and my voice and my vote will be raised against such a proposition. I do not think this resolution is properly understood by the members of this House, and if it is properly understood, I shall very much misjudge the temper and sentiment of this House if they vote to enact it into law. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to get in a word here.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the question here is a question of the action of Congress in the direction of the comfort and convenience of the people coming to and going from the city of Washington. It is rather, to me, an important matter; of very much more importance than the question of how many old, dilapidated, broken-down, filthy hacks can be permitted to annoy the people of the town.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; the gentleman has had his say, and he has spoken for the mob, as he usually does.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am speaking for the people of this country, if you term them a mob.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am speaking for the people of this country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The people of this country are not a mob.

Mr. GROSVENOR. You are speaking for the men who want to maintain this old cab system.

Mr. FITZGERALD. People are not compelled to use those hacks unless they desire to do so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, Mr. Speaker, the people are compelled to make use of those cabs, and they can not help themselves. I want to state to gentlemen here who are not familiar with it what this system has accomplished in one year in New York. If you want to go to the city of New York by the Pennsylvania road or any other road, this is what you have to do: You get off at Jersey City terminus, cross on the ferryboat, and carry your baggage, if you have any, in your hand up to the elevated railroad, or carry yourself up to the part of the city wherever you want to go, or get into a cab and pay anywhere—according to the size of the man and his ability to knock the hackman down—anywhere from a dollar, the minimum, up to $1.50 or $3.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Five dollars.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In proportion to the ability to resist and fight of the unfortunate man captured. Now, you go to the city of New York, as I did the other day with a friend of mine, a gentleman of the House, and I will tell you what we did. We walked out of the station at Jersey City into the ferryboat. We were landed with our luggage at the foot of Twenty-third street, and we took a cab with our valises, one of us having two of them, and were delivered at the hotel at Madison Square for 25 cents for the two of us. There was accommodation there for fifty men, if there had been that many passengers, and within three or four minutes from the time we were landed at the ferry slip we were all going our various ways and rapidly delivered to our destinations. And in coming the other way they brought us down to the foot of Twenty-third street, and that was an end of the expense.

I am in favor of a system of that kind at the capital of the country. There is no man here that has come from the East and has landed at the Baltimore and Potomac depot in the last two years a half a dozen times that has not been charged for similar service, starting at zero as one price and running up to four or five times that price, just in accordance with the anxiety the man has not to have a row with somebody and not to expose himself to a controversy with a cab driver.

Mr. McEWAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. RIDGELY. My question is, If you believe the only way in which the city authorities can protect the public is to turn this business over to the railroad companies?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is the only way it has ever been done in the United States. It has been done in London by this same system, and for a shilling you can ride from one of the great railroad stations to nearly all parts of the city within a mile, a mile and a half, or 2 miles, and that is all done under a system of this same character.

Mr. McEWAN. By the courtesy of the gentleman from Ohio, I would like him to answer, if it would be so advantageous to have the railroad companies conduct the cab service here, why would it not be equally advantageous to the traveling public that they should conduct the hotels?

Mr. GROSVENOR. A great many of them do conduct hotels; and conduct them mighty well.

Mr. McEWAN. Then, on the same principle, if it is advantageous for railroads to conduct a cab service and run hotels, why would it not be advantageous for them to run bake shops?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why would it not, if it is advantageous for railroads to carry passengers from New York to Washington City, be advantageous to have railroad companies hoe corn?

Mr. McEWAN. I was coming to that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, let me answer. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech. Why, a railroad company is interested in transportation. The great idea of modern railroad travel is to take the passenger at the point where he wants to start from, if it is his own house, or at the hotel, and deliver him at the point he wants to reach, if it is New York, or Philadelphia, or wherever else it is. It is a part of the system of transportation, and therefore it is a legitimate action of the railroad corporation.

Mr. McEWAN. The gentleman mentioned hoeing corn——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Take the matter of baggage. My friend from Boston no doubt would say, "Why not let every fellow have the privilege of backing his little gocart up to the hotel and stand around, fifteen or twenty of them, and beg you to let him have your trunk?"—and probably you would not see it again. Under the system as managed by the railroads you can say to the porter of the hotel, "I want a check for my trunk to Boston;" and that is the last you see of it until you come upon it at the other end of the line. It is a part of a great system of accommodation to the public.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is there in the bill that will compel the adoption of the same rates at Washington as they have in New York?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know. I have not read the bill.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question which, I think, may throw some light on the real intent of this bill. The Commissioners are now authorized under the law to establish private hack stands at any point which, in their opinion, may be desirable in the city of Washington.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Private cab stands have been established and are maintained at all the depots in the city. It is not contemplated that these stands shall be interfered with in the least, except it may be to increase the efficiency of the service. It simply provides for the establishment of additional cab stands at railroad stations by the railroad companies. Now, I desire to ask my friend the chairman of the committee if, in his opinion, the bill seeks to establish a monopoly, as my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] has the impression?

Mr. BABCOCK. No. I understand that the railroad companies under their present charter have no right to establish a cab service without this legislation, and that is the reason why this legislation is brought before the House.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, there is one thing very sure, if this bill is not in favor of the masses of the people, it ought not to pass, and if it is, it ought to pass. It appears that the railroad company can not establish a cab service in competition with other cab drivers in the city of Washington without additional legislation. If the railroad company establishes a service and the service is effective, it will increase the number of individuals that get employment rather than decrease the number of plain people—the wage earners—that get employment. If the cab service is better established by the railroad company than that which they compete with, then poor people will get employment with the railway company.

In New York and Philadelphia there are private cabs at every station in competition with the railroad companies' cabs, and the result has been to give cab drivers more and better employment and pay, for the better service you give, the more people will use cabs. Again, every man that owns a horse and cab can still run it to the depot. There will be as many competitors for the work as ever. Every man will still run a cab that can get as high wages, after deducting his expenses, as at other employment. If the railroad companies give better service, they have to employ as many men, and they have to pay as good wages, or they can not get good men. So there will be more men employed at better wages under this service than before, the same as in New York, Chicago, London, and everywhere else where this railway cab service is conducted.

Furthermore, the competition between railroads in their cab service will be as efficient and cheap as it can possibly be made. Why? Because they want to induce people to buy tickets over railroads. Men, in taking the railroad train in cities where there is any competition, consider the service to be given at their destination when they want to reach it as they do on the railroad itself, and this is in the interest of the employment of more men, for cheaper service, and a larger service.

Mr. McEWAN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he does not advocate the passage of this bill on the ground of the advantages of monopoly?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I recognize no monopoly as an injury to the mass of the people that furnishes things for the masses of people to consume at a lower price or serves the masses of the people cheaper than it can be done in any other way.

Mr. McEWAN. I think that is very frank. I would like to ask further if, by the term "monopoly," he does not include trusts? That is what I am getting after. This is creating a gigantic trust, and I am against trusts of any kind.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Everything in this world is being concentrated and differentiated so that each department of labor is managed by some one head, and it thereby increases the pay of all persons engaged in that particular business, from the head down. It does not lessen their incomes, either; you can not show where a great combination that serves the people for less money does not furnish larger incomes to the people that are employed in it, not one.

Mr. McEWAN. Will you give me time to answer?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. As to this matter of railroads and consolidation of railroads, the people of this country can manage and control them, through Congress, whenever the railroads are all consolidated under one management, a thousandfold easier than they can a dozen or a hundred corporations. In Massachusetts, before we consolidated our railroads under practically two managements, we had a dozen boards of directors, and with all "their sisters and their cousins and their aunts," when they sought to control the legislature. Since we have consolidated them practically under two managements the legislature is practically free from lobbyists in that interest.

Mr. KELLEY. That is apparent to nobody but the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I beg your pardon; it is apparent to everybody, excepting some Populists.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TODD] five minutes.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Speaker, the resolution under discussion touches a question far more vital to the American people than simply the amount of money that the people of the District of Columbia shall pay for hack hire. The bill is an invasion of the constitutional rights of American citizens by corporations which seek to extend their privileges beyond those contemplated in their charters. It is an attempt of the railroads to reach out into the streets and highways of our villages and cities and to prevent men who have invested their little capital in hacks or other classes of business from gaining an independent and reputable living. I hold, Mr. Speaker, that compared with such a question the mere question of hack rates in this District is a matter of indifference.

The honorable gentleman from Ohio contended that the rights of the railroad companies should be enlarged. If he will refer to various Congressional reports, he will find that committees of both the Senate and House have repeatedly pointed out the danger of allowing railroad companies to continue even in the classes of private business upon which they have already launched. The coal "combine" is a notable instance. It is unquestioned that this combine, which is strangling the people of the country, could not exist if the railroad companies had not combined and gone into the coal-mining business.

Sir, I for one will ever oppose any attempt to allow the railroads to go one step farther in any branch of business which is not properly that of a common carrier. They have already absorbed all the private express business in our cities. They have absorbed all the interstate express companies.

In further reply to the gentleman from Ohio, who has said that the railroad companies have a right to extend their business, I will say that they have extended their business. They are not only running the coal combine of this country, but are dictating the legislation on our statute book; they are dictating the decisions of our courts. And it is time that a halt should be called in this onward march of monopoly against the private rights of citizens. I should much deplore any progress that may be made by railroads in further increasing their power.

It is evident, in reference to the bill under consideration, that those who furnish the best service will get the patronage of the public. Congress will surely approve any measure which the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may introduce, seeking to protect the people of the District from oppressive charges by private hackmen. If, as the honorable chairman of the District Committee has said, the hack charges in this city are exorbitant and unreliable, it is the duty of his committee to recommend to Congress the passage of a bill remedying those abuses. If he or his committee have not done so, they have been derelict in duty. I for one will gladly give my support to any measure which the committee may introduce which will regulate in a rightful way, with justice both to the hackmen and the public, the quality of the hack service and the prices to be charged therefor.

But I hope, Mr. Speaker, that Congress will not forget—certainly the country will not forget—that our first duty is to protect the free institutions of this country, to protect the democratic and republican principles ingrafted upon our Constitution, rather than, under some plausible subterfuge, to hand over to the railroad companies business that properly belongs to private individuals. [Applause.]

Mr. BABCOCK. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Are we proceeding under any sort of arrangement as to division of time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, has charge of this bill, and he is apportioning out the hour which belongs to him.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to suggest that a half hour be assigned for debate, to be divided equally between the two sides, the time to be apportioned by a representative of each side.

Mr. BABCOCK. I have endeavored to be impartial in distributing time. Most of the speakers thus far have opposed the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like to have about five minutes.

Mr. BABCOCK. I think if the gentleman will be patient a few minutes he will have his opportunity.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Very well; with that understanding I do not press my proposition.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I should not have spoken on this bill but for the fact that when this subject was before the House on a previous day I opposed and voted against the bill then under consideration. But I believe, upon careful examination of the present bill, that there will be found no reasonable objection to its provisions, and for that reason I propose to support it. There is no "trust" about it; there is no "monopoly."

I think gentlemen are forgetting the real party for whom we should legislate in this matter, and that is the traveling public. The interests of the railroad companies or the interests of the hack drivers are of secondary importance. The real thing for us to consider is, What is the interest of the traveling public? I have had experience with this service in other cities. When the previous bill on this subject was before the House, I regretted the necessity of voting against it, because I knew how beneficial a properly regulated service of this kind is for the public. Gentlemen will see that by this bill no permanent or exclusive rights are given to the railroad companies. Whatever privileges the Commissioners of the District of Columbia see fit to allot with reference to the cab service controlled by the railroad companies are determinable at the pleasure of the Commissioners.

The difficulty with the other bill was that it gave an exclusive privilege to the railroad, and there was some danger that by its terms it gave rights to the railroads in the streets and upon the public lands. Now, both those dangers are guarded against in this bill. There is nothing to prevent the continuance of competition by private parties; and let me say that in New York that competition still continues. When I was last there it was a rainy day. It was impossible to get one of the Pennsylvania cabs, and I found a private cabman ready to my hand, and I took him, and for the first time in my life I found that a private hackman carried me in accordance with the rates established by law. That was an incidental effect of the establishment of this valuable kind of competition by the railroad companies. Now, does my colleague from Massachusetts desire to ask any question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My colleague stated a few moments ago that this is not the creation of any monopoly.

Mr. MOODY. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like to ask him if, under this bill, the Commissioners are allowed to establish that kind of service by anybody else except in cooperation with the Baltimore and Ohio and Pennsylvania Railroad corporations?

Mr. MOODY. I understand the Commissioners have the right to establish cab stands now.

Mr. BABCOCK. Everybody else has the right except the railroad companies now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there anything to prevent the Commissioners giving to the railroad companies the same privileges which are now enjoyed by everybody else?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly; they have no right under their charters to do a cab business.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not as railroad companies, but as cab companies they can.

Mr. BABCOCK. As railroad companies they have no such right at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. As cab companies they have, but not as railroad companies.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] has expired. The Chair hopes this may be a debate and not a dialogue.

Mr. MOODY. My time has expired in the midst of their private conversation, but I believe I have said all I care to.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a request for unanimous consent that debate upon this bill close in thirty minutes, and that the gentlemen opposed to it control half the time and that I control the other half.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the debate close in half an hour, the time to be equally divided. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do I understand that I am to control half of that time, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. If that is the understanding of the House, the Chair will accord it to the gentleman. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an explanatory statement before the debate goes any further. I find here an error in the amendment offered by the committee, in one word. As I drew and dictated the amendment and did not look at it until I read the printed resolution handed to me, I ask unanimous consent of the House that that word may be stricken out and this error corrected. It changes the word "Washington" to "New York." The committee intended to provide that in no case should the charges authorized to be made here exceed the rates now charged in New York City, which commence on a basis of 15 cents and run up, 15, 25, and 30.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the change will be made in the engrossment, and the House will be understood as directing it. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like to have order, because I want to discuss this bill in a businesslike way.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. Conversation must cease in the vicinity of the gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I think the Committee on the District of Columbia are taking rather an underhold upon the House of Representatives, something of an unfair advantage. This bill is substantially the bill which this House hurled to defeat two or three weeks ago. The only difference in the world is this, that the other bill, which met with the recommendation of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, fixed the limits of space within which the stands should be located at 100 feet on each side of the street from the corner. This bill does not fix the limits of space at all, but leaves it to the District Commissioners to fix. Judging them by all fair rules of judging human conduct, they will, when they have the power, do what they recommended Congress to do when they had not the power.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman permit a question or an interruption? It will not be long.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MOODY. Does not the gentleman see a difference between an act of Congress granting to the railroad company an exclusive right and an act of Congress simply granting to the Commissioners the power to permit, during their pleasure, the location of cabs in a certain place?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Theoretically, yes; but practically, as far as the people who run the cabs are concerned, as long as the Commissioners choose to act in a certain direction which by previous recommendation they have indicated, no.

The gentleman from Massachusetts says that the bill gives a right to the Commissioners to make provision "as they see fit" in this matter. But the question is, What do they see fit to do? They have already recommended to Congress a proposition which Congress sat down upon some time ago. Now, it is supposed, and there is reason to suppose, that they will endeavor to make the same regulation.

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman will allow an interruption, I will say that this bill was submitted to gentlemen on the other side who opposed the other bill on the floor. We have reason to believe that they are entirely satisfied on both sides of the House with the pending proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, when the gentleman says it was submitted to "the gentlemen"—using the plural—"who were opposed to the former bill," he is in error to some extent at least. I am one of those who opposed the former bill, and I can say that it was not submitted to me.

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, what I meant to say was that it was submitted to a majority of the gentlemen on that side who had opposed the former bill. Perhaps the gentleman from Mississippi did not see it.

Mr. McEWAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I can not yield now. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman, but I have a very few moments.

This bill confers upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia certain authority with reference to the location of these cab stands adjoining the railroad stations. It applies not only to the Pennsylvania Railroad, but also to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, which is a change from the former bill, and not for the better. Now, the question is, What is the purpose of the bill? To establish a stand for cabs. What sort of a stand? It is a stand to be "established" by the railroad companies themselves.

If the railroad companies choose to establish the cab service, they can be given authority to locate their stands adjacent to their stations now by the order of the Commissioners, not as railroad companies, it is true, but as cab companies; and if they choose to do so, they ought to be forced to take their chances with everybody else. They ought not to be given any special privileges; and if the space allotted them shall not exceed say 10 or 15 feet on each side of the street from the crossings, this would deprive this legislation of its monopolistic features. But is that the case?

We assume—we have a right to assume—that the Commissioners will give what they please in the way of space. This will undoubtedly be the case as long as that is not fixed in the law. The Commissioners, therefore, will do just what they please, viz, what they formerly recommended, and it is not competition but exclusion of others and monopoly in the railroads which the bill enacts, and therefore the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts falls to the ground. We have no objection to allowing the railroad companies to compete if they desire to do so. We do object to the practical exclusion of all others. That is and will be the effect of the discretion vested in the Commissioners by this bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that the bill is so plain and simple that it does not need argument to explain it on this floor. As has already been said it is an attempt to do indirectly what the committee has failed to do directly. They sought to directly give to the railroad companies in this city the power to monopolize the sites for cabs in front of the railroad stations.

This the House a few days ago, by an overwhelming majority, voted down. Now they come back with this proposition to allow the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish a stand or stands on the street or streets adjacent to the depots for cab service.

It is plainly an effort, as I have said, to do indirectly what they have failed to do directly. That is to say, it is simply an effort to take from private cab drivers now operating the privilege of hauling passengers to and from the various depots to the hotels or residences throughout the city and to transfer that business absolutely to the railroad companies as a monopoly.

If the bill pass, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia will undoubtedly do, or allow the railroad companies to do, the thing that they recommended this House to do by law—that is, to give to the railroad companies the exclusive monopoly of standing cabs in front of their depots on the various streets in the city. Now, Mr. Speaker, the question is whether we are ready to adopt such a principle as that and take from private parties the poor privilege of allowing them to stand their cabs near these railroad stations and avail themselves of the opportunity offered of conveying passengers to the various hotels or residences in this city. That is all there is of it. The principle is wrong. It favors monopoly and gives it the sanction of national law. The people are opposed to trusts, and this bill seeks to establish one or increase the domain of one now in existence.

Is the House ready to vote for such a bill? If it is opposed to the principle involved; if, in other words, it is opposed to granting unjust privileges and extending new rights to the grasping monopolies which now exist, they will vote against it. It is argued that this is a small matter. It is; but great evils result from small beginnings. I can not vote for any proposition that in any way gives national sanction to a monopoly.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. This bill is to fix on the statute books a provision of law which will give the Commissioners authority and power to deal with and modify the regulations as to the cab service in this city. It is not a proposition to give to the Commissioners authority to allow the railroad companies to exercise any special monopoly, but to enter into competition in the business regulations, which can be changed at any time by amendment or otherwise, to increase the number of cabs in the service of the public in this city, and to enable that service to be properly, promptly, and satisfactorily performed.

Mr. GREENE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE. Do you not believe they will do what they recommended us to do in a former bill?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I do not, because I think it is exceedingly unwise; and I do not believe, if they attempted to do it, it would in practice be confirmed by their judgment. So they would very soon recall it. I want to say further that when we established railroads and allowed them to use the great power of eminent domain and run their railroads everywhere, we killed farmers' wagons that were drawing grain to market, and we killed the stage coaches that were using hundreds of horses in carrying people between cities.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I can not. If you had been the first I should have yielded to you, but I have already yielded once and I have only three minutes. You can not inaugurate any great improvement that does not strike down something that is desirable to save. No man has the right "needlessly to set his foot on a worm," but we can not walk without killing animal life. An improvement in the service of cabs by which poor men or poor women and children can be given cheaper service in being carried to the homes they are seeking or those of friends they are visiting at a less price, and serving the masses of the country by good service, can not be had that does not drive out some of these hackmen that are giving the present poor service. I regret it is so; but we can not do any good that will not act in the same way in some cases. This bill will give us better cab service and more men will be employed, but it will undoubtedly injure a few of these people who are running these miserable cabs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY].

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I want to modify a sentence. When I said all Populists, I meant a few.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take any notice of that. I am not tender upon charges against Populism at all. I wish to talk directly to this bill, as I have but three minutes. Whether we shall pass this bill or not, it is apparent that centralization of forces is the economic law of nature. What causes our trouble is that we fail to use the full measure of our knowledge. We are going on impelled by this economic law in concentrating forces and economizing the cost of performing each kind of service. But in doing this we are turning out of employment and shutting out from access to the means of livelihood a large per cent of our people.

The purpose and intent of this bill, by those who have influenced its appearance here, is undoubtedly to give the railroad companies the lawful privilege of going into the hack business. They confess that they have not the lawful privilege to do so now. They tell us, in turn, as a consideration for this power they will give us a better and cheaper service in transporting passengers to and from the depots and different parts of the city. Granted that they may. I shall vote against this bill, because we make no provision for the various people we are turning out of this business by this centralizing policy. The gentleman from Massachusetts said that as we go on centralizing all our forces and monopolizing all business we are advancing the scale of the wages in each of those various departments of industry. Yet by this performance in the solution of human problems we necessarily throw men out of employment entirely, and these men get no wages at all.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Temporarily.

Mr. RIDGELY. And it is a long time before they find employment again, and this army of unemployed steadily grows larger. In conducting this centralization of forces we should simultaneously open up better avenues to these idle people. This is the problem before us, and we must see that no human being shall be shut out of voluntary access to the means of producing and distributing for themselves those things necessary for their existence, comfort, and highest physical and mental development.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS].

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, there is perhaps no one on this floor who will oppose monopolies or trusts more strongly than I. I want to say that our experience in New York in reference to the cab service given by the Pennsylvania and other railroads has been most admirable, and if this Congress has the power I think it ought to establish such a plan here. It seems to me that the people who are coming here from all over the country would be vastly benefited by such a system of cab service, for it would be more fair and more just to them than the present service.

If this bill is passed, it will not give a monopoly of the cab service in the city of Washington to railroad companies, but it simply gives them the privilege to have the cabs at their depots and prevents those who arrive at them from being overcharged in order to reach their destination. Gentlemen know whether they are overcharged or not. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] stated a few minutes ago, if a man who takes one of the present hacks or cabs is an athletic fellow, he is very apt to get the price of his cab service cut down, but if he is a weak fellow he has to pay what the cabman asks him, and I am in favor of dealing fairly and honestly by all. I am in favor of giving to all visitors to the capital of the nation the best and cheapest cab service in America.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to consider the controversy raised by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY] in reference to centralization. It seems to me it must be apparent that the cab system of Washington is an outrage, and if there be any means, either by competition or otherwise, by which this system can be changed, I believe we would confer a benefit on all the residents and visitors of Washington by doing it. I can only speak of the system as established in the city of New York. It is a great success, and I trust the House will act favorably upon this joint resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] made a statement that he was not poisoned by Populism. I have no doubt the gentleman from Massachusetts is very free from Populism of every kind. I am aware of the fact that no ray of pure Populism has ever yet entered the corporation-stained vision of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I never expect that such will be the case. I consider it the proudest tribute that can be paid to the People's Party that Populism is considered the rankest poison by every trust and corporation and monopoly that preys upon the honest industries of the American people.

But as regards this bill, I want to call the attention of the committee of the House to a few things. I want to ask the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill if it be not true that those who are already operating hacks in the city of Washington are licensed by law to do so; if they are not responsible parties; and being responsible parties, if you have not already the machinery to see that justice is done to the traveling public?

Now, Mr. Speaker, the provisions contained in this bill are simply these: They propose to give the corporations operating railroads into this city an absolute monopoly of certain grounds fronting the depots. None but railway corporations are permitted by its terms to place a hack for the accommodation of the general public within the grounds fronting the depots. Hence, I say, the purpose of the bill is to create a monopoly and shut out all individuals and to deny these men who have a regularly established business in the District of Columbia the right to earn an honest livelihood. It is in the interest of a gigantic trust and nothing else, and the gentleman from Massachusetts plainly stated the question when he said it would not throw more men out of employment, as the same number would still be employed, only they would be working for a corporation instead of themselves. And what would become of their horses and equipages? Such would be nearly a total loss.

But it throws them out of individual employment and places them under the dictation of a mighty corporation and makes them a part of the machinery of that corporation. The gentleman talks further about the great advantages to be derived by the people from the centralization and consolidation of the railway corporations throughout the United States. Of course the gentleman is looking forward to the time when all the railroad corporations will be under one head, and then they can control the State legislatures and the Congress of the United States to a greater extent than even now prevails, and God knows that is bad enough. But, sir, we look forward to the day when the people will own and control the railroads instead of the railway companies owning and controlling the people, as is the case under the present corporation régime.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much more time is left on this side, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Two minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, in concluding this debate I have only a few words to say. The arguments against this bill should influence every fair-minded member of this House that this is a very unfair piece of legislation. I am surprised to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts, from the Essex district [Mr. MOODY], say that the bill did not involve giving monopolistic privileges to these two corporations. It seems to me very clear that a monopoly is created by this bill.

Under the provisions of this bill, if enacted into law, the District Commissioners are authorized "to designate on the streets or parts of streets adjoining the stations of any railroad company in the District of Columbia a stand for cabs, carriages, and other vehicles for the conveyance of passengers to and from the railroad stations," and these stands can only be occupied by these two railroad corporations.

If that is not the creation of a monopoly, Mr. Speaker, then I am unable to determine what a monopoly means. I have heard a great many statements about exactions on the part of hack drivers and cab drivers in this city, and I would like to hear instances cited where overcharges have occurred in the cases of any members of this House. Arguments have been advanced here instancing the condition of affairs in New York City.

I think we are dealing with conditions in this city, and not in New York City. We are legislating for the city of Washington, and not for New York. If this act should go into effect, what is going to be the result? Every cab driver who owns a horse and cab worth $100 or $200 is deprived of the privilege of taking a stand near that depot and his opportunity for earning an honest livelihood greatly diminished.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not; I have only two minutes. Perhaps the chairman of the committee will give you time. If this bill is enacted into law, the District Commissioners, in accordance with the recommendation, will allow nobody except the railroad corporations, the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, to occupy these stands, thus adding other exclusive privileges to those already enjoyed by these great corporations.

Mr. Speaker, I have great sympathy with the men who traverse this city from one end of the day to the other, out at all hours of the night, in all kinds of weather, with their horses and carriage, trying to pick up a passenger to earn a dollar for the support of themselves and families.

I think their opportunities should be enlarged rather than restricted. I have heard a great deal about their dishonesty and trickery on the floor of this House to-day, but in all my experience I have never met with but one man who attempted extortionate charges. Should a large class of law-abiding and hard-working citizens be blamed for the sins of an occasional one of their number and their privileges and rights curtailed because a very small fraction of their number have committed a wrong?

I know how these large companies operating the cab service in my own city of Boston have ground down and crippled the opportunities of the cabmen of that city to earn an honest livelihood.

A few years ago a cabman in Boston owning his own horse and team earned a fair day's pay and could support his family in comfortable circumstances from the revenues he received from passengers coming into our railroad stations. Lately, however, these cab companies have been established, composed of men of large capital; the choice stands have been given them at the various railroad stations; their agents are allowed special points of advantage to solicit passengers; with the result that the man who has invested his all in his horse and cab can not eke out an existence for himself, let alone his family.

Against this condition of affairs I have lifted my voice in my own city and I raise it here.

It is the creation of a monopoly against the interests of a class of hard-working and deserving men, and I sincerely trust that the good sense of this House will prevail and this unjust and oppressive measure be defeated. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would an amendment be in order now?

The SPEAKER. It would not be, as the bill has been engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. CLARDY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin one question before he sits down. Does not the existing law give to these railroad companies all the privileges in reference to cab service at their depots that anybody else has?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir. The railroad companies are authorized only to fix charges for passenger service on their steam railroads.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can they not authorize cab companies if they wish to do so?

Mr. CLARDY. Can not the railroad companies furnish cabs at their depots and carry passengers as other people do under the law?

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not understand that they have any such authority under their present charters. All that this bill asks is that they have the same right and authority that you and I have.

Mr. CLARDY. Does not this bill give a special privilege as to placing cabs at a certain particular place where nobody else will be permitted to place them?

Mr. BABCOCK. It simply authorizes the Commissioners to fix at the depots of these companies the location for their cabs. This is for the benefit of the public.

Mr. CLARDY. I presume these companies are already receiving from the Commissioners the same privileges that other people enjoy.

Mr. GREENE. This bill gives the railroad company the exclusive occupancy of the whole front adjacent to its depot.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question. He stated a moment ago that he wished to give these corporations the same privileges only that are enjoyed by other persons in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman state the question that he desires to ask?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman stated, as I understood, that this bill proposes only to give to these railroad companies the same privileges that are now enjoyed by private individuals. I now wish to ask whether he is willing to vacate the proceedings already had upon this bill, so as to allow the House to amend it and give these corporations only the privileges covered by the gentleman's statement—not the exclusive privileges now given by the bill?

Mr. KELLEY. I am in favor of that.

Mr. BABCOCK. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have asked a question, but the gentleman has not answered it.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will endeavor to do so if I can have an opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple little bill—— [Laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. We know that.

Mr. BABCOCK. I have never seen anything on the floor of this House that was so misconstrued by gentlemen as this bill is. It is a wonder we have not had a Cuban speech on it. I thought we would have before we got through with it.

A MEMBER. Corporations are worse than Spain!

Mr. BABCOCK. The public has for years demanded of one particular line of road coming into this city that it establish this cab service. The company has never consented to do it until within the past year. It has been urged time and again that the capital of this great nation ought to afford visitors to this beautiful city such accommodations with respect to cab service as they have in any other city on this broad continent.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. BABCOCK. I can not yield now; I have only a moment or two more.

The result is that this bill has been brought before Congress. For what purpose? To authorize the railroad companies to supply this service, which without legislation they are unable to do. In framing the bill the committee had taken measures to insure that the rates charged shall be as low as those charged in any city of this country.

I believe this is all I wish to say. I now ask for the vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I rise to ask unanimous consent that the bill be amended by inserting after the word "stand," in line 6, these words: "not to exceed 15 feet on each street, measured from the corner."

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, Mr. Speaker, I object to that amendment at this stage.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were—ayes 88, noes 41.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 32, noes 90; one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 78, answered "present" 1, not voting 126; as follows:

WATER-MAIN TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5883) to authorize the reassessment of water-main taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in all cases not exempted by this act, where water-main taxes or assessments in the District of Columbia have been quashed, set aside, or declared void by the supreme court of said District, or have been otherwise canceled or set aside by reason of such tax or assessment not having been authenticated by the proper officer, to reassess all lots or parcels of ground in respect of such taxes or assessments, with power to assess and collect the same according to existing law relating to the assessment and collection of water-main assessments or taxes: Provided, That in cases where such assessments have heretofore been quashed or declared void by said supreme court, or have been otherwise canceled or set aside for the reason hereinbefore provided, the reassessment herein provided for shall be made within one year from the passage of this act: And provided further, That hereafter all water-main taxes or assessments in the District of Columbia shall be levied and authenticated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are hereby authorized to designate the official whose duty it shall be to notify the owner or agent of any lot or land of any water-main tax or assessment levied against such lot or land: Provided, however, That where lots or parcels of land have been released from water-main taxes or assessments by reason of technical defects or errors in making such assessments, and where such lots or parcels of land have been sold by the former owner between the order of said release of said tax or assessment and the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not reassess the same against such property in the hands of bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the failure to pay the water-main assessment on said property.

SEC. 2. That outside the city of Washington the said reassessment shall be levied or assessed only on those lots or parcels of land into which Potomac water has been or shall hereafter be introduced: Provided, That where Potomac water has heretofore been introduced the said reassessment shall be made within ninety days after the passage of this act, and that where Potomac water shall be hereafter introduced the said reassessment shall be made within thirty days after such introduction: And provided further, That any levy, assessment, or reassessment on land not subdivided into blocks and lots shall be made on a frontage not exceeding 100 feet for each lot or parcel of land or premises into which Potomac water has been or shall be introduced, and shall be considered in any subsequent subdivision of such property as having extended to a depth of not exceeding 100 feet from the front of said lot or parcel of land: And provided further, That said water-main tax or assessment or reassessment shall be due, payable, and collectible on each lot or parcel of land or premises on and after the date on which the connection is made from the water main to the said lot or parcel of land or premises.

SEC. 3. That in any assessment or reassessment made under the provisions of this act the owner of any lot or parcel of land shall be credited with any amount which may have been heretofore paid upon any water-main tax or assessment levied against such lot or parcel of land.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is this the water main assessment bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not know anything about the measure, and therefore am not in a position to criticise it. I have heard the suggestion that possibly there is a provision in the bill that would allow the owners of large bodies of land to escape assessment, while those owning less than a hundred feet front would be required to pay the taxes imposed by the bill. I simply desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the matter, because I do not know whether the criticism is well founded or not.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that that criticism can be made against the bill, but we certainly should like to consider it, if it can be shown to exist.

Mr. DOCKERY. The criticism was made by a gentleman this morning, but I did not have the opportunity to canvass the matter with him myself.

Mr. JENKINS. There is no intention on the part of the committee that the bill should have any such result.

Mr. DOCKERY. I only desire to call the attention of the committee to it, so that if the criticism is well founded the committee can amend the bill.

Mr. JENKINS. I certainly am glad that the gentleman has called our attention to it, but I do not think it is well founded. Certainly if it is we should be very glad to correct it.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the committee are satisfied I do not care to say anything further about it.

Mr. JENKINS. We have very carefully considered the bill, have had several hearings, and we think it is a just measure. If there is anything in it which is not right, we certainly can call the attention of the Senate to it, and will be in accord with the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. STEELE. Does it meet with the approval of the District Commissioners?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; it has passed both Houses twice.

Mr. JENKINS. Oh, yes; it has twice passed both Houses. I ask for a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 771) to incorporate the National Florence Crittenton Mission.

"SEC. 2. That said company may run public carriages propelled by electric power: Provided, That the electric wires used within the limits of the city of Washington shall be placed under ground and the power used shall be subject to the approval of the said Commissioners; but outside of the city limits the overhead trolley system may be used, but in such case a return wire similar in capacity, location, and insulation to the feed wire shall be provided, and if trolleys are used each car shall be provided with a double trolley. No dynamo furnishing power to the road or any portion thereof shall have either of its poles connected to the earth: Provided, That for the purpose of making a continuous connection the said company shall have the right to cross all streets, avenues, and highways necessary for this purpose: Provided, That whenever the foregoing route or routes may coincide with the route or routes of any duly incorporated street railway company in the District of Columbia the tracks shall be used by both companies, which are hereby authorized and empowered to use such tracks in common, upon such fair and equitable terms as may be agreed upon by said companies; and in the event the said companies fail to agree upon equitable terms, either of said companies may apply by petition to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which shall immediately provide for proper notice to and hearing of all parties interested, and shall have power to determine the terms and conditions upon which and the regulations under which the company hereby incorporated shall be entitled so to use and enjoy the track of such other street railway company, and the amount and manner of compensation to be paid therefor: And provided further, That neither of the companies using such tracks in common shall be permitted to make the track so used in common the depot or general stopping place to await passengers, but shall only be entitled to use the same for the ordinary passage of its cars, with the ordinary halts for taking up and dropping off passengers: Provided, That this shall not apply to or interfere with any station already established on any existing lines; that said corporation is authorized and empowered to propel its cars over the line of any other road or roads which may be in the alignment with and upon such streets as may be covered by the route or routes as prescribed in this act, in accordance with the conditions hereinbefore contained; and that this corporation shall construct and repair such portions of its road as may be upon the line or routes of any other road thus used; and in case of any disagreement with any company whose line of road is thus used, such disagreement may be determined summarily upon the application of either road to any court in said District having competent jurisdiction. Whenever more than one of the tracks of said railway shall be constructed on any of the public highways in the District, the width of space between the tracks shall not exceed 4 feet, unless otherwise ordered by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 3. That said company shall receive a rate of fare not exceeding 5 cents per passenger for any distance on its route within the District of Columbia; and the said company may make arrangements with all existing railway companies in the District of Columbia for the interchange of tickets in payment of fare on its road: Provided, That within the District limits six tickets shall be sold for 25 cents.

"SEC. 4. That said company shall, on or before the 1st of February of each year, make a report to Congress, through the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, of the names of all the stockholders therein and the amount of stock held by each, together with a detailed statement of the bonded and other indebtedness and the receipts and expenditures, from whatever source and on whatever account, for the preceding year ending December 31, and such other facts as may be required by any general law of the District of Columbia, which report shall be verified by affidavit of the president and secretary of said company; and if said report is not made at the time specified, or within ten days thereafter, such failure shall of itself operate as a forfeiture of this charter, and it shall be the duty of the Commissioners to cause to be instituted proper judicial proceedings therefor; and said company shall pay to the District of Columbia annually a franchise tax of five-eighths of 1 per cent of the entire gross earnings of such company. There shall be levied and collected, in addition to such franchise tax, upon all of the real estate of said company a tax in the same manner and to the same extent as upon all other real estate in the District of Columbia; and in addition to said taxes shall also pay an annual tax of 2 per cent on its entire gross earnings.

"SEC. 5. That the said railway shall be constructed of good materials and in a substantial and durable manner, with the rails of the most approved pattern, to be approved by the Commissioners of the said District, laid upon an even surface with the pavement of the street, and the gauge to correspond with that of other city railways. And all plans relating to the location and construction of said railway shall be subject to the approval of the Commissions of the District of Columbia, or their successors, and all work shall at all times be subject to their supervision. The said corporation shall from time to time deposit with the collector of taxes, District of Columbia, such amounts as may be deemed necessary by said Commissioners to cover cost of inspection, supervision, pavement, and repairs.

"SEC. 6. That the said corporation hereby created shall be bound to keep said tracks, and for the space of 2 feet beyond the outer rails thereof, and also the space between the tracks, at all times in as good order as the streets and highways through which it passes, subject to the approval of the said Commissioners, without expense to the United States or to the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall prevent the District of Columbia at any time, at its option, from altering the grade or otherwise improving all avenues and streets and highways occupied by said road, or from so altering and improving such streets and avenues and highways, and the sewerage thereof, as may be under its authority and control; and in such event it shall be the duty of said company to change its said railroad so as to conform to such grade as may have been thus established.

"SEC. 8. That it shall be lawful for said corporation, its successors, or assigns, to make all needful and convenient trenches and excavations in any of said streets or places where said corporation may have the right to construct and operate its road, and place in such trenches and excavations all needful and convenient devices and machinery for operating said railroad in the manner and by the means aforesaid, subject to the approval of the said Commissioners; but whenever such trenches or excavations shall interfere with any sewer, gas, or water pipes, or any subways or conduits, or any public work of the kind which has been ordered by the Commissioners, then the expense necessary to change such underground construction shall be borne by the said railway company: Provided, That wherever the railroad shall be built along any road the space between the inner rail of said railroad and the roadway shall be graded and put in good order for public use at the expense of the company, and subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 9. That it shall also be lawful for said corporation, its successors or assigns, to erect and maintain, at such convenient and suitable points along its lines as may seem most desirable to the board of directors of the said corporation, and subject to the approval of the said Commissioners, an engine house or houses, boiler house, and all other buildings necessary for the successful operation of an electric, pneumatic, or other railroad, and may buy, lease, or construct such ticket offices, workshops, depots, and lands as may be necessary at such points on its line as may be approved by the said Commissioners.

"SEC. 10. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may make such regulations as to rate of speed, mode of use of tracks, and removal of ice and snow as in their judgment the interest and convenience of the public may require. A corporation whose servants or agents willfully or negligently violate such an ordinance or regulation as aforesaid shall be liable to said Commissioners for a penalty not exceeding $500.

"SEC. 11. That the line of said railway company shall be commenced within six months and completed within two years from the passage of this act. The company shall, within sixty days after the passage of this act, deposit with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia the sum of $1,000 as a guaranty fund, and unless the said sum shall be deposited within said sixty days this charter shall become null and void; and if the work of construction upon said railway is not commenced within six months from the date of the passage of this act the money so deposited shall be forfeited and shall be deposited by the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia with the Treasurer of the United States.

"SEC. 12. That said company is hereby authorized to issue its capital stock to an amount not to exceed $250,000, in shares of $100 each. Said company shall require the subscribers to the capital stock to pay in cash to the treasurer appointed by the corporators the amounts severally subscribed by them, as follows, namely: Ten per cent at the time of subscribing, and the balance of such subscription to be paid at such times and in such amounts as the board of directors may require; and no subscription shall be deemed valid unless 10 per cent thereof shall be paid at the time of subscribing, as hereinbefore provided; and if any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay any installment as aforesaid, or as required by the resolution of the board of directors, after reasonable notice of the same, the said board of directors may sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, so many shares of his stock as shall pay said installments, and the person who offers to purchase the least number of shares for the assessment due shall be taken to be the highest bidder, and such sale shall be conducted under such general regulations as may be adopted in the by-laws of said company; but no stock shall be sold for less than the total assessments due and payable, or said corporation may sue and collect the same from any delinquent subscriber in any court of competent jurisdiction.

"SEC. 13. That within thirty days after the passage of this act the corporators named in the first section, their associates, successors, or assigns, or a majority of them, or, if any refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder, shall meet at some convenient and accessible place in the District of Columbia for the organization of said company and for receiving subscriptions to the capital stock of the company: Provided, That every subscriber shall pay at the time of subscribing 10 per cent of the amount by him subscribed to the treasurer appointed by the corporators, or his subscription shall be null and void: Provided further, That nothing shall be received in payment of the 10 per cent at the time of subscribing except lawful money or certified checks from any established national bank. And when the books of subscription to the capital stock of said company shall be closed the corporators named in the first section, their associates, successors, or assigns, or a majority of them, and in case any of them refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder, shall, within twenty days thereafter, call the first meeting of the stockholders of said company to meet within ten days thereafter for the choice of directors, of which public notice shall be given for five days in two daily newspapers published in the city of Washington, and by written personal notice to be mailed to the address of each stockholder by the clerk of the corporation; and in all meetings of the stockholders each share shall entitle the holder to one vote, to be given in person or by proxy.

"SEC. 14. That the said railway company is hereby also authorized to issue its bonds; but the capital stock and its bonds in the aggregate shall not exceed the cost of the construction and equipment of the railway line, and to secure said bonds by mortgage or deed of trust of any part or all of its property and franchises, and before any stock, bond, or trust deed shall be executed the amount thereof shall be ascertained and fixed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and for this purpose said Commissioners are hereby authorized to subpœna and examine witnesses and take such testimony as may be necessary to enable them to make such determination and fix the amount of issue: And provided further, That an appeal may be taken from the decision of said Commissioners to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and any stock or bonds issued in excess of the amount authorized by said Commissioners or said court, or in violation of the provisions of this act, shall be null and void.

"SEC. 15. That the said company shall place first-class cars on said railways, with all the modern improvements for the convenience and comfort of passengers, and shall run cars thereon as often as the public convenience may require, the time-table or schedule of time to be approved by the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Every failure to comply with the conditions of this section shall render the said corporation liable to a fine of $50, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the Commissioners of said District.

"SEC. 16. That the said company shall furnish and maintain passenger houses as required by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and all buildings intended for the use of the public shall be provided with such conveniences as the said Commissioners may direct. Every failure to comply with the conditions of this section shall render the said corporation liable to a fine of $50, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 17. That all articles of value that may be inadvertently left in any of the cars or other vehicles of said company shall be taken to its principal depot and entered in a book of record of unclaimed goods, which book shall be open to the inspection of the public at all reasonable hours of business.

"SEC. 18. That the government and direction of affairs of the company shall be vested in a board of directors, nine in number, the majority of whom shall be residents of the District of Columbia, who shall be stockholders of record, and who shall hold their office for one year, and until others are duly elected and qualified to take their places as directors; and the said directors (a majority of whom shall be a quorum) shall elect one of their number to be president of the board, who shall also be president of the company, and they shall also choose a vice-president, a secretary, and treasurer, who shall give bond with surety to said company in such sum as the said directors may require for the faithful discharge of his trust. In the case of a vacancy in the board of directors by the death, resignation, or otherwise of any director, the vacancy occasioned thereby shall be filled by the remaining directors.

"SEC. 19. That the directors shall have the power to make and prescribe such by-laws, rules, and regulations as they shall deem needful and proper touching the disposition and management of the stock, property, estate, and effects of the company, not contrary to the charter or to the laws of the United States and the ordinances of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 20. That there shall be at least an annual meeting of the stockholders for choice of directors, to be holden at such time and place, under such conditions, and upon such notice as the said company in their by-laws may prescribe; and said directors shall annually make a report in writing of their doings to the stockholders.

"SEC. 21. That the said company shall have at all times the free and uninterrupted use of its roadway; and if any person or persons shall willfully, mischievously, and unnecessarily obstruct or impede the passage of cars of said railway company with a vehicle or vehicles, or otherwise, or in any manner molest or interfere with passengers or operatives while in transit, or destroy or injure the cars of said railway, or depots, stations, or other property belonging to said railway company, the person or persons so offending shall forfeit and pay for each such offense not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars to said company, to be recovered as other fines and penalties in said District, and shall remain liable, in addition to such penalty, for any loss or damage occasioned by his or her or their act as aforesaid; but no suit shall be brought unless commenced within sixty days after such offense shall have been committed.

"SEC. 22. That the said District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company shall have the right of way across such other railways as are now in operation within the limits of the lines granted by this act, and is hereby authorized to construct its said road across such other railways in a manner to be approved by the Commissioners of the District: Provided, That it shall not interrupt the travel of such other railways in such construction: And provided further, That no crossing of any steam railway line shall be at grade.

"SEC. 23. That no person shall be prohibited the right to travel on any part of said road or ejected from the cars by the company's employees for any other cause than that of being drunk, disorderly, unclean, or contagiously diseased, or refusing to pay the legal fare exacted, or to comply with the lawful general regulations of the company.

"SEC. 24. That this act may at any time be altered, amended, or repealed by the Congress of the United States.

"SEC. 25. That in the event that the company should not be able to come to an agreement with the owner or owners of any land through which the said road may be located to pass, proceedings for the condemnation for the use of the company of so much of said land as may be required, not exceeding 100 feet in width, may be instituted in the usual way in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, under such rules and regulations as said court may prescribe for such purposes."

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is general debate closed?

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 9 and 10, page 2, all after the word "north" in the ninth line and all in the tenth line to the word "east," inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof "building line of Twelfth street and the public space around Lincoln Park;" so as to read: "Beginning with north building line of Twelfth street and the public space around Lincoln Park."

Mr. RICHARDSON. It just makes the beginning on the north side instead of the south side.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON. The committee agrees to the amendment.

Mr. OTEY. I did not know that the committee agreed to the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, before we vote on that I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. I see it is his bill and that he introduced the bill. I would like to ask whether he has provided for the rights of all the gentlemen that were in that other bill, substantially like this, some eight, ten, or twelve years ago, when the bill was enacted. I suppose, of course, some of these corporators have died. Have you carefully preserved the rights of their heirs at law, so that they are taken in this bill as corporators?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not prepared to say how that is. The bill is as it was handed to me by the persons named as corporators. I suppose they are satisfied with it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no doubt that they are satisfied with it, because they have been holding up a franchise here for the last few years.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It has been forfeited.

Mr. HEPBURN. On the 5th of July, 1892, this bill was substantially enacted into law. Now the gentleman tells us in his report:

The people resident along the line have for years petitioned Congress for a road, and the committee can see no possible objection to granting the charter.

Now, if these gentlemen had that franchise, they had a right to build this road during the last six years; and if the people for whom the gentleman is now solicitous have for years been petitioning that it should be built, I would like to ask why it has not been built, and if there is any reasonable probability, if their franchise should be extended for another eight or ten years, that it would be built?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. HEPBURN. I asked the gentleman from Tennessee. I know he is familiar with the matter, because he had something to do with the other charter.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was on the District Committee when the other bill passed. It passed, if I remember correctly, as the gentleman stated——

Mr. HEPBURN. On the 5th day of July, 1892; nearly six years ago.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman will remember that in 1893 there was a change in financial affairs, and they claim that they were not able to raise the money to build that road. If I remember correctly, it may not run exactly the same, but they reach the same objective point—that is, they reach Bladensburg, or that was the intent of the original charter. They went to work and spent some $8,000 or $10,000—I am not certain about the amount—and claimed that they could not raise any more money; and, while the charter has been on the statute books, it was forfeited and they had no rights under it; but they have had a bill pending ever since, I believe, to have their rights renewed. Now, then, this bill gives them a different line, but it reaches, as I say, the same point. It goes through the country all the way except from Lincoln Park to the boundary.

Mr. HEPBURN. Evidently the committee are not very confident that they are going to be able to raise the money now.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not sure that they are.

Mr. HEPBURN. For while they have fixed a penalty and provided that they shall make a deposit of $1,000, which they shall forfeit if they do not begin their road within six months——

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is in all the charters.

Mr. HEPBURN. And completed within two years, yet the forfeit is only $1,000, one-ninth of the sum the gentleman says they were willing to forfeit on the other case. Now, have you any objection to inserting the words "one hundred" in place of "one"?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think that would be altogether too much.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is the same as the request of other parties.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not say what was the amount of the deposit, but it is nothing like that. The rule of the Committee on the District of Columbia has been to require a deposit of $1,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. It has been very much larger than that, I remember, on different occasions.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Never since I have been a member of the committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. I know the House has inserted a much larger sum than that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Wisconsin says that in one instance it was $5,000. My recollection is that it has always been $1,000. This railway is almost entirely in the country, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I say from Lincoln Park to the boundary it is in the city, but beyond that four-fifths of it is in the country.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why does the gentleman stop at Lincoln Park? Why not cross the entire railway system of the city.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I shall not object if the gentleman wants to insert an amendment of that kind. They were modest and only proposed to go that far. I would not object to going across the street. It crosses the three lines that they propose to serve.

Mr. HEPBURN. It does not make connection with the most important one. You propose to stop it at the street line of East Capitol street, so there will be no connection with the Metropolitan road.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They came and asked to stop at the north-side line, within 20 or 30 feet of the other line. It is their request preferred to the committee. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OTEY] offers this amendment, but as a matter of fact the incorporators asked to stop there.

Mr. HEPBURN. I suppose that was to prevent the hostility of the other road.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know about that. If the gentleman wants an amendment to carry it down Twelfth street and clear down to the navy-yard, I do not object, and this company would not object; but they are willing to stop after reaching the three tracks.

Mr. HEPBURN. You would have to make it Eleventh street or Thirteenth street.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; it would have to run around the park, and then it would be on the underground line of the Metropolitan road, and that would be objectionable.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why not put it way through and connect with the Pennsylvania road?

Mr. RICHARDSON. This company would not object to it at all. All they want is to get down to the city.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman prepare an amendment and put it on Eleventh street instead of Twelfth, which would be better?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Iowa understands that Eleventh street is the first street this side of Lincoln Park. Twelfth intersects Lincoln Park near the middle, and Thirteenth would be the first street east. So far as I am concerned, I would not object to changing the line just before you reach Lincoln Park on Twelfth, to run up Thirteenth and then down Thirteenth to Pennsylvania avenue, to the navy-yard, if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. HEPBURN. All right; will the gentleman from Tennessee prepare the amendment.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 9 and 10, page 2, after the word "beginning," the words "on the north side of Lincoln Park at," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "at Pennsylvania avenue east and Thirteenth street, thence north on Thirteenth street to B street NE., thence west on B street to."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I offer the following amendment:

On page 9, line 5, strike out the word "one" and insert the word "five;" so that it will read "$5,000 as a guaranty fund."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to this amendment because, if they intend to build the road, it is not an excessive sum. Yet this is a very poor road—that is to say, it runs through a poor country; it is not in the city, but is in a part of country not so much built up as it is on the Eckington road. I shall not object to it, however.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is a charter for a street railroad?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. How many bills of this kind have been passed to-day?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Only one, and that is to reach the Methodist University, and it does not touch the town by 2 miles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON AND GETTYSBURG RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9428) to authorize the Washington and Gettysburg Railway Company of Maryland to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Washington and Gettysburg Railway Company, a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the State of Maryland, is hereby authorized to construct a city and suburban division of said railway in the District of Columbia, with single or double tracks, equip and operate the same for the carrying of passengers, parcels, milk, garden truck, and other small freight, with the necessary switches, turn-outs, buildings, and necessary mechanical devices, along the following-named route:

ROUTE.

Beginning at the boundary line of the District of Columbia at the intersection of said boundary line with Fourteenth street NE. extended, as shown on the proposed plans of street extensions; thence by double track south on said Fourteenth street for a distance of 850 feet; thence in a westerly direction to Thirteenth street NE. extended, as shown on the plans of street extensions; thence south on Thirteenth street to the north line of Bunker Hill road; thence along the north side of said road, and wholly outside the limits thereof, to Twelfth street, Brookland; thence south by single track on Twelfth and Duncan streets to Rhode Island avenue; thence in a southwesterly direction on Rhode Island avenue to Tenth street; thence north on Tenth and Wallace streets to and across Bunker Hill road to the north side thereof; thence along said road and wholly outside thereof to Twelfth street, connecting with the double tracks at that point.

COINCIDING ROUTE.

SEC. 2. That where this route coincides with an existing street railway one set of tracks shall be used in common, upon terms mutually agreed upon, or, in case of disagreement, upon terms determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which is authorized and directed to give hearing to the interested parties and to fix the terms of joint trackage. Payments for the use of the tracks shall be made monthly, in advance; default in such payments shall suspend the right of the company to use the tracks until such payment is made; that the motive power shall be cable, electric, compressed air, or other mechanical power other than steam locomotive power; and wherever the trolley system is used, a return wire, similar in capacity, situation, and insulation to the feed wire, shall be provided for the current, and each car shall be provided with a double trolley; and no dynamo furnishing power to the road, or any portion thereof, shall have either of its poles connected to the earth.

The pavement of these spaces shall be at least as good as that of the contiguous roadway. The proper authorities shall have the right to make changes of grade and other improvements which they may deem necessary; and when any highway occupied by the company is improved, the company shall bear the entire expense of improving said spaces to correspond with the remainder of the roadway. The requirements of this section shall be enforceable under the provisions of section 5 of the act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, approved June 11, 1878.

GUARANTY DEPOSIT.

SEC. 8. That within sixty days from the approval of this act the company shall deposit $1,000 with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, to guarantee the construction of its railway within the prescribed time. If this sum is not so deposited, this charter shall be void. If the sum is so deposited and the road is not in operation as herein prescribed, said $1,000 shall be forfeited to the District of Columbia and this charter shall be void.

BUILDINGS.

SEC. 15. That the company is authorized to erect and maintain the buildings necessary to the operation of its road, subject to the building regulations of the District of Columbia. The company shall erect and maintain passenger rooms and transfer stations as required by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. That said road shall annually pay a franchise tax to the tax collector of the District of Columbia of five-eighths of 1 per cent of the entire gross earnings of such company; that there shall be levied and collected in addition to such franchise tax, upon all the real estate of said company, a tax in the same manner and to the same extent as upon all other real estate of the District of Columbia; and in addition to said taxes shall pay an annual tax of 2 per cent on their entire gross earnings within the District of Columbia.

CHANGES IN GRADES.

SEC. 18. That nothing in this act shall prevent the District of Columbia at any time, at its option, from altering the grade of any avenue, street, or highway occupied by said railway or from altering and improving streets, avenues, highways, and the sewerage thereof; and said company shall change its railway construction and pavements so as to conform to such grades and improvements as may have been or may be established.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE LINES.

That said company is also authorized to construct and operate telegraph and telephone lines along its railway, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, up to the point of its connection with any duly chartered and operated street railway of the District of Columbia with which it may connect: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be construed as authorizing the erection of telegraph poles or the stringing of overhead telegraph or telephone wires south of Florida avenue.

COMMENCEMENT AND COMPLETION.

SEC. 20. That the construction of the said extension on the lines of the said railway company within the District of Columbia shall be commenced within one year of the passage of this act and be completed and cars running thereupon for passenger traffic within two years from the passage of this act, in default of which this act shall be void and of no effect in so far as the said line shall not be so completed.

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

SEC. 21. That the construction, adoption of motive power, erection of buildings, regulation of schedule and speed of running, shall be at all times under the supervision and control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

PENALTIES.

SEC. 22. That each and every violation of the requirements of this act shall be punishable by a fine of from twenty-five to one thousand dollars, in the discretion of the court, such fines to be collectible in any court of competent jurisdiction as other fines and penalties are collected in the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT; REPEAL.

SEC. 23. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MARY S. TOWNSEND.

Mr. BABCOCK I ask that House bill 9035, for the relief of Mary S. Townsend, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia for further consideration.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

LOTS 13 AND 14, SQUARE 959.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 631) to confirm title to lots 13 and 14, in square 959, in Washington, D. C., may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, and interest, whether legal or equitable, of the United States of America in and to all those lots or parcels of ground situate in the city of Washington, D. C., and known on the ground plan of city as lots Nos. 13 and 14, in square No. 959, be, and the same hereby is, released and quitclaimed to Thomas Yates, the present owner of the equitable title to said lots, and to his heirs and assigns forever.

This act shall have the effect only of a quitclaim of all the right, title, and interest of the United States therein, but shall not affect an adverse title to said land, if any, nor create any liability on the part of the United States.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

After the word "forever," in line 10, insert:

"Upon condition, however, that the said Thomas Yates pay to the proper officer of the District of Columbia all taxes heretofore assessed against said property, both general and special, now unpaid and standing against said property."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. RIDGELY. Before the final vote is taken on this bill, I should like to inquire what is the value of this property and what are the reasons for the passage of the bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], who reported the bill.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the property affected by this bill is not of any very great value. The reasons for the passage of the bill are fully stated in the report, which is a document of considerable length.

It is somewhat questionable whether the United States Government has any claim to this property. It is now claimed and held by a very poor, hard-working man, who put in all his earnings to buy it and make upon it his little home. He now understands that the Government of the United States has some claim to the property. But it is very clear that the United States never made any claim of title whatever except to the extent of a report made by General Casey in 1878, when it was listed as the property of the United States.

When this city was laid out, all the property was deeded to trustees with the understanding that one-half should go to the District for the benefit of the United States and the other half be returned to the individual owners. There is no question that the lots to which the bill refers were set apart as the property of the United States, but the title deeds and all the records of that time were destroyed when the British army invaded the city of Washington, and we have nothing to guide us in this matter excepting an inventory which was filed in 1802. in which this property was inventoried as the property of an individual. We do not think that at that time a person not claiming the property would have inventoried it as part of the estate of a dead man. There must have been some reasons for making the claim at that time. From that time until to-day the property has been assessed as the property of individuals, and the Government of the United States has never made any claim to it whatever.

Mr. RIDGELY. The committee are unanimous in favor of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS. The committee has unanimously reported in favor of the passage of the bill, as a simple matter of justice to a poor, hard-working man.

Mr. RIDGELY. The explanation is satisfactory.

The question being taken, the bill was passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF ANACOSTIA RIVER.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that Senate resolution 28, which is a duplicate of House bill 126, may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of joint resolution (S. R. 28) making an appropriation for the improvement of the Anacostia River and the reclamation of its flats.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to prepare and submit to Congress forthwith a project for the improvement of the Anacostia River and the reclamation of its flats from the line of the District of Columbia to the mouth of said river, with an estimate of the cost of the same, and a report on the area and ownership of the land to be reclaimed, and if any portion of said land is vested in private persons an estimate of the cost of acquiring the same; and the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the cost of surveys and other expenses in the premises.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does this joint resolution make any appropriation?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; an appropriation of $2,000 for the improvement of the Anacostia River and the reclamation of its flats.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has the resolution been recommended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BABCOCK. It has been recommended by almost every official of the Government as well as by a number of medical societies.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does it involve any other expenditure than the $2,000?

Mr. BABCOCK. That is all. Here is an exhaustive report.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it approved by the District Commissioners?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; and by the Secretary of the Interior.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed,

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. BABCOCK, the corresponding House bill (H. R. 126) was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is all the business which the Committee on the District of Columbia has to present to-day.

REPRINT OF THE ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HULL. I wish to ask unanimous consent that the bill for the better organization of the Army may be reprinted. I want to say that the entire supply is exhausted, and members are not able to get copies this afternoon. I ask that there be a reprint of the bill as reported by the committee, with the committee amendments in it, and also the report.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do the committee propose any amendments to the bill?

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes, a great many; and it will be reprinted with the amendments in it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that there may be a reprint of the bill and report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MONUMENT TO THE LATE ALBERT PIKE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House resolution 178, a joint resolution granting permission for the erection of a monument or statue in Washington City, D. C., in honor of the late Albert Pike.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That permission be, and is hereby, granted the Supreme Council of the Inspectors-General of the Thirty-third Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States of America to erect a monument or statue to the memory and in honor of Albert Pike, in such place in the city of Washington, D. C., other than the Capitol or Library grounds, as shall be designated by the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, the Joint Committee on the Library, and the committee of the supreme council of said rite appointed by it for that purpose. The said monument or statue shall not cost less than $10,000, and to be presented to the people of the United States by said supreme council.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask leave to print in the RECORD the report in the case, so that the other House may see the grounds upon which this resolution is passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] asks unanimous consent to print the report in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. QUIGG) is as follows:

The Committee on the Library, to which was referred the House joint resolution (H. Res. 178) granting permission for the erection of a monument or statue in the city of Washington in honor of the late Albert Pike, report the same herewith, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The resolution is based upon an action of the Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Free Masonry had at a recent meeting of that body. A resolution was passed by the supreme council to erect a monument or statue to the memory of Albert Pike. He had been grand commander of the Rite. He was a distinguished citizen of the United States, an able lawyer and statesman, an accomplished poet, and a brave soldier.

It is proposed that the monument shall cost not less than $10,000, and shall be presented by the supreme council to the United States. Five thousand dollars were contributed for this purpose by the supreme council, and steps have been taken to raise the remainder of the necessary fund.

The resolution herewith reported carries no appropriation, it being the purpose of the supreme council to defray all expenses connected with the construction and the erection of the statue.

REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN C. HOWE, DECEASED.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 435) for the relief of the legal representatives of John C. Howe, deceased.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks the attention of the House. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] moves to suspend the rules and pass a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of John C. Howe, deceased, $66,907, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being compensation in full for the use by the United States, to wit, in 66,907,313 cup-anvil cartridges, of the invention secured to John C. Howe and his assigns by letters patent of the United States issued to him August 16, 1864, and No. 43851, during the entire term of said letters patent, as appears in the findings of laws and of fact made by the United States circuit court for the district of Connecticut in the case of Forehand and others vs. Porter, reported in volume 15 of the Federal Reporter, at page 256, and as further appears in the findings of fact made by the Court of Claims, after full testimony and full hearing in Congressional case No. 1, entitled Forehand and others vs. The United States, heard on reference of the matter to said Court of Claims by the Committee on Claims of the Senate under and pursuant to the act of March 3, 1883, commonly known as the Bowman Act, said findings of fact having been certified to the Committee on Claims of the Senate by said court on the 26th day of April, 1889.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a second. The gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. WALKER, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BAILEY, will act as tellers.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will consent to allow a second to be considered as ordered. This is a very just claim. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. I can make this clear in a moment. I think I will not take over five minutes in stating the case.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no objection to having a second considered as ordered; but I want to say that that does not indicate any willingness to pass this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Now, if gentlemen will give their attention, I can make this clear in a very few moments. This claim was awarded fifteen years ago.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts in the very beginning, is this a judgment of a court?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. This is a judgment of the United States circuit court, and the case was subsequently referred to the Court of Claims and favorable judgment rendered by the Court of Claims, and it has been unanimously reported by four committees of the Senate, and has unanimously passed the Senate——

Mr. BAILEY. Was it a judgment or a mere finding of facts?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. It is a judgment of the United States circuit court.

Mr. LOUD. It is simply a finding of the Court of Claims.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. And after the judgment the bill was reported to the Senate. It is not a judgment of the Supreme Court, but of the United States district court for Connecticut.

Mr. MOODY. The circuit court.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The circuit court. Now, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that this patent was secured in 1864. The United States began to manufacture these cartridges in 1868, long after the war closed, and the goods manufactured by the United States under this patent were valued by the Court of Claims at $1,600,000. The United States sold 5,721,000 of these cartridges for about $200,000, and the money that the Government made on the cartridges it sold is more than these parties were awarded. Mr. Howe worked for Forehand & Wadsworth, of my city. I knew Mr. Howe, and I knew Forehand & Wadsworth and the families of all these parties. Out of sympathy for Mr. Howe, Forehand & Wadsworth took up the case and prosecuted it. Howe was poor and died poor, and his family are poor to-day.

Mr. BAILEY. I call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] to the bill, which describes the claim:

As appears in the findings of law and of fact made by the United States circuit court for the district of Connecticut in the case of Forehand et al. vs. Porter.

It is not the judgment of any court.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. It is not a judgment against the United States, for the United States circuit court can not render a judgment against the United States Government. You can not sue the United States Government in the courts, but it is the same judgment that is rendered by all courts in cases of this kind.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not know anything about this particular claim, but I know the bill describes it as simply based on findings of law and of fact afterwards certified to the Court of Claims, and it is merely a finding of the law and facts, and not a judgment.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Well, it is not a judgment in the sense that it can be enforced by officers of the law against the Government, but there is no question as to the equities of the case. This suit was begun in May, 1881. They got a favorable judgment in February, 1883. It was referred to the Court of Claims in 1884.

Now, this bill passed the Senate in the Fifty-third Congress, in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and in the Fifty-fifth Congress. It was reported to the House unanimously by the committees of the House in the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses. Both the Committee on War Claims and the Committee on Claims reported it unanimously, one on the Senate bill and the other on the House bill, and it is reported unanimously by the present Committee on Claims. There is no question at all as to the equity of it. These people have been for fifteen years kept out of an approved claim, so that ordinary interest at 6 per cent compounded, computed for this period, would amount to more than this claim.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman says this is unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims. I see there a report from the Committee on Patents. I wondered how that committee ever got hold of it.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. It was reported by the Committee on Patents in the Senate, and was reported by our Committee on Claims. In the Senate it has been referred to the Committee on Patents, and here to the Committee on Claims. The equities are all with the claimant. No more just claim has ever been presented to the Government. If these parties had had the exclusive right to continue to manufacture this cap anvil cartridge under the patent in their own factory, they would have made very much more, many times more, than the amount of this claim, but the Government took this property away from these parties and manufactured the cartridge for the Government. The justice of this claim has been awarded by all persons to whom it has been submitted, unanimously and without hesitation.

I should be very glad to answer any question concerning it. Very nearly half of the sum allowed has been expended in prosecuting this claim. The parties are out that much. Now let me read you an extract from a letter.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How much is the sum awarded?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Sixty-six thousand nine hundred and some odd dollars. Here is a letter from the man who furnished much of the money to prosecute this case:

I have a letter this morning from Perry, who is the principal party in interest next to Howe's daughter, and who has spent over $10,000 on the case out of his own pocket. He says, "Sickness and misfortune have ruined me to the last dollar, and you can hardly imagine the anxious feeling I have about this claim, which is my last hope for the old age of myself and my wife." Howe's daughter, as I think you already know, has never been able to pay her father's funeral expenses.

This was sent to me in 1896. These parties are absolutely poor, and are being robbed by this Government.

This House knows how parties having claims against the Government expend their time and their fortunes in prosecuting a claim, while if they had given it up originally they might have made themselves comfortable, and I do beseech the House to do justice to these parties at this late day.

Mr. BAILEY. I thought the gentleman was through.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I am through. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BAILEY. I know absolutely nothing about the claim, which goes very strongly to illustrate the injustice, either to the House or to the claimant, of trying to pass such a claim under a suspension of the rules. It is possible that with the proper information before the House it would be willing to pass the claim; but it is scarcely possible to furnish the House with full information on a claim of this extent and character within the limits of debate allowed on a motion of this kind. It strikes me that this bill, or this claim, ought to take the course of all similar claims. It strikes me as not very good legislative practice to separate this claim from all others of its kind and pass it, while the others are left to die at the end of the session upon the Calendar of the House. I know that the gentleman from Massachusetts has usually been very fair about paying just claims against the Government, no matter to whom they may be due; and I myself feel great hesitation in saying anything against any just claim against the Government.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BAILEY. I will.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Are you willing to have this claim go over and take first place on the Calendar on the first Friday that claims are taken up?

Mr. BAILEY. Personally, I have no objection; but of course that would interfere with other claims. To take this claim out of its regular place must displace other claims, probably as meritorious as it.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Let me say to the gentleman, if he will allow me, I have been trying for three years to get this claim up. I introduced this the very first bill introduced this Congress, but by an accident, of which I have no knowledge, it gets its low place on the Calendar, when it should have had the first place.

Mr. BAILEY. What is its number on the Calendar?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Four hundred and five; and it never will be reached in the world. The gentleman knows how difficult it will be to reach it.

Mr. BAILEY. I know also that much of the time on Fridays has been wasted by the gentleman's friends on that side.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Suppose you suggest that the House give unanimous consent that it take its place as first on the Calendar on the first claim day?

Mr. BAILEY. I would not make that request myself; neither would I object if the gentleman from Massachusetts makes it; but I want to say——

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I hope you will let us vote upon it.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to say I believe there ought to be some way for the House to pass on all these claims. It does look like an outrage upon the honest citizen who has an honest claim against the Government that he shall be denied the opportunity of a hearing in the House. It seems to me almost equally an outrage upon the Committee on Claims that honest claims are introduced every year, referred to them, considered by them, reports made to the House, and yet the House never gives its attention to those claims. With all that I have no patience. I believe that every man with a claim against the Government ought to have his day in court; if not in court, he ought to have it in this House; and I believe that the Congress ought to provide for the payment of every honest claim against the Government. But gentlemen upon both sides of the Chamber know that the difficulty in trying to do justice to the honest claimant is that a great many fictitious and dishonest claims would in this way be allowed.

Mr. MOODY. If I can have the attention of the gentleman from Texas for a few moments, I think I can show to him that this case stands upon very peculiar grounds. I have examined it somewhat myself, and I know the gentleman from Texas has not had the opportunity——

Mr. BAILEY. I have not had, I say frankly to the gentleman.

Mr. MOODY. But if he would examine the report and do me the honor of following me in the statement I make in this case I believe he would agree that this case ought to be taken out of the general rule.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I do not know how much time I would want.

Mr. MOODY. I supposed the gentleman from Texas had finished and reserved the balance of his time, and that I was speaking in the time of this side.

Mr. BAILEY. That would suit me. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOODY. If I can be recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MOODY. This claimant invented a peculiar cartridge which the United States Government took under what might be called the power of eminent domain, and manufactured a great number of the cartridges for its own use, and manufactured a great number of cartridges and sold them for a profit.

Mr. BAILEY. Is there any question about that?

Mr. MOODY. I will show that there is no question about that. Now, this bill does not seek to hold the United States responsible for the cartridges used; but the Government sold $199,000 worth of these cartridges, and the money that this bill seeks to recover is simply the profit that the Government made on the cartridges sold. The gentleman from Texas suggests, how is that proved? A suit was brought in the circuit court of the United States in the district of Connecticut, and the district attorney of the United States appeared and opposed that suit. The report shows that the trial was before Judge Shipman, a very eminent and upright judge indeed.

It was not a mere mock trial; there was resistance; there was the taking of testimony which was very voluminous, and the case was argued orally and subsequently argued before Judge Shipman on written briefs, and he found that the United States had infringed the patent, and in equity and good conscience they owed reparation to the claimant. Of course, as the gentleman from Texas knows, no judgment could be entered in that suit. Accordingly the matter was referred to the Court of Claims, and the whole matter was gone over again, and the finding of the circuit court was reaffirmed by that court, and they have found that the amount justly due to this claimant as profits on the number of cartridges that the United States sold was $66,000. Now, the gentleman from Texas will agree with me that this is not a case of an ordinary unliquidated claim against the Government.

Mr. BAILEY. Upon the assurance of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] that there is no dispute about these facts, I am willing to withdraw all objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in favor thereof, accordingly the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent that I may print in the RECORD an extension of my remarks upon amending the United States statutes this morning.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 2677. An act for the relief of the University of Kansas;

S. 4190. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a permit to the American Invalid Aid Society, of Boston, Mass., to occupy and use 160 acres of land, being part of the abandoned Fort Stanton Military Reservation, in New Mexico, for the purpose of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5489. An act extending the right of commutation to certain homestead settlers on lands in Oklahoma Territory opened to settlement under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to ratify and confirm the agreement with the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect."

MELLERT FOUNDRY AND MACHINE COMPANY.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4166) to reimburse the Mellert Foundry and Machine Company for money retained by the United States for failure to complete a contract within a specified time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $2,622 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of reimbursing the Mellert Foundry and Machine Company, Limited, of Reading, Pa., for money retained as a penalty by the United States by reason of a failure to complete a contract within a specified time.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to further amend the bill by adding the following, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by adding at the end of section 1, line 10, the words "the actual injury to the United States having been compensated."

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the right to object.

The Clerk read the report of the committee (by Mr. STURTEVANT), as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4166) to reimburse the Mellert Foundry and Machine Company, having had the same under due consideration, beg leave to report as follows:

This is a bill to reimburse the Mellert Foundry and Machine Company for money retained by the United States for failure to complete a contract for delivery of iron pipes and special castings for the use of the city of Washington within the specified time.

From the contract price was deducted $2,622, representing 2,622 days, under the forfeiture clause requiring a reduction of $1 per day for each piece of casting. Of this the Government calculated 391 Sundays and 638 days on account of the transportation of material while in transitu.

It appears, also, by satisfactory evidence that the delay was not caused by willful negligence, but by strikes and illness, against which the said company could not possibly guard by any exercise of human foresight. The reason why the penalty or time clause was inserted in the contract is fully stated in the report on this subject by Lieut. Col. George H. Elliott, engineer in charge, to Brig. Gen. Thomas L. Casey, Chief of Engineers, and is as follows:

"The object of the penalty provided for in the contract was to insure the delivery of the pipe and special castings so that they could be laid before the stormy weather of the late fall and winter, the reason for this being that the work of laying the pipe in the earth in those seasons would be more expensive, and add to the cost of the work to the United States. The weather of the fall of 1890 and the winter of 1890 and 1891 proved, however, exceptionally favorable, and it can not be stated that the failure of the contractors to deliver the material on time caused any loss to the United States except as follows:

"First. The inspector whom I sent to the foundry of the contractors at Reading, Pa., to apply the tests provided for in the contract, and to inspect the daily output of the pipe and special castings, was detained at the foundry one month and seven days beyond the time he would have been employed and paid by the United States had the terms of the contract as to time of completion been complied with. The pay of the inspector was at the rate of $125 per month, and the loss to the United States on account of this detention was $154.16.

"Second. The master calker or foreman whom I had engaged to superintend the laying of the mains was idle and under pay eight days after the time of delivery stipulated, waiting for the special castings to arrive. His pay was at the rate of $150 per month, and the loss to the United States on this account was $40.

"The sum of these two items is $194.16."

There is no pretense that goods of the quality and kind contracted for were not received and used by the Government, and the only injury done the Government amounted to $194.16.

Your committee think that neither justice nor good policy requires the enforcement of the penalty, and recommend that the bill be amended by striking out, in line 2 thereof, the words "two thousand six hundred and twenty-two" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two thousand four hundred and twenty-seven and eighty-four one-hundredths," being $194.16 less, and that the bill so amended be passed.

Mr. DINGLEY. This was a District matter, was it not?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. It was.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there any communication from the District Commissioners?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Brig. Gen. Thomas L. Casey, Chief of Engineers, had charge of the work, and the statements contained in the report of the committee are taken from his communication on the subject. I have the document here, if the gentleman from Maine would like to look at it. His statement is that the only loss to the Government was $194.16, which has been deducted from the amount claimed.

Mr. LOUD. Where did the money go that the District got?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I do not know.

Mr. LOUD. The District of Columbia may have had one-half of the money. I do not know what the custom is in such cases.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I do not know what the custom is; I only know that the contract was made with the Government and this is the only way that money can be paid. I presume any balance of the appropriation for this purpose was covered into the United States Treasury as usual.

Mr. LOUD. Is it not a question whether the District of Columbia should pay one-half of this?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I am unable to answer the gentleman from California.

Mr. LOUD. I think that is a question that ought to be considered by the committee.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. The contract was made in 1890, and I do not understand that there is any other place for us to apply except to Congress for an appropriation out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. DOCKERY. What was the nature of the contract?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. There was a time penalty in the contract. The pipe was to be delivered at a certain date. The contract was so made because the pipe could be laid only in favorable weather. It appears, however, that the weather was entirely favorable, and the Government lost nothing on that account. They were put to no expense except to keep an inspector and some kind of superintendent a very short time.

Mr. DOCKERY. What was the nature of the work?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. It was furnishing water pipes for the District.

Mr. DOCKERY. That being the case, there should be an amendment providing that one-half of the sum shall be paid out of the District of Columbia funds.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Well, I will accept the amendment.

Mr. STEELE. It is questionable whether or not the whole should not come out of the District of Columbia. I think that was what is called a penalty bond, to be forfeited if the pipe was not delivered at a certain time, and as a matter of fact the money forfeited went into the treasury of the District of Columbia.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no separate treasury for the District of Columbia.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman misunderstands me. If this work was done for the District of Columbia, then it ought to be paid for; but the money should be paid jointly by the United States and the District.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the money went into the Treasury, it seems to me it would not be credited one-half to the District and one-half to the Government of the United States, but all would go into the Treasury and be subject alone to the auditing officers of the United States, not the District officers.

Mr. DINGLEY. As I understand, the benefit of this work went one-half to the Government and the other half to the District, and therefore the language of the amendment is appropriate.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. In lieu of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri I will offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the first amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENTROUT].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the second amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following: "Said sum shall be debited by the Treasurer to the proper account."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ERMENTROUT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIEUT. ROBERT PLATT.

Mr. FISCHER moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1126) authorizing the President to appoint Lieut. Robert Platt, United States Navy, to the rank of commander.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STEELE. I object.

Mr. FISCHER. This is not a request for unanimous consent, but a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CLARDY. I want to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a few remarks which I intended to make, but had not the opportunity. They will not occupy more space than a speech of five minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. On what subject?

Mr. CLARDY. On the Cuban question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] moves to adjourn. Pending the motion to adjourn, the Chair can not entertain the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLARDY].

The motion to adjourn was agreed to.

Prior to the announcement of the vote the following business was transacted:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STROWD of North Carolina, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SHUFORD, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FOWLER of North Carolina, for three days, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On request of Mr. DOCKERY, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that the papers in the matter of the claim of B. F. Lutman, filed in the Forty-seventh Congress, be withdrawn from the files of the House of Representatives, there being no adverse report thereon, and the same be delivered to Senator COCKRELL for B. F. Lutman.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. CAFFERY. I present a telegram from representatives of the commercial bodies of the city of New Orleans indorsing the wise and patriotic course pursued by the Administration in its efforts to maintain peace with honor. I ask that the telegram be read, so that it may appear in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The telegram will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that one of the stereotyped telegrams that are being sent in here from all over the country by order and command of some one in New York or some other place?

Mr. CAFFERY. It is a telegram from the commercial bodies of New Orleans. If it were stereotyped all over the United States, I should be very glad.

Mr. COCKRELL. I presume that it is in exactly the same language of those that are coming in. I have one here from Wallace Love, chairman of the Republican city committee of Kansas City.

Mr. CAFFERY. Let it be read first and see whether it is stereotyped.

Mr. COCKRELL. And I have some others. I suppose they are all of about the same kind.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read the telegram.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 4, 1898.

To Hon. DON. CAFFERY,
Washington, D. C.:

At a meeting of the representatives of the commercial bodies of this city this day held the following was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas it is the part of true patriotism to exhaust all honorable means to avert the horror of war, and only to yield when something more dreadful than war is the alternative; and

"Whereas in the crisis now confronting the American people all party differences should be obligated and the nation stand united as one man.

"Be it resolved, That we cordially indorse the wise and patriotic course pursued by the Administration at Washington in the effort to maintain 'peace with honor' in the present controversy with the Spanish Government over the situation in Cuba."

D. M. KILPATRICK, Chairman.
D. D. COLCOCK, Secretary.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. With reference to the reading of the telegram which has just been presented, I will state that I made no objection, but the rules of the Senate provide that petitions are not to be inserted in the RECORD. It has become a custom when a telegram is sent to a Senator to regard it as quite proper that the Senator should present it and have it inserted in the RECORD. I do not see why a telegram should be treated any differently from a petition, and I think the rule ought to be enforced. Without reference to the contents of telegrams, for I sympathize with the sentiment expressed in the telegram which has been read, I think the rule ought to be enforced. If we are not going to put petitions in the RECORD, we ought to stop putting telegrams in the RECORD.

POLICY CONCERNING CUBA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution coming over from yesterday, No. 331, offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. TURNER, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body be directed to report at the earliest practicable moment, and without waiting for the concurrence or advice of any department of the Government, what action, if any, in view of the loss of the battle ship Maine and the destruction of the lives of 266 American sailors, and in view of the well-known deplorable condition of affairs in the island of Cuba, is required from the Congress of the United States to sustain and vindicate the honor and dignity of this nation, and to meet and answer the obligations of humanity imposed on this Government as the result of the condition of affairs in said island, and that said committee report by bill, resolution, or otherwise, as it may deem most expedient.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, the fateful question of peace or war in its last analysis belongs to the Congress of the United States under our constitutional system. Believing that a solution of the difficulties of this country with the Government of Spain will involve necessarily the question of peace or war, I have no apology to make for the tenor of the resolution which I have had the honor to introduce in this body.

I have the very highest respect for the office of President of our Republic, and I have always endeavored to cultivate a proper respect for the occupant of that high office, whoever he might be; but I have never been one to—

> Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee
> Where thrift may follow fawning.

I shall now, as I have always been disposed to do, measure the President as I would measure any other man, and hold him to the same degree of accountability. I am prepared to follow him and sustain him within the lines of his constitutional duty, whether I believe him to be weak or whether I believe him to be strong, because my oath of office and my loyalty as a citizen compel me to do so.

But the President has no right to stand up and withstand the conscience of this nation and the representatives of the people of this nation in Congress assembled, and he has no right to lead where it is his duty to follow, nor is it his province to endeavor to place trammels upon any department of the Government which is charged with responsibility in this grave crisis in the affairs of our nation.

It seems to me—and that is the reason why I offered the resolution—that the time has come when there ought to be some expression of the sense of Congress upon this subject, because this nation and this people have been made a spectacle for gods and men, not only in the eyes of the American people, but in the eyes of the entire world. With a diplomatic representative at Madrid complicating the position of this country and defeating even his own efforts by the most frantic asservation of a purpose to secure peace at any price; with a private secretary, the alter ego of the President, circulating appeals throughout the country for petitions and memorials to control an unruly and unpatriotic Congress; with the Executive himself departing from the regular and orderly method of communicating with Congress in favor of private and personal appeals to Senators and Members to forego action until some indefinite time when the Executive may be expected to take some indefinite action; with such glimpses of Executive action as are afforded to us by the stray and fugitive telegrams from Madrid and other capitals in Europe; with the example that we have seen of the manner in which the destruction of our battle ship and the murder of our sailors has been treated by the Executive; with still other frantic appeals for delay; with the Congress of the United States still uninformed and uncertain as to what is to be the result of delay, if these appeals be listened to, it is not surprising to my mind that the American people have become impatient of this intolerable situation and demand of their representatives in Congress action which they alone are capable of taking, and which will grandly vindicate the outraged honor and dignity of this nation.

Mr. President, the battle ship Maine has sunk beneath the mud of Havana Harbor, entombing therein in her shattered form the last of our slaughtered sailors, and we are still waiting for that friendly action which we have been led to believe a sense of justice would dictate to the Spanish nation. The starved and pinched faces of women and children still look to us appealingly across the neighboring waters, melting the stoutest hearts and moving the weakest hearts to vengeance; and every day will cost the lives of a thousand innocent persons as the result of Spanish cruelty. And still the Congress of the United States is asked to withhold action as a matter of deference and courtesy to the Executive of the country. Mr. President, I say that the position has become intolerable to the American people, and that the American people expect Congress to take speedy action upon this subject, without reference to the wishes of any department of the Government.

Mr. President, I do not think that I have placed this matter too strongly. I wish to go for a few moments into a discussion of the situation in order to see whether I have or not. It is impossible for any man of common sense who is not prejudiced in the matter to examine the evidence taken before the naval court of inquiry at Havana without coming to the conclusion that the battle ship Maine was destroyed and the lives of our sailors sacrificed as the result of the perfidy and treachery of the trusted officials of the Spanish nation, whose action that nation can not disavow. Those officials planted a powerful submarine mine in the harbor of Havana, and when our battle ship appeared in that harbor they anchored her over that mine, and then, in due course of events, the mine was exploded, tearing and rending our ill-fated vessel until it was nothing but a splintered mass of iron and steel and hurling into eternity in one awful moment the souls of 266 brave American sailors.

It seems probable, and I believe it is possible to show from the testimony in this case, that the same officials who planted the mine and anchored the ship also exploded the mine. But whether that be so or not, the act of the officials of Spain which preceded the last final act was cowardly and treacherous and perfidious in the extreme, and constituted warfare against the United States. When those officials anchored the Maine over a submarine mine, intending thereby to encompass her destruction should occasion seem to require, then on the principle of respondent superior, which has a larger application even in international law than it has in municipal law, that nation became responsible for all the consequences which might flow from that lawless act. She could not escape responsibility if she would for that act, nor does she try. She takes refuge in a bald and palpably false denial of the incriminating act.

But I presume that every Senator has read the testimony laid before the Senate and taken before the court of inquiry, and I say that it is impossible to reach any other conclusion than that the mine was planted by the authorities of Spain, that the battle ship was anchored over it by the authorities of Spain, and then that the mine was opportunely exploded.

Mr. President, what more is necessary? Is it necessary that we should pursue the footsteps of the cowardly and stealthy murderer and expose his skulking form to the light of day in order to fix responsibility? When, I may ask, in the history of crime has the murderer ever blazoned his footsteps and came to the bar of justice with other than a lie on his lips?

Mr. President, I care not whether the hand that exploded the mine was that of a duly accredited and authorized agent of the Government of Spain or whether it was that of a maddened and lawless fanatic. The hand that planted the mine was the hand of Spain. The hand that anchored the battle ship was the hand of Spain. The hand that intended to explode that mine in some well-understood contingency was the hand of Spain, and it is immaterial whose was the hand that sent the electric spark on its fateful mission of death and destruction.

Mr. President, I say that the act which preceded the last crowning act in this barbarous tragedy was warfare against the United States, concealed, treacherous, perfidious, but none the less and all the more for that reason gross, cruel, wanton warfare against the United States. A course of conduct by one nation toward another which is incompatible with the idea of peace is war. If you visit your neighbor's house on a friendly errand and he presents a loaded revolver at your person and maintains it in that position during all the time you are there, that is not peace, but it is war. If when the Maine entered the harbor of Havana and anchored beside the Alphonso XII the latter vessel had double shotted her guns and pointed them at the Maine with the declaration that she would blow the latter out of the water at the first sign of defensive preparation, that undoubtedly would not have been peace, but it would have been war. If one or more of those guns had exploded from some inexplicable cause, sinking the Maine and destroying the lives of our sailors, that none the less and all the more would have been an act of warfare.

Mr. President, Spain has done all this and more. She pointed the pistol at us. It was loaded and cocked and her finger was on the trigger. But she pointed it at our back. She brought her double shotted guns to bear upon our devoted war vessel, but with characteristic cruelty and treachery she masked her guns in order that our sailors might proceed in fancied security and at the last awful moment find themselves naked and helpless against her treacherous ferocity.

Mr. President, this is the most lenient and charitable view which the facts of this case permit the American people to take of the conduct of Spain in this lamentable tragedy. But I say again that it was war, and that a proper sense of respect in the people of the United States and a proper sense of obligation to succor, preserve, and protect the people of the United States, has required for a long time prompt and effective offensive operations to resent and repel this act of war upon the part of Spain.

But it is impossible for us without shutting our eyes to palpable facts to take even this charitable and lenient view of the conduct of Spain. It would be pleasing to do so, because to suppose that any Christian people false to honor and dead to humanity could deliberately perpetrate so foul a deed as the destruction of our battle ship would be to impeach the Christian civilization of the world. But if it be conceded, as it now must be conceded, that the Maine was destroyed by a mine planted at the hands of Spain, then no other conclusion is rationally possible.

Under any system of jurisprudence known to the world false, self-serving declarations are accepted as evidence of guilt, and, when found in connection with other cogent evidences, are accepted as sufficient evidence to justify a conviction of guilt. Spain has made such declarations in this case. She has not only attempted to shift responsibility from her shoulders by a false and insulting claim that our battle ship was destroyed as the result of the negligence and want of discipline prevailing in the American Navy, but she has falsely denied the material facts now known to all the world, that she herself had planted submarine mines in the harbor of Havana.

Mr. President, is that denial consistent with innocence? Is that affirmation consistent with any conclusion, in view of the other known and cogent evidences in this case, other than that Spain, through her trusted officials, whose act she is now unable and unwilling to disavow, was deliberately guilty of destroying our battle ship when that ship was in the harbor of Havana on a friendly mission?

Here we have the preparation for the crime, the ability to commit the crime, the improbability that the crime could be committed by another, the motive for the crime in the fear and hatred of the Spaniards, and lastly we have the suppression and denial of material facts, evidencing the consciousness of guilt. No other conclusion than that of guilt on the part of Spain can be drawn from these facts.

Mr. President, this incident illustrates the value of good character, which is so highly regarded in the criminal jurisprudence of this country and Great Britain. It would be impossible to make such a charge against any other Christian or civilized nation except Spain with any probability of its truthfulness, because their character would forbid such a charge. On the other hand, the character of Spain and the Spaniards invites it. From the time of Alva—yes, Mr. President, from a time long anterior to that of Alva—down to the time of the infamous Weyler the record of Spain has been one of treachery and perfidy, of cruelty and barbarity, of rapine and murder and assassination.

One has but to read the narrative of Las Casas, describing the cruelties practiced by the soldiers of that infamous nation upon the peaceful aboriginal natives of the Island of Cuba, to see what the Spaniard was four hundred years ago. One has but to read the narrative coming from that island in the present day of similar and worse atrocities and cruelties practiced upon the poor, helpless people of that island, now vouched for in such a manner as to command the absolute and implicit confidence of the Congress of the United States, to see that the Spaniard of 1500 and the Spaniard of 1900 are one and the same individual, identical in every respect. And it remained for this day, in the closing year of the nineteenth century, for that infamous and cowardly people to demonstrate to the world that the humanizing influences of Christian civilization have passed them by and left them now what they have always been—false, deceitful, perfidious, and treacherous; cruel, brutal, ferocious, and inhuman.

Mr. President, the character of this people convicts them, and that character, no less than the other known facts in this case, shows them to be guilty of that which we charge them with in this controversy. Such, in my judgment, will be the verdict of the civilized world when all the facts become known to the civilized world.

Now, Mr. President, in this emergency it has taken us thirty days to fix the responsibility for the blood of our slaughtered citizens, when it ought to have been fixed in ten, and for the last twenty days the Administration of the affairs of this country have been sedulously inculcating in the minds of the world the proposition that the way to cultivate friendly relations with this country is to tear and rend and murder and destroy the lives of American citizens.

My God, Mr. President, if the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States want a reason which will result in giving surcease to struggling Cuba from her misery, if they want a reason to drive the last minion and myrmidon of Spain off that devoted island, if they want a reason to help that beautiful island now, after four hundred years of living hell, struggling for the right to govern herself and to secure to herself a fair measure of happiness and prosperity through self-government to such government, what better cause could be shown to the world than the fact that our citizens have been brutally and treacherously murdered by that nation in her own harbor under circumstances of atrocity and cruelty and perfidy and treachery that are unparalleled in the history of the world?

For that reason, Mr. President, I say that the Congress of the United States ought to act, and it ought to act at once. I shall cheerfully vote if given the opportunity for a declaration of war against the Government of Spain because of this act of war committed upon her part. But I shall vote for anything which will give us an opportunity to drive that infamous nation from this hemisphere and to cleanse and purify the pure air of this continent from the lustful smell of Spanish blood—this continent devoted to liberty and humanity. And I pray that the moment may come soon when, without waiting for the action of anybody, I may have that opportunity as a Senator of the United States. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I have but a few words to say. It is not a time for many words. Those things which were a few months ago deemed the wild imaginings of sensational journalists have been brought home to this Chamber by some of its ablest members straight from the field of enactment—brought in such a fashion that the hideous reality has chilled our blood and made all previous stories seem flat and tame. The evidence has been so overwhelming of cold-blooded cruelty and murder so foul and vast that all denial has been hushed, and even the false and inhuman Government that is responsible is now talking of relief and restoration to the miserable remnant of humanity that is about to die; not hundreds, not thousands, but hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children, tortured, butchered, and starved to death at our very threshold, and still we have sniveling, canting hypocrites, who send advice to this Senate to hold back and let the foul work go on; still we have cold-blooded monsters who argue that it is none of our affair and that intervention will be trespassing upon the rights (God save the mark) of a friendly power.

Mr. President, when Cain, with bloody hands, insolently answered his God, "Am I my brother's keeper?" he formulated the doctrine of nonintervention; nor have his followers advanced or improved it. These horrors are not new or sudden spasms of ferocity; for four hundred years the flag of Spain has covered no other policy. From the time her steel-clad soldiers appeared among the naked nations of this New World they have been butchers and robbers. Half the world was theirs; but humanity could not endure the galling yoke, and heedless of death, seeking it gladly as a welcome release, her tortured subjects have risen and overthrown the oppressors.

In the beautiful Island of Cuba for a generation there has been no peace. Revolt after revolt has occurred, stamped out with unspeakable cruelty at times, and at times, force failing, cajoled and lulled by false promises. Now, after years of struggle, lacking courage and skill to conquer, the Spaniard has planned and carried on the destruction by starvation of a whole race. If blood and tears and death are the price of liberty, the Cubans have earned it, and more dearly than any nation of earth.

But, Mr. President, it might seem possible to some men that this hell might be ignored, might be passed by on the other side, though in our very path, and we might, like Bismarck, declare that the lives of the whole Balkan race were not worth the bones of a single American sailor; but there came to us "la noche triste," of February 15, 1898, not saddened because of the loss of a few mailed robbers set upon by naked savages, and, tired out by butchery, falling victims to an outraged people, but because a gallant ship and a gallant crew went down to death by treachery—official treachery, at which the whole world revolts. Our "noche triste" came upon us, forever to be the night most sorrowful and black, most crammed with horror in all our years, in all the years which time shall give us. Sir, since that night, when the foul water of Havana closed over the Maine and her crew, the heart of the nation has been beating a funeral march, muffled and low, while waiting the verdict, and it seemed an age.

No race on earth ever exhibited such stern, sad self-control; but, oh, men in high places here, and beyond the seas, do not delude and shame yourselves with the thought that this, the blackest crime of all the ages, will be a mere "incident;" that this, the foulest insult that the world has blushed for, will be arbitrated; that this hideous specter will ever be laid by the diplomatic wiles of a nation that forever lets "the false face hide what the false heart doth know;" and to-day, Mr. President, all over this land there is the cry "Why do you wait?" and the flag snarls and flouts the wind, impatient.

Oh, God, it can not be that we forget! that we forget!

Sir, I have seen war. If to die were to reach the summit of human calamity, if to weep and mourn for the loved and lost were to make up the sum of human woe, then nothing would be worse than war. But, sir, there is a crucifixion of the soul when honor dies; there is a death of a nation "when the jingle of the guinea heals the hurt that honor feels;" there is an existence, when patriotic pride is dead, "that doth murder sleep" and life becomes a horrid nightmare, and men shun their fellows, and the laugh of little children becomes a taunt and a mockery. True, there have been men who could exist and thrive and fatten without national honor or pride or patriotism, like worms in a muck heap, but that nation has been the scorned of all time and has quickly died. God forbid that any such should ever be called Americans.

Sir, I shall never consent that our dead shall lie in Spanish soil and under the Spanish flag. Brave American sailors can know no rest there. When it becomes consecrated by freedom, when that flag has trailed in the dust, when the Cuban Republic is raised as a monument to the men who went down in the Maine, then, and then only, will they sleep.

Do you say this is revenge, and that revenge is unworthy of a great nation? No, Mr. President, a righteous wrath and just resentment, the swift punishment of the assassin and the wrongdoer, are wholly different from revenge, and are the safeguards and protection of a nation among nations, and enable us to look the whole world in the face. What sight more glorious than a nation roused in such a cause as this!

God hates a coward, and a nation timid, halting, and hesitating in its foreign policy is a sight despised of God and man. A just war promotes and preserves all that is highest and best in national life.

Christ bought the keys of Paradise
By cruel bleeding.

[Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair gives notice to the occupants of the galleries that expressions of approbation and disapprobation of what is said on the floor of the Senate are in violation of the rules and precedents of the Senate; and, if repeated, the Chair will feel compelled to have the galleries cleared.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. President, I feel that little can be said that will be new or original on the Cuban situation. The field of argument and oratory has indeed been well covered by the distinguishedSenators who have already spoken on this most important question; and were it not from a sense of duty that I feel I owe to those who I have the honor in part to represent on this floor, I should not trespass upon the time of the Senate.

Mr. President, there is not in all this land a constituency more united in favor of Cuba's independency than mine. The people of no State have more earnestly espoused the cause of suffering Cuba than those of Delaware, and were I to fail to voice their sentiments in this regard and for them to speak to all the world, I would fail in my clear duty to those I represent.

Many times during the last half century have the people of Cuba risen in rebellion and by force of arms endeavored to free themselves from the bondage of Spanish misrule, and, although often defeated, have never lost heart. Revolt has followed revolt, and repeated failures have been the results thereof, but the spirit of freedom was planted deep in the hearts of the people, and, watered by the patriot blood of thousands slain, grew until to-day it attracts the attention of all the world.

The struggles of the people of Cuba for freedom are known to all students of history, and need no recital from me. Seldom, if ever, in the history of the world, has there been such an example of unselfish suffering for liberty's sake as by the people of that unhappy island; and if ever there was a people who deserved the aid and sympathy of the civilized world, they are the people of Cuba.

On May 20, 1897, Mr. President, the Senate passed by a vote of 41 to 14 the following joint resolution:

A joint resolution declaring that a condition of public war exists in Cuba, and that strict neutrality shall be maintained.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba, and that the United States of America shall maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

The joint resolution went to the House of Representatives and was, for reasons satisfactory to that body and the Administration, suffered to sleep the sleep that knows no waking. Had that resolution been considered by the other House of Congress and concurred in, and the Administration, acting in obedience thereto, recognized the belligerence of the Cuban insurgents, to-day Cuba would be free and independent, and so without the help of any nation of the earth—thousands of the now dead would be living, untold suffering and misery would have been averted, and millions of treasure saved. Yes, Mr. President, had belligerent rights been granted to the Cubans, they would have worked out their own salvation, and the United States would not have been compelled to adopt measures contrary to its traditions and to have spent millions of the people's money. The responsibility for this will be, is fixed by the unerring judgment of the American people.

Mr. President, who is it that refuses to the people of Cuba freedom? The Spanish Crown. That nation, through whose instrumentality (by Christopher Columbus in 1492) the islands of the West Indies were discovered, and who, taking advantage of the credulity of the innocent and peaceful aborigines they found there, first enslaved, then debauched, and then persecuted and murdered until for more than two centuries they have been extinct; that nation that for more than four centuries has written its history in blood; that nation that conceived and brought forth the Inquisition, the doings of which put to shame the tortures of the Prince of Hell himself.

Even in this age of enlightenment and Christian civilization the Spanish Government lives in the past; goes back to the Dark Ages, to ignorance, bigotry, and intolerance. It is this Spain that refuses liberty to the people of Cuba; this nation that in this civilized age conducts war not against armed men in the field, but on women and the helpless; that uses starvation as its chief weapon and torture as its ammunition. It is Spain that holds in bondage the people of Cuba; that nation that produced and honored an Alva and created a Weyler, the butcher; that nation so senseless to honor and the instincts of humanity that starving thousands awaken no chord of sympathy in its breast; that nation, which by reason of its brutal misrule and cruelties, though once the possessor of this continent, to-day owns Cuba alone; that nation which on the 15th day of February, A. D. 1898, committed the crime of the nineteenth century—the destruction of the Maine and the murder of 266 American seamen in the harbor of Havana.

Mr. President, was there ever before in the history of the world a more diabolical crime? Was there ever such a foul murder so long unavenged? I see, as I speak, the red flash from that hell-fired mine, and the crash of iron and steel together, with the mangled forms of the brave sailors and seamen, and hear their shrieks and cries of pain and terror, as crushed and shapeless they are hurled into eternity.

Mr. President, it has been the policy of this Government to be at peace with all the nations of the earth, and that policy has been most faithfully carried out, and war has been entered into only as a last resort—only when every other means has failed. The people of the United States do not to-day desire war for war's sake. They, many of them, have seen war and know its meaning, the lesson having been learned as participants in great and bloody battles. They know that "war is hell." Yet, Mr. President, there are times and conditions when a war-made hell is to be preferred to hells created and existing by other means, and a time and a condition now exists that warrants war—war that the Spanish-created hell in Cuba may be destroyed and that that Spanish-created hell of February 15, 1898, may be avenged.

No longer, Mr. President, will American freemen witness starvation, outrage, and crime in Cuba and remain idle. No longer will they permit to go unavenged the blood shed in Havana Harbor. No longer can plea of "wait a little longer" hold them back from a duty so clear and plain. No longer can the whim of the administrative branch of the Government and diplomatic claptrap deter them from meting out justice to the perpetrators of these crimes and outrages.

The honor of the nation is at stake. Humanity demands action, action that is plain—grim war. The cold clay, the speechless lips and pulseless hearts of the Maine's dead heroes cry out to us for vengeance; the starving, diseased Cubans pray to us for help. Can we refuse to hear these appeals? No, Mr. President; American manhood and American chivalry give back the answer that innocent blood shall be avenged, starvation and crime shall cease, Cuba shall be free. For such reasons, for such causes, America can and will fight. For such causes and for such reasons we should have war.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the United States ought immediately to declare war against Spain and to maintain that war until the people of Cuba are made free from Spanish starvation and cruelty and the government of the island firmly established as an independent republic.

The reasons for declaring war are apparent to the world.

Spain has justly forfeited all title to any possessions in the Western Hemisphere by her prolonged misgovernment thereof. Unjust taxation caused the French Revolution, the American Revolution, and the Cuban revolution. As France helped the Americans, so the United States should help the Cubans.

Spain has lost all right to suppress the Cuban rebellion by resorting to inhuman methods of warfare—continuous military murders of persons in open arms or suspected of disloyalty and by the deliberate and wholesale starvation of noncombatant men, women, and children. Spain has surrendered all claim to the forbearance of the United States by disregarding all friendly remonstrances, by practicing deceit through false promises of local government for Cuba, by insulting the President of the United States, and by destroying, through the explosion of a mine, the battle ship Maine and the lives of 260 American sailors while the ship was under the protection of Spain on a peaceful visit to the harbor of Havana.

Spain having thus begun the war, the United States ought to accept the issue without waiting for the enemy to concentrate all her fleet in American waters. We have an Army and Navy equal to the emergency. For no juster cause, with no better motives, did any nation ever take up arms. We may vote for the coming declaration with clear consciences and hopeful anticipations of success, having performed a high duty to humanity, civilization, and liberty—to the United States and to the Cuban Republic.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I have great regard for the continuity and consistency of public action and of my own conduct in participating therein. I voted more than two years ago for the acknowledgment of belligerency to the Cuban insurgents. More than a year ago I voted for and addressed the Senate in favor of the recognition of the independence of the Cuban Republic. This morning I am of the opinion in respect to our relations with the Kingdom of Spain and its former dependency, the Island of Cuba, that the consecutive steps of belligerency, recognition, and intervention, heretofore forborne by the United States, ought now be massed at once and taken together as the only reparation for the wrongs inflicted upon this Government and upon mankind by the offenses of the Spanish monarchy.

We are now witnessing the fourteenth year of the war for Cuban independence, for it must be recollected that this war was begun in 1868 and lasted ten years. The truce which then took place did not occur by reason of the defeat of the revolution, or, in other words, by the suppression of the rebellion, or by the surrender of the Cuban armies, or the cessation of armed resistance against the Spanish Government.

The pacification of the treaty of Zanjon occurred by reason of a mutual agreement between the authorities of the Cuban Republic of that time and those of the Spanish Government upon the Island of Cuba, by which, under the terms of the treaty then made, it was solemnly agreed by Spain that within ten years—a long time, a very long time—that within ten years, such period being given wherein to carry out the promised reforms, there should be substantial self-government and local autonomy for the Cuban people established in that island, and that African slavery in the island should be abolished. Those were the principal provisions of the treaty of pacification made at Zanjon in the winter of 1878 at the conclusion of the first period of the war for Cuban independence.

During the whole ten years afterwards no step was taken in execution of this mutual convention, except one—the abolition of slavery; and that was only taken in 1884, after an intimation from the Government of the United States and certain European powers that that part of the convention of Zanjon must be complied with and executed.

It was under that mediation that slavery was abolished in the Island of Cuba. That is the only provision of the compact which was undertaken and carried out by the Spanish Government. Every other was delayed and postponed. It was said by the royal authorities, "We have not had time. We have had a variety of interests to confer about. We have had great questions in the island to consider. Give us yet more time beyond the limit of ten years." Seven years were not granted; but seven years were taken by the royal authority, by the Spanish Government, by the cabinet at Madrid, to carry out the remaining stipulations of the treaty of pacification at Zanjon, and seven years were taken in vain.

No other action was taken by the Spanish Government. The same absolute oppression, the same exclusion of Cubans from all offices of trust and profit, the same exclusive Spanish control of courts, the same denial to the Cubans of justice in those courts, the same oppressive system of taxation more severe than under any civilized Christian government in the world, was continued up to the last moment of the seven years, when the second period of the war for Cuban independence became flagrant, the second period of the same war waged for the same reasons, largely between the same persons, making now the fourteenth year of that struggle.

Mr. President, the lapse of time, and the lapse of time alone, emphasizes the duty of the American Congress to intervene, and to intervene in such a manner as to make the pacification of Zanjon a fact accomplished, and to declare and maintain the independence of the Republic of Cuba. For Spain was to forfeit her sovereignty if she made default in this treaty. There is now a republican government in that island. It has maintained itself for fourteen years in arms. It has an active corps of 35,000 men, well armed, drilled, and equipped. It has another corps of the same number, 35,000 men, equipped and drilled, liable at a moment's call under the command of their president, but not armed by reason of the want of guns and ammunition, the result of that blockade which we have hitherto maintained in the interest of Spain, creating an embargo against the revolutionists.

For the maintenance of the authority of the republic—a government with a president and cabinet like our own, a government with a well-established revenue, a government with courts having civil and criminal jurisdiction, a government having a system of taxation, a postal system, and every other element of civil national life—that government, sir, ought to be immediately recognized.

Mr. President, we have not only had this long-continued war and this maintenance of the Republic of Cuba, but we have had upon our side the same prolonged continuance of efforts in aid of what are called our own neutrality laws. It has cost us millions of money to take and maintain the position of neutrality; it has cost us millions to shut away from the armies of the Republic of Cuba the supplies of ammunition which might perhaps have ended this struggle before now if we had not observed this neutrality.

Again, sir, we have during this long period, during the whole fourteen years, been subjected to indignities, insults, and outrages upon American property and upon American persons which, had they not been committed in the name of a friendly Government, had they not been committed under the auspices nominally of a Government with which we were in amity, would have been in themselves cause for armed intervention at our hands.

Above all, sir, during these last twelve months wherein events have quickened, the scenes in the drama of the Cuban revolution have changed and shifted rapidly. The cruel policy of concentration—determined, avowed, deliberately planned and executed by the home Government of Spain—has been pursued against the people of Cuba.

We have seen 400,000 of those people driven from their homes, placed between the double dead line of the bayonet on one side and famine on the other. Heretofore we have read of revolutions, of the French Revolution, the guillotine, and the Reign of Terror, but in the Cuban revolution we have had the reign of death for twelve months—death by famine, involving the slowest, the most lingering, the most excruciating tortures known to human suffering and mortality.

Two hundred thousand have perished for the want of the necessaries to the maintenance of life. They have perished by reason of hunger. "Give us this day our daily bread." Such is the prayer of humanity to the All Father of the world, and He has never wearied in granting food to His children. It is only the evil genius of the Spanish monarchy which would dare to deny men, women, and children—which would dare to deny to childhood, to motherhood—the bare necessaries of life. It is only the Moloch of the Spanish monarchy which dared to say, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, that I may slay and devour them."

This policy of concentration, sir, contrary to Christianity, contrary to the law of nations, contrary to the rules of civilized warfare, a crime against the human race, has characterized this period of twelve months. I feel very certain in saying beyond all contradiction that if Spain were now to attempt to enter upon any island or any portion of this hemisphere and found a new colony, with the view of governing it under her sovereignty and dominion, the whole people of the United States would rise as they did in the case of Venezuela to support the President against that attempt; and I do not see that there is any difference in principle between allowing the Spanish monarchy to repeople the desert wild which it has made in the Island of Cuba with a new population and the founding of a new colony elsewhere upon this continent. It is dangerous to our peace and safety; it is a gross and unjustifiable violation of the Monroe doctrine; it is much more without excuse, much more without justification, than the action of Great Britain with respect to the Venezuelan frontier.

Besides this general course of events, marked with so much horror and barbarity, there are particular incidents which accentuate the demand that we shall heed the voice of our neighboring republic and the voice of humanity, asking us to come over and help them, to rescue them from this impending ruin.

There is what is called the De Lôme affair, the affair of the Spanish minister—De Lôme, a typical representative of that polished address and duplicity which have marked Spanish diplomacy in every era of the world, a typical representative of that accomplished hypocrisy which can meet its victim smiling in the face and behind his back with jeer, sneer, and hisses.

With what a serious and earnest air the late Spanish minister approached the President of the United States and the Secretary of State to lay before him the papers and to explain to them in detail the system of Spanish autonomy for the future government of the Island of Cuba! Yet at the same time that accomplished emissary was turning his head over his shoulder saying to his friends in old Spain: "This autonomy; it is a game, it is a ruse, it is chaff, thin, worthless chaff; good enough to give to the people and to the President of the United States."

But the mask was torn from his face. The features of this hypocrite were revealed in all their native deception and deformity. Then he made his exit. Then he took his departure. But, sir, his resignation was accepted by the Spanish Government. He was subject to no reprimand or reproof. He is yet persona grata in the court of the Queen Regent at Madrid, with a deliberate insult to the Government and people of the United States, an insult avowed and countenanced by the Government which sent him here as its representative, witnessed by his presence.

Then, again, we have what is called the incident of the Maine, the instant and stealthy destruction of a public war vessel of the United States upon a peaceable and not unusual visit to the harbor of Havana, the harbor of Havana and the whole island being at the time under the most rigid martial law which has ever been proclaimed in any part of Christendom. Sir, that destruction, that deplorable loss, occurred without the slightest precaution having been taken by the Spanish authorities to prevent it, and without any effort to detect or to discover the actors in the crime after its accomplishment.

If I recollect aright, sir, the destruction of the Maine occurred during the régime of autonomy. The system of Spanish autonomy in Cuba had been inducted, inaugurated, and was in full operation at the time of the destruction of the Maine and the loss of the gallant men who perished with her. We are told that the colonial and royal officials attended the burial of the victim martyrs of the Maine. Were they real mourners?

Yes, Mr. President, as real as De Lôme, as sincere as the Spanish minister. The crape they wore hid a secret, as the waters of Havana Bay hid the mine and wire that wrecked the Maine and her murdered crew. Here are insults, here are incidents and injuries which can not be repaired except upon such conditions as that they never can occur again, such conditions as shall forever place the harbor of Havana and Cuba, with all its land and waters, beyond the control and dominion of the Spanish Crown.

Sir, there may be the acknowledgment of the independence of the Cuban Republic; there may be armed intervention and still be no war, and yet be preservation of peace. It rests with Spain. We say to her, whether we declare it in one way or another, "Surrender Cuba; withdraw your naval and military forces; depart in peace." Spain has not earned that; is scarcely worthy of it. She asks us, "What are you willing to sacrifice for peace; what are you willing to sacrifice for Cuban independence?" "We have given up the Maine; we have given up the slaughtered heroes who once trod her decks—all these are martyrs, glorious martyrs, in that cause—if you will depart in peace;" for I believe that the loss of Havana and Cuba would be a stroke of such serious detriment to the purse, pride, and power of the Spanish monarchy that we might be willing to consider it as a reparation for the wrongs and losses which it has inflicted upon the Government and people of the United States. But I would have no other reparation.

So, then, there is that day of repentance, there is that alternative of peace, and it may be that Spain's last thoughts about Cuba shall be her best, for it is to her a very grave alternative. The Spanish monarchy has in that island and the subjects who have acknowledged and supported it, millions of credits depending upon this determination.

The Spanish monarchy has millions of movable property the value of which depends upon this determination. The Spanish monarchy has archives, records of courts, of deeds, of conveyances, worth an immeasurable sum, the custody of which depends upon the decision of that alternative. It does bring the cabinet at Madrid to consider, and to consider upon great grounds, the difference between a peaceable departure and surrender of her ancient possessions in this hemisphere and a military capitulation at the end of the war. It does present a great alternative.

Sir, in the old times, from 1861 to 1865, there used to be a great deal of discussion—I have heard it in this Chamber—as to what was the cause of the war. I think there was a unanimous conclusion upon our side that slavery, if not the cause of the war, was so nearly related to and so closely connected with it that peace could never be established without its final extinction and abolishment. What is the cause of the war now pending in the Island of Cuba? What shall be the cause of the war anticipated between the United States and Spain?

There is only one cause. That is the assertion and maintenance of the right of the Spanish Crown to its sovereignty and dominion in the Island of Cuba. That is the cause, and until that dominion and sovereignty of Spain in the Island of Cuba are extinguished, obliterated, there will be no peace; there can be no peace; there should be no peace. It is upon that alternative, and only that, that peace may come, in my judgment; may lawfully, righteously come to us as well as to them. The abandonment by Spain of her government in the island, with all its appended military and naval forces, is the only thing which can give us indemnity for the past and security for the future.

REPORT OF NAVAL COURT OF INQUIRY.

Mr. LODGE. Yesterday I reported and the Senate passed a resolution ordering 5,000 additional copies of the Maine report. Since then the House of Representatives has passed a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 20,000 copies, of which 6,500 shall be for the use of the Senate and 13,500 for the House. I move that the vote by which the resolution was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Printing I report a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, for which I ask present consideration.

The concurrent resolution was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be printed 20,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States, dated March 28, 1898, together with the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the U. SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. CHANDLER to the amendment of the committee on page 68 of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Yesterday the Senate had under consideration the amendment of the committee relating to forest reservations. In the course of observations made by Senators it was suggested that in case the proclamations named were suspended by the operation of this amendment the President would not have the power to restore the reservations in whole or in part. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted on page 68, after line 9, striking out the colon at the end of the line and inserting a semicolon. I think it will cure the defect suggested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, at the end of line 9, page 68, to insert:

> But nothing herein contained shall be construed as abridging in any way the right of the President to set apart and reserve forest reservations as provided by the act approved March 3, 1891.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that an amendment is pending, offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment may be withdrawn or considered later.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire is not now in his seat.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that it may be passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. SHOUP. I wish to offer an amendment to follow the committee amendment just adopted.

The SECRETARY. After line 25, page 68, it is proposed to insert:

> That section 8 of an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same is hereby amended as follows:
> "That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to grant permits under the provisions of the eighth section of the act of March 3, 1891, to citizens of Idaho and Wyoming to cut timber in the State of Wyoming west of the continental divide on the Snake River and its tributaries to the boundary line of Idaho for agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, and to remove the timber so cut to the State of Idaho."

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Idaho will explain the amendment.

Mr. SHOUP. In the extreme eastern part of Idaho there is no timber to speak of, while in the extreme western part of Wyoming and on the western slopes the country is well timbered. There are citizens in there, from 75 to 80 miles from the railroad, who now have to haul their lumber and other timber from the railroad. All the citizens of Wyoming living on the west side of the main chain of the Rocky Mountains or the continental divide have petitioned, along with citizens of Idaho, for the granting of this permit. The Senators from Wyoming do not object, for the reason that the timber on the slope can not be transported eastward over the main chain of the continental divide.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment may again be read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 11, on page 69.

Mr. SHOUP. At this point I wish to offer an amendment. I move to insert after line 11, on page 69:

> Maps of public-land States——

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Idaho to withhold that amendment until the amendments of the committee are disposed of. By agreement, the committee amendments are to be disposed of first.

Mr. SHOUP. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] is now here, and I ask that we may recur to the amendment which was under consideration a few moments ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to strike out all after the word "suspended," in line 7, page 68, down to and including the word "issued," in the following words:

> And the lands embraced therein restored to the public domain the same as though said orders and proclamations had not been issued.

And to insert in lieu the words:

> Until March 4, 1899.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire ought to prevail. The provision as it stands vacates the orders of the President and opens up the reservations to settlement. To provide that the order shall be suspended for one year delays the controversy for one year and settles nothing.

One year ago we proposed to vacate the orders and to open the reservations to settlement. The Senate adopted an amendment to the sundry civil bill for that purpose. In conference an amendment was agreed to similar to the one now being considered, and the conference report was adopted by the Senate. I said then that we simply delayed the controversy one year, that nothing would be done, that the reservations at the end of the year would still exist, and Congress would again be called upon to vacate the improvident and unwise orders.

The same proposition is made again, and if adopted, one year from now, with nothing done, with no forest reservations established in those regions, this same question will be up for discussion. If the improvident and unwise orders are vacated, the whole question is open for action on the part of the President. He can establish in a locality, after a careful examination, forest reservations that will embrace the regions that are suited for the purpose. But if we leave it so that the action taken last year will stand, the reservations will again be created, one year from now, with their present boundaries, and there will be an intolerable condition of affairs, which will be resisted by the Western people.

Let the orders be vacated and let the reservations be opened to settlement. Let the President, as soon as he can examine those areas, establish other reservations which will embrace the timber and preserve the timber of that part of the country. We are in favor of preserving the forests. The people of the Western country desire that the fires shall be kept down and the timber preserved for their use, and we are as earnestly and honestly in favor of it as are any other people in the country.

But how were the reservations established? In 1891 Congress passed a law authorizing the President, by proclamation, to reserve areas in the West containing timber, and to preserve them for the production of timber. In 1896 some members of the American Academy of Sciences came to the Secretary of the Interior and suggested the setting apart of reservations under that law. The Secretary thereupon called upon those gentlemen to make suggestions, and they made suggestions. The most pertinent and important suggestion to them was their suggestion that Congress should appropriate $25,000 for them to go forward into the West and make examinations as to where reservations should be created. Congress complied with their request. Five of the scientific gentlemen were selected and sent out in a palace car on a junketing trip. There were sent out to spend the $25,000.

It is said that scientific investigation promotes truth, and that no real honest investigator of science can be false. Mr. President, this saying is refuted by the conduct of the gentlemen who composed the commission sent out by the American Academy of Sciences. Those men went forth apparently upon a mission prompted by honest and philanthropic motives, and yet they passed by the State of South Dakota; they never entered the area which they afterwards recommended to be set apart as a forest reservation, but took a map and marked out a region of country containing 10,000 people, 50 miles of railroad, cities, towns, mines, and mills, and without any knowledge of the area, without even entering it, they recommended to the President that that country should be set apart as a forest reservation.

They did the same everywhere. They went into Wyoming. The State commissioner of irrigation met them at Sheridan. He asked them to stop and examine the forests in the Bighorn Mountain, and they refused. They refused to stay over even for a day and visit the region 15 or 20 miles away which they afterwards embraced within a forest reservation.

They went on to the Yellowstone Park and visited the geysers and the springs and spent the money that we had appropriated. But they created no forest reservation in the Yellowstone Park. They were not there for that purpose. They entered no region which they recommended to be a forest reservation.

They embraced in Wyoming millions of acres of land upon which there is not a single tree. The pretext was that in the interest of science the forests should be preserved so that the water supply could be preserved; and yet they created an enormous forest reservation in the State of Washington, where the annual rainfall is 108 inches a year. Untrue to science, false in their recommendations, they took the money that we appropriated for a scientific purpose and spent it in a junketing trip. Such conduct on the part of the American Academy of Sciences, in the interest of science, in the interest of truth, ought to be rebuked, and the orders ought to be vacated.

What more? In the State of South Dakota they made a partial examination of the area by the Geological Survey, and there are thousands of acres embraced within the reservation upon which there is no timber at all. They report 50 miles of railroad and 460 farmers, having under cultivation from 30 to 60 acres of land each. There are seventeen post-offices within the area; there are thousands of mining claims, and there is one city where 400 votes were polled at the last election. All of that was embraced within a forest reservation.

Now, in that part of the country there are many acres of forest that ought to be embraced within a reservation. When the country is surveyed and examined the reservations ought to be established. I presume there are a million acres that ought to be in forest reservations in the Black Hills of South Dakota. There are about a million acres within the reservation now created, but one-half of the reservation now existing ought to be absolutely opened up to settlement, and an area equally as great, containing forests, ought to be embraced within the boundaries of the reservation.

The opposition to that which we wish to do has not come from the Western people or the Western Senators. Not a single representative in either House of Congress was ever notified or consulted by the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Interior with regard to the establishment of one of these reservations. Congress was in session, the representatives of those States were here, and yet, ignoring absolutely the people of that country, in violation of every dictate of good judgment and good sense, the man who disgraced the executive chair of this country for eight years established the reservations. Every member of both Houses to-day desires the amendment reported from the committee. They do not desire the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

What interest, what sentiment, prompts New Hampshire to know more about what the people of the West want than the representatives of the people of the West on this floor and in the other House? Mr. President, if we should appoint a commission in Dakota to go to New Hampshire and then report to Congress what ought to be done in New Hampshire, there would be objection, I apprehend, from that quarter of the world. New England would rebel against the trespass of the people of the West. We would be regarded as presumptuous if we should try to represent that locality.

For my part, I believe the people of New Hampshire are capable of selecting Representatives to represent them upon this floor, and I believe they have selected Representatives capable of representing them upon this floor. But, Mr. President, owing to their lack of knowledge of the West, owing to the provincial character of the people whom they represent, owing to the fact that their Representatives refuse to travel and become acquainted with this country, I deny that they have selected men capable of representing the States of the West.

On public questions of course they possess a great capacity and great wit, but on questions of a local nature affecting the people of the West they have less knowledge than almost anybody else in the world. Why they should try to spread themselves out so thin as to take within the scope of their vast intellects all the vast region of the Rocky Mountains, which they never saw, is more than I can understand. If they will withdraw their patronizing and kindly interest in these questions they will certainly be entitled to some degree of kindly consideration by the people of the country affected.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, it is a fact that the people living in the Western States that are affected are denied anything, that they are absolutely ignored, and the whole thing proceeds from an outside source undertaking to govern that entire country.

The matter of reservations is a local question. The plea for it is that the timber can be preserved in certain localities, which would tend to preserve the water for irrigation purposes and the like. There is no other pretext for it. It is not pretended in those States, except perhaps the State of Washington, that there is any commercial timber that can go to any other State at all. The use of the timber is all local, and its preservation is a local question. The people who live there have a direct interest in preserving it, and nobody else.

There has been more injury by fire than from all other causes. More has been destroyed by burning than by cutting, taking the whole region there, and nobody has done any effective service toward preventing fires except the people who live there. They turn out and put out the fires.

If you deny them the right to go upon the land, if you deny them the right to build reservoirs, to divert the water for agricultural purposes, you have reservations under the control of small men whom you send there, impudent in their manners, lordly in their demands, and of course the fires will run over the reservations and the timber will be destroyed, and the very thing you are attempting to accomplish will be defeated by establishing the reservations.

The very fact that the reservations were made from maps here in Washington without any regard to the territory to which they were applied, the very fact that they included settlements of miners and agriculturalists, the very fact that they will retard those States, and that they have gone in and done all this without consulting anybody, stamps the whole proceeding as worse than folly. If they are going to administer in that way, the quicker it is repealed the better.

You do not want to make war on those States and drive out those who have homes at your invitation in those mountain regions. A piece of vandalism such as this was never before perpetrated in any section of the country. My friends of the South used to complain about carpetbag rule, but this is worse than all of the carpetbag rule put together. Carpetbaggers did not go into the South and drive you off and take possession of whole neighborhoods and take from you the land which you had occupied under the invitation of Congress.

It is true that the titles of the settlers were inchoate; that they could be removed; the land could be made into reservations, and the settlers could be deprived of their property, because they had not yet gone far enough to get the deeds; but nobody ever thought of depriving a whole community of the right of settlement as has been done by these orders. Such an order in this country was never thought of before. The idea that you want to keep that order hanging over the citizens for a year and prevent the people from opening their mines, from building their homes and cultivating the land, holding that menace of confiscation over honest people another year, is a matter preposterous, outrageous in its conception.

Of course my friend from New Hampshire has no idea of the consequences of his amendment. He is a kind man; he does not want to injure the West; he has always been our friend; but I am sorry that he has become an instrument to carry out and to accentuate the follies of the Cleveland Administration. He used to oppose it. I did not think that he would be an instrument of adding to the cruelties of the Cleveland Administration. I did not think that he had any such design in his nature. He opposed the Cleveland Administration, and that Administration issued that most preposterous order. Whether Cleveland knew anything about it or not, it was the most savage, the most destructive, the most unreasonable order ever issued in the world.

Now, when the Committee on Appropriations propose to relieve the people from that menace, one of our friends, who has always been a friend of the West, turns against us. What have we done? What new grievance has the West given him? We have stood with you pretty well. We do not want to drive your people from your homes. We do not want to obstruct the prosperity of the East. We do not prevent you from building houses on land you have settled upon. We do not want to prevent you from opening mines you have entered under the laws of Congress. We do not want to keep your part of the country from settlement. We take pride in the development of every part of the country. But this is the most monstrous, silly, and destructive proceeding I ever heard of.

That law was intended to empower the Administration to make investigations, and, if they found a proper place for a reservation, to make the reservation; but Congress did not suppose that the Administration was going to make a sweeping order that would banish the people from the country and place 30,000,000 acres of land in one order, selected from the mass without regard to who was living there. Who ever heard of anything that could possibly be done that was worse? I never heard that it was possible for any Administration to do so silly a thing, and why should anybody want to perpetuate it? Everyone who ever had anything to do with it ought to be on his feet apologizing and pleading ignorance, and then he could not be charged with willful malice. Ignorance is the only excuse that anybody can have for such folly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I feel complimented by the kind and friendly suggestions of the Senator from Nevada. I have no disposition to do any injustice by any of the mountain States or Western States. I ask the attention of the Senator from Nevada a moment to what it is proposed to do by the clause of the sundry civil appropriation bill under consideration. It is to completely wipe out all the orders and proclamations of President Cleveland making forestry reservations under the act of 1891.

Mr. STEWART. Only the one order.

Mr. CHANDLER. One moment. I want the Senator to answer.

Mr. President, that is the proposition which is made to us and insisted upon by our Western friends; it is what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] has been advocating for a year and a half with great eloquence and vehemence—no compromise, no partial withdrawal of the orders and proclamations, but their complete destruction.

Now, I ask the Senator from Nevada if there is not some way in which the people of this country outside of those States can see something done in the way of forestry reservations under the act of 1891, or when we give a President power and he makes comprehensive orders and does what the people of the country expect of him, must we see what he does entirely wiped out because he is a member of the Democratic party, whom the Senator from South Dakota does not like, or a single gold standard statesman, whom the Senator from Nevada does not like? Are those the reasons why we should lose these forest reservations?

Mr. STEWART. Not at all. Let me answer.

Mr. CHANDLER. I submit not. Why, I ask the Senator, wipe out at one blow all these reservations with no direction whatever to the President to go on and make reservations in other places?

Mr. STEWART. I will answer the Senator that there are some things so totally bad from top to bottom, so wicked, idiotic, and absurd, that they ought to be wiped out. The order reserved 30,000,000 acres of land without regard to its situation or the propriety of making the reservation, without regard to those living upon the reservations, or any other consideration. It reserved that amount of land. We do not wipe out the power to make a proper selection of reservations. That power has existed and there has been no difficulty in its being exercised all the time.

The Administration since that time could have been having the surveys made. Congress was ready to make the appropriation to find out what lands ought to be set aside. But the Administration did not undertake to execute the law properly and designate what ought to be set aside, but insisted upon including in reservations 30,000,000 acres of land, more than is contained in one of the large States, a tremendous area, and including population and business, without any reference to the rights of man. If the Administration can not follow the law and ascertain what reservations ought to be made, we had better wipe it all out, for I tell you the good that will come from reservations anyhow is too small to be appreciated. The people will take care of those lands if let alone better than any foreigner.

I believe in home rule. I think it is a most insolent rule to send men out there to control those reservations when the persons who live there have preserved the timber and are the only persons interested in doing it. Neither the Government nor the people of the East can take care of those forests; they would burn down. Nobody will take any interest in them but the people who live there. They want the shade and the timber. They pass State laws and they have societies for the protection of the timber. They want to build up their country. This proceeding has disgusted and discouraged them more than anything else that has happened. It makes them feel that they are treated as alien enemies, that their rights are not regarded. It is a violation of every principle of home rule that is sacred to the American people.

Why keep them in this suspense? The Senator proposes to keep this whole shadow over all that land—30,000,000 acres—and have it simply suspended for a year, those people not to know whether they can build houses or open their mines; not to know whether their property is to be confiscated. Why should the matter be held in suspense for another year? The order has done enough harm, and it is time those people were relieved from suspense. It is time that the executive department did its duty and made proper selections. It is time that one selection of 30,000,000 acres of land without regard to its location was stopped.

Such proceedings ought to be stopped, and they ought to be frowned upon. Every person having any idea of fair play ought to set his face against it. I am opposed to keeping any portion of that transaction upon the records of the country. The very order is a disgrace to the United States. It stamps the people who made it as ignorant or disregardful for the rights of the country. It is an order that is disgraceful, and it ought not to stand another minute. I want again to tender my thanks to the Committee on Appropriations for having done this service in the way of relieving the people of the West from such an outrage.

Mr. CHANDLER. That was quite a long answer to the question I asked. I will not ask another of the Senator from Nevada. The Senator, however, can hardly believe that there was absolutely nothing good in President Cleveland's order setting apart the forest reservations.

Mr. STEWART. That is just my opinion exactly; there was nothing good in it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has applied the harsh terms that he uses occasionally when speaking of other subjects in the Senate to the action of President Cleveland in making these reservations, but the Senator can hardly make the Senate and the country believe that there was nothing whatever good in all the forest reservations set apart by President Cleveland.

As I have said before, I am not familiar with the details. I do not know but that the commission which traveled over the West went on a junketing expedition, as the Senator from South Dakota says they did. But I do find a solemn act of President Cleveland in pursuance of a specific statute of Congress that accomplished what it was the general desire of the people of the United States should be accomplished, to wit, the setting apart of vast forest tracts in the interior of the country at the head waters of our streams for reservations. It was done by President Cleveland, but I myself do not believe, I do not think the country believes, that everything that was done was wholly bad, wholly wrong, wholly wicked, and deserving of all the other adjectives which Senators heap upon the act of the President. It must be that there is some qualification which it is fit and proper and becoming to adopt in this drastic legislation which proposes to wipe out all that has been done under the act of 1891, and give no directions whatever to the present President of the United States to take any action under that act for the setting apart of forest reservations.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me a moment?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We have agreed to an amendment which continues the power of the President to set apart forest reservations. I think the Senator was absent when that amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I knew the Senator intended to propose it. If anything is done of this kind, the President of the United States ought not only to be authorized, but he ought to be commanded, to exercise the powers under the act of 1891 to set apart forest reservations.

That was section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891, and, as it is very brief, I will read it:

SEC. 24. That the President of the United States may, from time to time, set apart and reserve, in any State or Territory having public land bearing forests, in any part of the public lands wholly or in part covered with timber or undergrowth, whether of commercial value or not, as public reservations, and the President shall, by public proclamation, declare the establishment of such reservations and the limits thereof.

Under the sundry civil appropriation act of June 4, 1897, more than 2 pages of additional statutes were enacted to govern the President in the execution of his duties under that act. President Cleveland acted on February 22, 1897, and the law was suspended until the 4th of March last. The present Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office have been amending the rules and regulations, which were properly established and proclaimed to govern these forest reservations, and I am informed and believe they are acting judiciously, in accordance with the exact spirit and purpose of the original act, and in accordance, I also believe, with the wishes of the vast majority of the people of the United States.

That being the case, Mr. President, in come the majority of the Committee on Appropriations, and they make a provision that all the Executive orders of February 22, 1897, are suspended—naming no time, making an indefinite suspension, practically a revocation and cancellation of those orders. Then follows the provision:

And the lands embraced therein restored to the public domain the same as though said orders and proclamations had not been issued.

So here is a statutory rebuke of President Cleveland for having acted under this forestry statute; here is a complete and overwhelming annihilation of every attempt which has been hitherto made in this country to establish forest reservations by Executive proclamation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Previous to the issuance of these orders there had been set apart forest reservations embracing over 20,000,000 acres of land, or about 20,000,000 acres of land, which was satisfactory because they were intelligently established, and the country in which they were located was honestly investigated. Those reservations we do not complain of; those reservations remain; and the wise regulations adopted by the Secretary of the Interior apply to those reservations, and will apply to such intelligently selected reservations as will be created in the future.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand the Senator, and I am glad that there are reservations which are not to be affected by this bill; but as this proposition was brought into the Senate by the majority of the Committee on Appropriations it annihilated everything that was done by President Cleveland on February 22, 1897, and the bill contained no intimation whatever that the President either had the power to make new orders and proclamations or that it was desirable that he should make new orders and proclamations. I understand now that the Senator from South Dakota has offered an amendment which recognizes the right of the present President to make orders and proclamations which shall take the place of those that are suspended—that is to say, canceled—in accordance with the provisions of the pending sundry civil appropriation bill; but as the pending provision came in it was absolutely destructive; it was such a rebuke to previous Presidential action that it is hardly to be believed that without express direction of Congress any President will again attempt to execute the provisions of the law of 1891.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that perhaps the committee did not know what the law was; but that question was discussed in the committee, and the committee were of the opinion that the President has the authority to make reservations without any reference to this revocation. It is not a fair statement for the Senator to make that this provision came in here in a way that it could not be reenacted or the order could not have been made in duplicate if the President thought a mistake had been made. We knew he never would do it. We thought no reasonable man would, but we knew he had the power, and there is not any legal question in my mind but what the President had the power as the bill came to us, and if it had been enacted into law in the form in which the committee proposed it, he would have the power to rectify the lines or reinstate them if he saw fit.

Mr. CHANDLER. The law of 1891 says that the President may make these reservations from time to time; and I am inclined to think the Senator from Colorado is right as to the authority of the law.

What I said was that by one blow this provision annihilated everything that was done on the 22d of February, 1897, by President Cleveland, and contained no intimation either that the present President had the power or that it was desirable for him to issue new proclamations and orders setting apart other forest reservations.

Mr. STEWART. We adopted one this morning.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; I am so informed.

The Senator from Colorado is sensitive about criticism upon the majority of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, Mr. President, I am not at all sensitive. I would be quite willing to leave that question to a jury of lawyers or to this Senate; but I did not want the country to understand that we had proceeded without some consideration. That very point was made and discussed in committee, and there was no dissent from it. It was conceded that the President would have the power to set aside portions of the land embraced in these reservations if he found they ought to be so embraced; and we thought there was no question but what he would ultimately set aside some portions of land within the forest reservations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not contradicting the Senator, and the Senator can not contradict anything I have said. I say, originally the clause as it came from the committee contained no suggestion that the present President had the power to act, nor that it was desirable that he should act; but I say that the proposition should have contained, or that the law should contain, a direction to the President of the United States, when all that has been done during the past year is to be wiped out at one blow, or a suggestion that it is expected that the present President shall go on under the act of 1891 and make forest reservations in the place of those that are destroyed by this legislation.

Mr. President, I really wish that our friends who are interested in this legislation would be content to let the original orders and proclamations stand, and to provide by law for making exceptions and alterations and modifications in connection with those orders and proclamations, and not disappoint the people in this country who are interested in the preservation of the forests by taking this retrograde step, which will leave upon President McKinley and the Secretary of the Interior, at a time of great public excitement and when they have many other duties to perform the new duty of again going over all this subject and making forest reservations which the people of this country supposed they had already secured by the lawful act of President Cleveland.

Mr. President, I was complimented by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], and I was scolded a little by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. I am a little tired of hearing his lectures of New England. The Senator was born in New England and went West for New England's good [laughter], and it may be for the good of the State to which he migrated. He has criticised the Eastern Senators, New England Senators, because they have assumed to know something on this subject. I have assumed to know but little; I have desired to learn, and I have been courteously treated in the debate on this subject by all Senators except the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. President, New England does not need to know everything that is to be known save at home in New England. We send West the men, including the Senator from South Dakota, who know all about the West after they have been there a little while, and who succeed, by thrift and energy and integrity, I presume, in gathering in about all there is in sight in those Western States. [Laughter.] I understand the Senator from South Dakota has been successful in private and in public life, and I wish him good fortune hereafter, but I do hope that as a son of the Green Mountain State, who has achieved success in the West, he will cease making us tired by his tirades against New England.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, on yesterday when this matter was under discussion I had called attention to the condition of affairs prevailing in the Olympic forestry reservation and to the fact that 82 per cent of the land in Clallam County had been withdrawn from settlement. I stated that I had received a letter from a gentleman residing within the Olympic forestry reservation which I desired to present to the Senate to-day. I read the same for the information of our New England friends. It seems to throw about as much light on the conditions prevailing in those forestry reservations as anything I can present. This letter is written March 23, 1898, from Quillayute, Wash., a portion of the lands which have been surveyed in the Olympic forestry reservation, lying contiguous and adjacent to the Pacific Ocean. This gentleman writes to me that the people there are very much interested in whatever legislation may take place in regard to this matter. He says:

We already understand that the settler does not lose his claim unless he abandons it; but although the land already filed upon is not wrested from the homesteader, it is nevertheless rendered more or less valueless by the isolation that the reserve entails. As the reserve now stands our people are practically imprisoned, their property in a sense confiscated by being rendered almost valueless.

Reservation barriers have arrested development, and our communities are as completely isolated as if quarantined on account of some malignant disease. Thus thousands of families are deprived of making homes upon the rich areas of agricultural land that should, as it seems to us, be open to settlement, and especially that this land was once opened—twenty-four townships in Clallam County alone having been surveyed and quite extensively settled upon. Therefore many of our people have left and are still leaving their homes and investments in despair and because they see the hope of progress killed.

It gives me pain when I meet people who have in good faith settled here and there, and in not a few instances somewhat remote from the older communities, in order that they might have the more room for friend and kindred, and in some cases the dear old parents, who were soon to follow from the Western, Middle, or New England States, or even from over the sea—it gives me pain to find that the purposes of their hearts and hands have been broken off and that they with sad hearts are abandoning their little all, which has been gathered by years of hard and unremitting toil. These poor citizens of our country, when asked to stay by the homestead and await future and fuller developments, answer with a forlorn look.

To do so is only to be left behind prison walls in a country from which our kindred and friends who would live among us and help to develop the country are barred from entering. Had the commission done its duty, and nothing but its duty, it might have been quite different. The members of that commission are no doubt good men and competent, but in the case of the Olympic reserve I have abundant and good reason for believing they did not do the work assigned them thoroughly. I am satisfied they learned little and saw less of our agricultural area; without doubt there were over 2,000,000 acres of this reserve upon which they never set foot at all.

We all sincerely hope and trust that some action may be taken by the Congress of the United States so that a grateful people will be able to rejoice.

Sincerely, yours,

R. W. FLETCHER,
Parsonage, Quillayute, Washington.

I think this gentleman is the Methodist pastor at Quillayute, a little hamlet that is now located within the Olympic forest reserve. No words that I could utter would add anything to what has been said in this communication addressed to me. I should like to have had it yesterday, in order that the Senate might have had the full benefit of the situation which not only prevails in that reserve, but throughout the section I have the honor in part to represent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STEWART. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 68, line 7, after the word "suspended," it is proposed to strike out "and the lands embraced therein restored to the public domain the same as though said orders and proclamations had not been issued" and insert "until March 4, 1899."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this amendment the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEWART. I withdraw the call; and let the vote first be taken viva voce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn.

Mr. TELLER. On what motion are we now voting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is that of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. I hope that we shall vote that down.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as it has been heretofore amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. Yesterday I gave notice that I wanted to enter a motion to recede from the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations on page 67.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator from Washington was not in the Chamber yesterday, and there was a very thin Senate when the amendments on line 7 and lines 21 and 22, on page 67, were agreed to, I am perfectly willing, without the formality of a vote, that we may consider those amendments as still pending.

Mr. GORMAN. What is the suggestion about the amendments?

Mr. WILSON. I happened to be absent temporarily from the Senate Chamber yesterday when those amendments were passed upon, and came in a moment afterwards. I now enter a motion that we reconsider the vote by which the committee amendments on page 67 were adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the amendments referred to have been agreed to. If it is desired that they may be again considered, the proper motion will be to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were adopted.

Mr. GORMAN. Does the Senator from Iowa desire to have the vote by which the amendments were agreed to reconsidered now? The question will arise after the bill shall have been reported to the Senate; but still, if the Senator from Iowa desires a reconsideration now, I shall not object.

Mr. ALLISON. I am entirely willing that the vote may be reconsidered now if Senators so desire.

Mr. TELLER. I think the amendments had better be passed over now, as there are some Senators who want to be heard upon them who are not now here.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Then I ask that the amendments may go over.

Mr. WILSON. What I desire is that I shall not lose an opportunity to move that the Senate recede from those amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote by which the amendments were agreed to will, by unanimous consent, be regarded as having been reconsidered, and for the present will be passed over. Is that the desire of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the point, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote by which the amendments were agreed to has been reconsidered, and they will be passed by for the present.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know whether there is unanimous consent given for that. If the Chair please, I should like to hear what the pending question is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent has been asked for the reconsideration of the votes by which the two amendments on page 67 have been agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear what the amendments are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition is to reconsider the amendments of the committee on page 67, which were adopted, so that they may lie over for further consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I had hoped that the Senator in charge of the bill would let those amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood that when they were agreed to it would be a settlement of the question; but if the Senator wants to open the question, as a matter of course we are only too glad to get the opportunity of having it done.

Mr. ALLISON. I am wholly indifferent as to the matter. When these amendments were agreed to yesterday they were agreed to without debate.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is true, for I was watching them.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad to know the Senator was watching them.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] has stated that he desired to be heard upon those amendments, and other Senators have said to me personally that they were not aware that the amendments were to be considered yesterday and that they would also like an opportunity to be heard upon them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then let the amendments be passed over, and they can be called up when we get through with the consideration of the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. WILSON. That course is entirely agreeable to me, but I merely want to say this: I was temporarily absent in the Marble Room when the amendments were adopted, and when I came in I called attention to the fact that I desired to have some explanation of them. I want to know some of the reasons for the committee amendments; I want to hear what those who are in favor of the amendments have to say. The amendments were passed upon at a time when there was more or less excitement here about sundry matters and things. I gave notice yesterday that I should ask to take them up at some other time if I could have the opportunity.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator when the bill is reported to the Senate will be the time for him to take up the question. It will be perfectly in order for him then to do so, and he will lose nothing by waiving the question for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the reconsideration of the votes by which the amendments were agreed to, as the Chair understands.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no difficulty in reaching this question if Senators desire to reach it, either by unanimous consent or when the bill shall be reported to the Senate, as suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the latter is the better way.

Mr. TELLER. The question will come up regularly when the bill is reported to the Senate, and we can consider it at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the request to be withdrawn.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 70, line 1, after the word "publication," to insert "in a newspaper published nearest the land examined, and also a newspaper of general circulation of the State where the land is located, to be designated by the register of the land district in which the land is situated;" so as to make the clause read:

For publication in a newspaper published nearest the land examined, and also in a newspaper of general circulation of the State where the land is located, to be designated by the register of the land district in which the land is situated, of the monthly reports filed by said commissioners in the office of the register and receiver of the Bozeman, Helena, and Missoula land districts, in the State of Montana, and the Cœur d'Alene land district, in the State of Idaho; and for the expenses pertaining to hearings ordered by, and conducted before, said registers and receivers, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the clause, on page 72, making appropriations for "surveying the public lands."

Mr. STEWART. I move, after the word "Montana," in line 1 on page 72, to insert "Nevada;" so as to include Nevada in the list of the States where the surveys are to be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 9, after the word

"amount," to insert "not exceeding $30,000," and in line 15, after the word "surveys," to insert "returned by deputy surveyors;" so as to read:

And provided further, And of the sum hereby appropriated there may be expended such an amount not exceeding $30,000 as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may deem necessary for examination of public surveys in the several surveying districts, by such competent surveyors as the Secretary of the Interior may select, in order to test the accuracy of the work in the field, and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfect surveys returned by deputy surveyors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 12, to insert:

That where, prior to the approval of this act, the whole or any part of an odd-numbered section, in either the granted or indemnity limits of the land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, to which the right of such grantee or its lawful successor has attached by definite location or lawful selection, has been purchased directly from the United States or settled upon and claimed in good faith by any qualified settler under color of title or claim of right under any law of the United States or any ruling of the Land Department, the railroad grantee or its successor in interest, upon a proper relinquishment thereof, shall be entitled to select, in lieu of the land relinquished, an equal quantity of public lands, surveyed or unsurveyed, not mineral or reserved, and free from valid adverse claim at the time of such selection, situated within any State or Territory into which such railroad grant extends, and patent shall issue for the land so selected as though it had been originally granted; but all selections of unsurveyed lands shall be of odd-numbered sections to be identified by the survey when made, and patent therefor shall not issue until after the survey: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain and, as soon as conveniently may be done, cause to be prepared and delivered to the said railroad grantee or its successor in interest a list of the several tracts which have been purchased or settled upon or occupied as aforesaid, and are now claimed by said purchasers or occupants, their heirs or assigns, according to the smallest Government subdivisions, and within a reasonable time after the receipt by the said railroad grantee or its successor in interest of the said list it shall execute under its corporate seal and deliver to the Secretary of the Interior its deed of conveyance releasing to the United States all its claims upon the lands described in said list, whereupon all the right, title, and interest of the said railroad grantee or its successor in interest to each of said tracts shall revert to the United States, and such tracts shall be treated, under the laws thereof, in the same manner as if no rights thereto had ever vested in the said railroad grantee, and all qualified persons who have occupied and may be on said lands as herein provided, or who have purchased said lands in good faith as aforesaid, their heirs or assigns, shall be permitted to perfect their titles to said lands according to law as if said grant had never been made; and upon such relinquishment the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company or its lawful successor in interest may proceed to select, and patents shall issue therefor, lands in lieu of those relinquished in the manner hereinbefore provided: And provided further, That whenever any qualified settler shall in good faith make settlement in pursuance of existing law upon any odd-numbered sections of unsurveyed public lands within the said railroad grant to which the right of such road or its successor has attached, then upon proof thereof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, and the due relinquishment of the prior railroad right, other lands may be selected in lieu thereof as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I think this is rather a dangerous provision. It is provided in the amendment that in all cases where there are settlers on the lands of the railroad, whether surveyed or not surveyed, the settler may perfect his title with the Government direct, and the railroad shall have floating scrip, I do not know to what amount, but probably there would be a great deal of it. There might be several million acres of land which would be relinquished to the settlers, and the railroad or the grantees of the railroad would receive floating scrip.

I am very much opposed to floating scrip. We have seen the Valentine and other kinds of floating scrip, to be located on surveyed or unsurveyed land, used for very unworthy purposes. I recollect that but a short time ago a large portion of the city of Chicago was claimed under some of this floating scrip. You can locate it anywhere, and it becomes very valuable. It can be used on surveyed or unsurveyed land. They pick out a little piece here and a little piece there which happens to be valuable by reason of its being settled on or from other circumstances. That has been the bane of the public-land laws. It was the great evil which grew up under a system that prevailed in the early times, where lands after they had been surveyed any length of time were offered for sale. The surveys were pushed ahead of settlement and the lands were offered for sale, and after having been offered for sale, then they would become subject to private entry. That was one plan.

There was another one to get out floating scrip. There was a lot of Sioux scrip floated all over the country. There were various kinds of scrip. That is a pretty large scheme of floating scrip. It is true it is only to be located in the States through which this railroad goes, but I believe the railroad operates in Minnesota, North Dakota (I do not know whether it strikes South Dakota), Montana, Idaho, Washington, and Oregon, so that it makes a large area over which this floating scrip will be a great evil. I have no doubt that that scrip, the right to relocate, will in the course of a year or so be worth quite a sum. I have known it to sell as high as $50 an acre. Certainly it would be worth four or five times as much as the land is now worth. I do not think the Senators representing the States through which this road runs ought to allow it to be selected in that way. I have no objection to letting the settlers take this land and settle in this way, but I do object to this floating scrip, to be used in a general way.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this amendment might properly be denominated a bill of repose or a bill for the relief of settlers who have through inadvertence located upon certain parts of portions of the land grant subsequently determined to be the property of the railroad company.

In the State of Washington occurs the most conspicuous instance of the hardship flowing from the conditions we here seek to remedy. In that State, in what is known as the Palouse country, one of the most fertile and productive wheat regions in America, settlers, without previous notice of the railroad title, or believing in good faith they could complete their titles under the law, settled upon and improved a vast area of land on the odd-numbered sections. The Land Department subsequently held that the land grant had actually attached as a matter of law to the lands thus taken up and improved by those people in good faith. The consequence of this holding under the law involved each and every settler situated upon these odd-numbered sections in that country in a contest with a powerful corporation either in the Land Department of the Government or before the local courts.

A similar situation arose some years ago, about 1891, with reference to certain lands in the Red River Valley of the North. It was believed by the Land Department, and that Department so held for well nigh a quarter of a century, that the land grant did not extend to the west of the Red River; and so holding, the Government of the United States, acting through its properly constituted bureaus, caused patents to issue to settlers for a very large amount of land to which the railroad company claimed title under its grant. The Government patent had actually attached in that case.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I appreciate the importance of settling these titles. My objection is to this floating scrip. I think the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has an amendment to guard against that evil and make it satisfactory.

Mr. CARTER. To conclude the sentence, the Senator will recall the fact that in 1892 a special bill was passed allowing the grantee of this land-grant company on the Red River to select lands in lieu of those the Government had inadvertently patented to the settlers upon a relinquishment by the railroad company of their superior title to those lands. The act operated to the advantage of all and to the injury of none.

I agree with the Senator from Nevada that the issuance of floating scrip is not desirable, but it will be observed, I think, that through this amendment floating scrip will not be issued. When a piece of land is relinquished, the railroad company must take another piece of land in lieu by selection.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I desire to say merely a word on this matter, which probably in some respects to the State which I in part represent is one of the most important pieces of legislation ever proposed. I wish to state that for almost ten years, at least during my entire public career, I have endeavored to arrive at some solution of what is known as the lieu-land question in the State of Washington. As was very aptly stated by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], sixteen or eighteen years ago, when I first visited the Territory of Washington, the settlers came from the West to the East and not from the East to the West, and when they got outside the 40-mile strip, many of the settlers supposed they were out of the grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and they settled upon those lands. They are probably the most valuable of any portion of the grant to that company. They are lands which have been cultivated, occupied, inhabited for over twenty years; lands which are producing now and have produced upon an average 30 and 40 bushels of wheat to the acre, and which to-day are valued in our State at from thirty to fifty dollars per acre.

These men have gone there and taken these lands. They have converted a sea of grasses into a magnificent grain field. They have obtained no titles to their homes. They have been unable to obtain any title either from the Government of the United States or from the railroad company, as the matter has been in litigation for a period of over seventeen years and is now in litigation. Various attempts have been made from time to time to adjust this matter upon some compromise whereby the settler would receive title to his home and the railroad company would receive an equal quantity of land for relinquishing those lands to the United States.

Mr. President, I have given the matter some considerable labor and time, but never until recently have we been able to reach a conclusion in regard to it whereby the railroad company would consent to relinquish their land to the United States and take land in some other locality unoccupied, uninhabited, and unappropriated to indemnify them therefor. No longer ago than the 29th day of March, 1898, the Commissioner of the General Land Office decided one of these lieu land cases. At the city of North Yakima a man settled upon lieu lands, a quarter section, after the selection had been made by the company, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office now holds, as in every case it has been held, that if the settlement was made after the date of selection by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company the land would not inure to the settler.

Now, all the way across our State is this 10-mile strip, the most valuable agricultural lands, I think, west of the Mississippi River—lands which are cultivated, inhabited, and upon which the settler has his home. Now, this corporation comes forward and says, "We want a peace measure," as the Senator from Montana says; "we are tired of this litigation; we are willing to accept something of this character, and if it is passed, we will commence immediately to relinquish these valuable lands to settlers, giving them an opportunity to homestead the lands, and we in turn taking wherever we can find it an equal quantity of unoccupied and unappropriated nonmineral land." That is this proposition. That is all I am seeking to accomplish. It is to give title to these men, who for twenty years, have had their title, their homes, suspended in mid-air like Mohammed's coffin, unable to go in any direction or to secure any title whatever to their valuable holdings.

Mr. President, of course there are many things concerning this case which might be told—hardships to the settlers, their desire for an adjustment and adjudication of this matter. Some concessions must always be made in these matters. I have endeavored, so far as my labors are concerned, to do that which I thought would deal justly, fairly, and equitably with both sides of this question, and I am satisfied beyond doubt that if the amendment is adopted it will take forever out of the politics of our State this question and will give these people their homes and stop the harassment they have been under for these years. I take it for granted there are about 5,000 of these bona fide settlers in my State upon these lands. They are already holding meetings, already gathering together, trying to protect their homes, and I know nothing that the Congress of the United States could do which would do more good than in some manner to have this vexed question settled now and for all time. We have had it for twenty years. Of course the railroad company are not willing to give up their claim to these valuable lands which they have selected without being compensated in some manner or in some way.

There is another question. It is not possible—and I think any man who knows anything about the situation knows this is true—for the railway company to secure in any way or in any manner as valuable lands as they are relinquishing; but, as has been said, they want a peace measure; they are tired of this litigation; they want to get rid of it and give these people their homes, if they can possibly do so with justice to their own interests. This is a much vexed question, and I hope that we may take it up in some manner and dispose of it and let the lands be relinquished to the Government of the United States. The railroad company can not get a single acre for which it does not relinquish an equal quantity, and the land which they relinquish must be shown to be occupied, cultivated, and claimed by a bona fide settler. It is a peace measure, as has been stated very earnestly by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to submit an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and referred as indicated.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, there is another side to this question which has not been touched on. If the amendment of the committee is to prevail, I wish to offer an amendment to it, to protect other parties who have vested rights.

It seems that the Northern Pacific Company sold to settlers and gave them warranty deeds for property they did not own. That property has since become very valuable, and in many cases has been mortgaged and third and fourth parties have now acquired rights to it. I wish to protect those parties as against the change in name and the reorganization of the Northern Pacific Railroad, a national corporation, now changed to the Northern Pacific Railway Company, under a general charter of the State of Wisconsin. I will offer the amendment and have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 17, page 75, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That in every case of failure of the title to any lands heretofore conveyed or contracted to be sold by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company any and all rights of such purchaser or his assigns in respect of such land, or in respect of the failure of such title, or in respect to the liability of said Northern Pacific Railroad Company on said contracts for the sale of lands, and all judgments heretofore rendered against said Northern Pacific Railroad Company or against any of the receivers thereof, in any court of the United States or in any State court, on account of any such failure of title or on any covenants of warranty, shall survive and may be enforced against such successor company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company with the same force and effect and in the same manner as against the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow us to perfect the amendment first, and then his amendment to it may be taken up?

Mr. SEWELL. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to propose an amendment to obviate the objection made by the Senator from Nevada. On page 74, in the fourth line, after the word "issue," I move to insert:

To the railroad company surrendering the land hereinbefore mentioned.

It will not be floating scrip.

Mr. STEWART. The floating scrip gets into the hands of a whole lot of speculators and they run all over the country. This is to be issued now directly to the railroad company, and that avoids the objection.

Mr. TELLER. If that is accepted, there will be no objection on the ground stated by the Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "issue," in line 4, page 74, it is proposed to insert:

To the railroad company surrendering the land hereinbefore mentioned.

So as to read:

And patent shall issue to the railroad company surrendering the land hereinbefore mentioned.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that may not be the party to whom the grant was made; it may be the successor; but the company which surrenders the land ought to be allowed to take the patent. I hope the amendment to the amendment will be adopted. Then the Senator from New Jersey can offer his amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I see no objection to the amendment, if it will accomplish what the Senator purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. This provision affects lands in several States. I have been informed that as the phraseology now stands it may interfere with conflicting grants. I think that should not be. We should not have two or three railroads claiming the same land. Therefore I propose, after line 3, on page 74, to insert:

But not within either the granted or indemnity limits of any land grant to any other railroad company.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I am very doubtful about the propriety of this legislation at all, first because of the objection urged by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], that it constitutes a floating grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company of several million acres of land which may be located anywhere within any of the States and Territories through which the railroad runs. It is, of course, desirable to quiet the title of settlers in the several States through which the road runs to lands which are now in conflict between them and the railroad company. To that extent the amendment is meritorious in my judgment, but it seems to me to be going a very long way indeed and to be paying a very high price indeed for quieting the rights of settlers on the land to give a new, independent grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company of several million acres of land located anywhere within any of the States or Territories through which the road runs.

I understand there are some 4,000 contests between the railroad company and settlers in the State of Washington. I do not know how many thousand contests there are in the other States through which the road runs, but the amount of land involved in the State of Washington would be in the neighborhood of three-quarters of a million acres, each one of the settlers having a claim for 160 acres. If there are as much more involved in each of the States and Territories, it would amount, as I said, to a floating grant of several million acres locatable anywhere within the discretion of the railroad company in any of the States and Territories through which the road runs. I am not prepared to urge this objection, however, against this proposed legislation if it can be properly amended in a way that I shall suggest.

There is another objection to the legislation. There is a very general contention throughout the West, in the States interested in this land grant, that the new company—the Northern Pacific Railway Company—which purchased the rights of the old Northern Railroad Company under the recent foreclosure proceedings in the United States courts, does not become the lawful successor of the old company in the original land grant. This has become something of a public question in those States. In my own State the legislature has appointed a special committee to investigate and take advice as to whether the new Northern Pacific Railway Company is the lawful successor of the old Northern Railroad Company in this land grant. They are now proceeding with that work. They have taken legal advice and are to report to the legislature next winter, with a view of having them memorialize

Congress on the subject for some action to have that legal controversy determined.

If this legislation passes in the language in which it is framed, it will be a Congressional recognition of the fact that the new company is the lawful successor of the old company to this railroad land grant. I feel compelled, in deference to the action taken in my State and to the very general public sentiment there, to say that this legislation ought not to pass unless it can be amended in that respect. I have drawn an amendment which appreciably diminishes any evil effects, if there be any, of this legislation, and that amendment I propose to offer. If the Senate is disposed to accept it, I shall interpose no further objection to the proposed legislation; but I understand that this is new legislation, not germane to anything in the appropriation bill as it came to us from the House, and that it is subject to a point of order under the third subdivision of Rule XVI. Unless the proposed legislation can be amended in such way as to obviate the objections which I have in mind, I shall feel compelled to reserve to myself the right to insist on the point of order against the amendment. The first amendment which I offer I will send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 75, at the end of line 17, insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as intended or having the effect to recognize the Northern Pacific Railway Company as the lawful successor of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the ownership of the lands granted by the United States to the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company under and by virtue of foreclosure proceedings against said Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the courts of the United States, but the legal question whether the said Northern Pacific Railway Company is such lawful successor of said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, should such question be raised, shall be determined by any court in which the same shall be pending wholly without reference to the provisions of this act.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask that my amendment be taken up previous to that amendment. I have no doubt the chairman of the committee will accept it.

Mr. TURNER. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will waive that.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no power to accept any amendment. The committee amendments proposed must be submitted to the Senate, but these amendments are as much in order as the amendment proposed by the committee. I will say in behalf of the committee that the amendment was put on the bill because there was a general request for it from the States affected by the contention between these settlers and the railroad company.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. And further, I will state, in addition to what the Senator from Iowa has said, the proposed legislation received the favorable consideration of the Committee on Public Lands, which went very thoroughly into the question.

Mr. SEWELL. The gentlemen from the Northwest forget that this whole subject can be stricken out on a point of order. I do not wish to interfere at all with the many good things they desire to accomplish, but I take it there is no objection either to the amendment of the Senator from Washington or my own.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the purpose of the amendment presented by the Senator from Washington to be to preserve the legal status of the successor of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company without interference by legislation of any kind or character. I am advised by the Senator from New Jersey that the purpose of his amendment is to avoid any possible prejudice in the courts of justice either for or against the successor of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in determining the liability of that successor for the judgments rendered or that may hereafter be rendered against its predecessor in interest.

The Committee on Public Lands in the consideration of this matter very carefully avoided employing any phraseology in the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations that could directly or inferentially add to or subtract from the legal liability of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, the successor in interest of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. It was far from the purpose of the committee to undertake by or through this amendment to interfere with the rights of parties now in court or who may hereafter appeal to the courts for the adjudication of their rights as between these two corporations.

The amendment of the Senator from Washington is offered by him not, I believe, because of anything appearing on the face of the amendment as reported by the Committee on Appropriations, but through a superabundance of caution, for the purpose of avoiding the possibility of any such inference being drawn. In view of the fact that that is in harmony with the purpose of the Committee on Public Lands and likewise the Committee on Appropriations, I may well say we have no objection to the matter going before the committee of conference of the two Houses; nor have I objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Jersey, for the purpose, I understand, as asserted by him, is merely to provide that the statu quo shall be preserved as between all parties claiming or asserting rights against the new company on account of any liability arising out of the existence and the operations of the old company through the purchase by the new company of its property at a judicial sale.

Mr. WILSON. What disposition has been made of the amendments to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. They are still pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments to the amendment are pending. No point of order has been raised, the Chair will state to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. WILSON. If I may take a moment, I should like to have, with the consent of the Senate, a brief synopsis of the decision that has been made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office inserted as a part of my remarks. I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate to have the decision read unless the Senate desires to hear it. It is a very important decision, I will say, and affects hundreds of families in their homes. It virtually decides that the lieu-land selections of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company made prior to 1885 are valid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the matter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LIEU LAND DECISION—NORTHERN PACIFIC SELECTION OF THIRTEEN YEARS AGO IS HELD VALID—SO COMMISSIONER HOLDS—HUNDREDS OF SETTLERS WILL LOSE THEIR HOMES AND IMPROVEMENTS—WAS IN HAGAN CASE—VICTORY FOR THE RAILROAD.

March 5 the Commissioner of the General Land Office rendered a decision on Northern Pacific lieu lands that in effect takes the homes from hundreds of settlers along the line of that road.

Through the local land office alone it is said over 100 applications have been made by persons seeking title from the Government to lands on which they had settled and made improvements. Under this decision the land goes to the railroad company.

The decision was made in the case of Nels H. Hagan against the railway company, involving 160 acres in section 5, township 26, range 33. The local office refused the entry on the ground that the land was covered by the railroad lieu land selection of 1885. An appeal was taken to the Commissioner, whose decision affirming the ruling of the local office was received yesterday.

Among the reasons urged by the claimant why his entry should be allowed was that the original lieu land selection of the company did not state the particular lands the lands in the list were in lieu of. Another reason was that lieu lands had been selected in one State for losses in another, and another was that lieu lands were claimed for losses in the Yakima Indian Reservation.

The Commissioner holds that the selection did not need to show the list of losses, in that it was made in exact accordance with instructions from the Secretary of the Interior. He also holds that lieu lands can be taken in one State for losses in another, and that lieu lands can be taken for losses in Indian reservations. The chief feature of the decision is, however, that the company's lieu land selections of 1885 are valid.

Under this ruling a settler must show settlement on the land prior to that year. The scores of settlers who entered on the land later, and who, like Mr. Hagan, sought to enter the land, were refused, and appealed, may confidently expect a decision similar to Mr. Hagan's when their cases are reached. The effects of the decision are far-reaching, as it is said many such settlers have made valuable improvements, which of course they will lose.

Mr. WILSON. I also desire to publish with my remarks a brief statement by the Secretary of the Interior recommending this proposed legislation.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words concerning my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington does not object to the publication of the paper referred to by his colleague?

Mr. TURNER. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 12, 1898.

SIR: Pursuant to your reference of the 11th instant, I have considered the "amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. WILSON to the bill (H. R. ——) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1899," and I beg to say that the records of the Land Department show that the enactment of the provisions of this amendment will enable a great number of deserving settlers within the limits of the several railroad grants to obtain title to the lands settled upon, occupied, or improved by them. Apparently in good faith, but without right, these settlers entered upon these lands after the right of the railroad company under its grant had attached. In order to free the land from the existing claim thereto under the railroad grant, this proposed amendment provides that the railroad company upon relinquishing its claim shall be permitted to select in lieu of the land so relinquished an equal quantity of other public land not mineral and free from other claims.

I recommend that the amendment be amended by adding in line 6, after the word "section," the words "or part thereof." Since homestead and some of the other claims initiated under the public-land laws are limited to a quarter section, the proposed amendment will hardly accomplish its purpose unless it authorizes the railroad company to relinquish a part of a section as well as an entire section.

I further recommend that the proposed amendment be amended in line 7 by inserting, after the word "limits," the words "to which the right of the grantee shall have attached either by definite location or by selection and." The purpose of this amendment is to confine the relinquishing privileges of the railroad company to those lands only to which it has a claim and respecting which a relinquishment is necessary in order that the Government may deal with the settler or occupant.

I further recommend that the proposed amendment be further amended, in line 12, by inserting after the word "domain" the words "or which may at the time be included within any public reservation surveyed or unsurveyed."

Some of the lands to which some of the railroads have an established right under granting acts have been included within public reservations, and in order that the United States may have full control over such reservations and may thereby be enabled to accomplish the purpose for which the same are established, it will be necessary for it to obtain complete title to all the lands embraced therein. The provision in the sundry civil act of June 4, 1897, authorized settlers having claims to lands within such reservations to release the same and take other lands in lieu of those relinquished, and I respectfully suggest that the same provision should be made with reference to railroad lands in such reservations. I recommend the enactment of the Wilson amendment with the changes suggested.

Very respectfully,

C. N. BLISS, Secretary.

Hon. HENRY C. HANSBROUGH,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 17, 1898.

SIR: Under your reference of the 16th instant, I have considered the amendment offered by Senator WILSON to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 8428), and intended to amend the act of June 22, 1874, for the relief of settlers upon railroad lands. The provisions of the proposed amendment meet with my full approval, and I recommend that they be enacted into law.

Very respectfully,

C. N. BLISS, Secretary.

Hon. HENRY C. HANSBROUGH,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

Mr. TURNER. I wish to say in response to the remarks of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] that my amendment is not at all superabundant or drawn out of excess of caution. If I know anything about the language of statutes and the way courts construe them, the legislation, if it passes as it is drawn, will amount to a legislative recognition of the Northern Pacific Railway Company as the successor in interest of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the land grant to the latter road. Its right as the lawful successor is being bitterly contested in my State. The legislature of that State has taken action on the subject. In order to preserve the status quo and prevent any implication of that kind from being used in aid of the contention of the reorganized company, the proviso which I have offered is, in my judgment, absolutely essential.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] to the amendment of the committee is now in order. It will be again read.

Mr. CARTER. It has been read.

Mr. SEWELL. It has been read and there is no objection to it.

Mr. ALLEN. What is that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. Add, at the end of the committee amendment as amended, the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That in every case of failure of the title to any lands heretofore conveyed or contracted to be sold by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, any and all rights of such purchaser or his assigns in respect of such land, or in respect of the failure of such title, or in respect to——

Mr. ALLEN. It is not necessary to read any further. I simply wanted to know the general nature of the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURNER. I move to insert after the word "reserved," in line 1, page 74:

And not more valuable for timber than for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. Should it not read for agricultural or other purposes?

Mr. TURNER. I have phrased it "for other purposes." I will use the word "agricultural," so as to read "for agricultural purposes." I think that is better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "reserved," in line 1, page 74, insert:

And not more valuable for timber than for agricultural purposes.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURNER. I will offer another amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 74, line 3, after the word "Territory," strike out the words:

Into which such railroad grant extends, and patent shall issue to the railroad company surrendering the land hereinbefore mentioned for the land so selected as though it had been originally granted.

And insert in lieu thereof:

Where the lands surrendered are situated and the right of said railroad grantee or its successor in interest shall attach to said land to the same extent as to the lands surrendered.

Mr. TURNER. That amendment is absolutely necessary to conform to the proviso which has just been adopted and also for the purpose, if it should be the sense of the Senate that that purpose ought to be accomplished, of to some extent limiting the extent of this floating grant. The original legislation provides that the lieu lands may be taken anywhere in the State or Territory through which the road runs. The amendment which I have offered limits the right to take lands to the particular State where the lands are surrendered. For instance, I do not think the State of Washington, which desires that its public lands shall be kept for actual settlers, ought to have those public lands subject to be depleted by selections by the railroad company for lands surrendered in Montana or Idaho or Dakota.

That is one object of the amendment. The other is to prevent the implication that immediately upon the selection the lands may be patented to the railroad company. In the proviso it is provided that they shall hold the lieu lands subject to all the objections to which they took the original lands, but this legislation provides that patents shall issue for the lands. I simply want to avoid the implication that their right to select lieu lands is any better than their right to the original lands.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment to the amendment may be read in connection with the original amendment, beginning with line 1 on page 74.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The SECRETARY. If amended, the amendment of the committee would read:

And free from valid adverse claim at the time of such selection, situated within any State or Territory where the lands surrendered are situated, and the right of said railroad grantee or its successor in interest shall attach to said land to the same extent as to the lands surrendered; but all sections of unsurveyed lands, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Washington that his amendment strikes out what I think is a valuable amendment, inserted on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. TURNER. I did not desire to strike out the Senator's amendment. I had drawn my amendment before that amendment was offered. I should like to preserve that in some way, but I think the Senate will agree that the proviso is a desirable amendment, provided that patents shall issue.

Mr. ALLISON. As far as I am concerned, I will not object to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Washington, and if it is not found to correspond with the other portions of the bill after the whole is printed, we can correct it in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURNER. There is one other amendment that I desire to offer, to make the phraseology of the bill correspond with my proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the word "select," in line 7, page 75, down to the word "lands," in line 8, on the same page, and insert in lieu thereof the words:

And its right thereto shall attach to the same extent as to the lands surrendered.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment relating to the Northern Pacific Railroad as it now stands, with the amendments which have been adopted, may be printed in the RECORD to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

The amendment referred to as amended is as follows:

That where prior to the approval of this act the whole or any part of an odd-numbered section, in either the granted or indemnity limits of the land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, to which the right of such grantee or its lawful successor has attached by definite location or lawful selection, has been purchased directly from the United States or settled upon and claimed in good faith by any qualified settler under color of title or claim of right under any law of the United States or any ruling of the Land Department, the railroad grantee or its successor in interest, upon a proper relinquishment thereof, shall be entitled to select in lieu of the land relinquished an equal quantity of public lands, surveyed or unsurveyed, not mineral or reserved, and not more valuable for timber than for agricultural purposes, and free from valid adverse claim at the time of such selection, situated within any State or Territory where the lands surrendered are situated, and the right of said railroad grantee or its successor in interest shall attach to said land to the same extent as to the lands surrendered; but all selections of unsurveyed lands shall be of odd-numbered sections to be identified by the survey when made, and patent therefor shall not issue until after the survey: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain, and, as soon as conveniently may be done, cause to be prepared and delivered to the said railroad grantee or its successor in interest a list of the several tracts which have been purchased or settled upon or occupied as aforesaid, and are now claimed by said purchasers or occupants, their heirs or assigns, according to the smallest Government subdivisions, and within a reasonable time after the receipt by the said railroad grantee or its successor in interest of the said list it shall execute under its corporate seal and deliver to the Secretary of the Interior its deed of conveyance releasing to the United States all its claims upon the lands described in said list, whereupon all the right, title, and interest of the said railroad grantee or its successor in interest to each of said tracts shall revert to the United States, and such tracts shall be treated, under the laws thereof, in the same manner as if no rights thereto had ever vested in the said railroad grantee, and all qualified persons who have occupied and may be on said lands as herein provided, or who have purchased said lands in good faith as aforesaid, their heirs or assigns, shall be permitted to perfect their titles to said lands according to law as if said grant had never been made; and upon such relinquishment the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company or its lawful successor in interest may proceed to select, and its right thereto shall attach to the same extent as to the lands surrendered, lands in lieu of those relinquished in the manner hereinbefore provided: And provided further, That whenever any qualified settler shall in good faith make settlement in pursuance of existing law upon any odd-numbered sections of unsurveyed public lands within the said railroad grant to which the right of such road or its successor has attached, then upon proof thereof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, and the due relinquishment of the prior railroad right, other lands may be selected in lieu thereof as hereinbefore provided.

And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as intended or having the effect to recognize the Northern Pacific Railway Company as the lawful successor of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the ownership of the lands granted by the United States to the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, under and by virtue of foreclosure proceedings against said Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the courts of the United States, but the legal question whether the said Northern Pacific Railway Company is such lawful successor of said Northern Railroad Company, should such question be raised, shall be determined by any court in which the same shall be pending, wholly without reference to the provisions of this act.

And provided further, That in every case of failure of the title to any lands heretofore conveyed or contracted to be sold by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, any and all rights of such purchaser or his assigns in respect of such land, or in respect of the failure of such title, or in respect to the liability of said Northern Pacific Railroad Company on said contracts for the sale of lands, and all judgments heretofore rendered against said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, or against any of the receivers thereof, in any court of the United States or in any State court, on account of any such failure of title, or on any covenants of warranty, shall survive and may be enforced against such successor company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company with the same force and effect and in the same manner as against the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill to follow the amendment which has just been adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. As a part of that amendment?

Mr. PETTIGREW. No.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I hope the Senator will withhold it until the committee amendments have been acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments are first in order.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well; I will withdraw the amendment for the present, and offer it after the committee amendments shall have been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota withdraws the amendment for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the following clause on page 76:

For general expenses of the Geological Survey: For the Geological Survey and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and the products of the national domain, and to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, including the pay of temporary employees in the field and office, and all other necessary expenses, including telegrams, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, namely.

Mr. WILSON. For information, Mr. President—it is not in order, perhaps, at this point, but for information—I should like to understand how it is that the Geological Bureau is able to make and print a few maps, very sacred maps, and then, if you want one for a constituent, you are unable to get it?

That Bureau has recently published a map under some appropriation, I do not know what, relative to Alaska and the gold-bearing fields of Alaska. The minute they published the map and history of the gold-bearing fields of Alaska they in some manner or in some way unknown to me announced it to the entire nation, and I immediately commenced to receive, as doubtless other Senators have from citizens of their States, letters from people in my State. They want these maps, and they tell me in their letters that the Geological Survey has announced that they have printed a certain map, or a certain history of the gold-bearing fields of Alaska, that it is very valuable, and they want it. You send down to the Geological Bureau—which, in my judgment, is more busily engaged in ascertaining whether the birds in prehistoric times existed with or without teeth than in anything else—and you are told you can not have one. I want to understand why they give out such information.

I want to understand why they announce all over the country that they have in preparation or that they have made maps or have edited maps. I understand we have a map man down in the Geological Bureau whose whole duty is to edit maps, and he gets $3,500 a year just for looking at them.

It seems to me that this evil ought to stop. It seems to me that if there is any place—I know I am not going to accomplish anything by what I am saying—if there is any place in this Government where reasonable economy might be practiced, it is in the Geological Bureau. They are chasing all around this country, from Dan to Beersheba and from Puget Sound clear East, looking after this, that, and the other, talking about geological strata and all that sort of thing, and getting out reports and maps; and if you want one, you can not get it.

Where do they get the money to print these reports and maps? Why do they announce to the public that they have such reports and maps, and thus annoy, harass, and bedevil everybody in public life in trying to secure one? I venture to say that I have had a hundred letters asking for the history of the gold fields of Alaska. I can not answer them. I can not get one of those maps or one of those histories. It seems that these gentlemen, these paleontologists, or whatever they may be called, and this Geological Bureau have grown and grown and grown, until they have got beyond our reach, and I for one am simply tired of voting these salaries. When you send to that Bureau to get anything which they publish, you are told you can not have it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think if the Senator will apply for a few maps, he can get them to-morrow morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON. Well, now, Mr. President, there it is again. No Western man can rise in this Senate and complain of anything but what some gentleman from New England who has all the information in the United States [laughter]—New England knows it all; it has, apparently, some telephonic communication with the Geological Bureau—when I rise here and complain of an abuse, immediately the honorable Senator from New Hampshire rises and gives me the information that I can obtain those maps.

Mr. CHANDLER. Undoubtedly you can.

Mr. WILSON. Well, I will state to the Senator for his information, I was able to secure just one copy. What I want to know is where they get the money, who appropriates the money, and what it is appropriated for? If they can not give us these maps or this history of the gold-bearing fields of Alaska, why do they announce to the public that they have them? That is what I would like to know.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not able to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has volunteered very kindly to give me information, and I am always glad to hear him, because he has much more information in regard to the Departments here than I have, as he has been so long in the public service. My honorable friend from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has also suggested to me that I can have all the maps I want. I am not talking about the seventy-five maps assigned to Senators. I am talking about a particular map which is said to have been made relative to the gold-bearing fields of Alaska, not the seventy-five maps assigned to each Senator.

When they made that map, let me say, they sat down in the editing department of the Geological Bureau, and they said there was gold here, mountains there, and rivers there, and made a map; and I will venture the assertion that they did not have one particle of information in regard to Alaska, and that nobody can tell anything about the map now that it has been made.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there ought to be some information in the Geological Survey respecting Alaska, for we have had for two or three years surveying parties in that Territory. The Geological Survey can only make such publications as Congress authorizes by appropriations made from time to time.

Respecting the distribution of the maps and publications of the Geological Survey, I will state that they are under the same regulations as the distribution of other documents, so far as I know. The printing act, which was passed in 1895, regulates chiefly the distribution of such documents. I have that law here. Section 52 provides:

The Public Printer shall sell, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, to any person or persons who may apply, additional or duplicate stereotype or electrotype plates from which any Government publication is printed.

He may also sell any of such Government publications at cost, with 10 per cent added. So the only way to secure an extra supply of these maps, in addition to the 75, or whatever the number may be, which is allotted to each Senator and Representative, is to purchase them as other public documents are purchased.

Mr. ALLEN. Why should there not be some provision for the free distribution of a portion of these maps?

Mr. ALLISON. I think these maps are valuable, and it rests with the Committee on Printing or with the Senator to offer a resolution to print 100,000 additional copies, or whatever number may be desired. Otherwise, I know of no way whereby it can be done. Certainly the Director of the Geological Survey has no power to furnish maps gratuitously, nor has the Public Printer any authority to do so, nor has the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ALLEN. There is a great deal of truth in what the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] has said.

Mr. ALLISON. There seems to be.

Mr. ALLEN. I observe in the country papers of my State statements that upon sending to Washington to certain places you can get such and such maps; that is, these particular geological maps; and it is known there before it is known to me and before it is known to my associates.

Mr. ALLISON. The difficulty, I take it, is that the maps that are advertised for distribution are soon exhausted. I think the Senator from Nebraska has had his proper supply. I know I have had a number of those maps and have circulated them. They came to me as other public documents.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not talking about the ordinary maps which are distributed freely and without price.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not speaking of them, either. I am speaking of the Alaskan maps.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not referring to the technical maps especially, but to the maps relating to Alaska.

Mr. PERKINS. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I will state that I think there were 5,000 of those maps allotted to the Senate. At all events, our quota is 51 copies each. Each Senator has had 51 of those Alaskan maps allotted him, or they are to the credit of each Senator in the folding room. I have exhausted my quota, and several Senators—I think among them the junior Senator from Washington, perhaps—have requested other Senators to turn over to them some of their quota.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not speaking even about that; but why should this Government go into the occupation of selling maps and public documents as a vendor of peanuts would start his business on the street corners? If the documents are published for public information, why should not the taxpayers have them free of charge?

Mr. ALLISON. One difficulty about that is that we have by law restricted the number of these publications. The only way to have a full and perfectly free distribution of everything that is printed, and everything that ought to be printed, is simply to print without limitation of law.

Mr. ALLEN. There is only one way for a Senator to do when some of these documents which are written for are sold, as they frequently are, and that is to go and purchase them and send them to the applicants, or to inform them that the documents are not for free distribution. We can not do that.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator sees the difficulty. The other day we printed 2,000 copies of the report respecting the destruction of the battle ship Maine. It turned out that in a day or two those copies were exhausted. Yesterday we authorized the printing of 6,000 copies more, and the House of Representatives authorized the printing of 13,500. This required the concurrence of the two Houses, and we agreed to the resolution for that purpose this morning. So that now we have 13,500 additional copies of the report on the Maine. The Senator must know that these additional copies will be exhausted in three or four days, and also that in three or four weeks from now Senators will be requested for copies of that document.

Mr. ALLEN. I do know that, and I know the same will be true of any other valuable public document; but why have it go out to the country that these things can be obtained by writing to Washington for them, and then be under the necessity of informing the applicant that they are here for sale and not for free distribution, when he knows that many public documents are for public distribution?

Mr. ALLISON. That is one of the difficulties of misinformation or partial information. Those documents are here for distribution for a day or two, or a week or two, or a year or two, depending upon their value. When one edition is exhausted, we can, of course, authorize the publication of another. That seems to me to be the only way to do it.

Mr. ALLEN. It would be a great deal better to permit the Geological and Geodetic Survey to issue so many of these maps for free distribution under proper regulations; or, if there be a great public demand, to republish them for free distribution again——

Mr. ALLISON. That might be better.

Mr. ALLEN. Than to go into the delightful occupation of peddling them out for 4 or 5 cents apiece.

Mr. WILSON. I merely want to make myself fully understood. What I complain of is, to illustrate: The Geological Bureau have published a map or a report made, I think, by a gentleman by the name of Spurr, who is supposed to have visited Alaska and to have given some valuable information in regard to that section of our country. Immediately upon that report being published it went all over the western part of the country from the Geological Bureau that they had issued such a report. Then within a brief time I commenced receiving letters asking for copies of that report. I have been unable to obtain more than one copy; and to get that copy I had to state that I wanted it for myself. Chambers of commerce and citizens interested in Alaska in my State have been calling upon me for copies of the report, and I am unable to get any of them.

Now, what seems to me to be wrong is that, if the Geological Bureau have not these reports and maps for distribution, they ought not to announce to the general public that they have them. There is no reason in the world why the Geological Bureau should advertise itself in that direction. If they are unable to give us these reports when we call upon them for them, or to assign them to us, and have no appropriation for the purpose, they ought not to say anything about it; but they ought not to give it out to the country that they have such reports and then put us to the embarrassment of declining to send them to our constituents. I complain of that because I think it is wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 14, on page 76. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "United States Geological Survey," on page 76, line 17, to increase the appropriation "for topographic surveys in various portions of the United States" from $175,000 to $185,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 1, to increase the appropriation "for geological surveys in the various portions of the United States" from $100,000 to $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 17, to increase the appropriation "for the preparation of the illustrations of the Geological Survey" from $13,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 12, to increase the total appropriation for "the United States Geological Survey" from $641,100 to $673,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. Unless the Senator in charge of the bill desires to proceed with it further this evening, I shall move an executive session.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator for that purpose.

MONUMENT TO ALBERT PIKE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. Res. 178) granting permission for the erection of a monument or statue in Washington City, D. C., in honor of the late Albert Pike; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the joint resolution may be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That permission be, and is hereby, granted the Supreme Council of the Inspectors-General of the Thirty-third Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States of America to erect a monument or statue to the memory and in honor of Albert Pike in such place in the city of Washington, D. C., other than the Capitol or Library grounds, as shall be designated by the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, the Joint Committee on the Library, and the committee of the supreme council of said rite appointed by it for that purpose. The said monument or statue shall not cost less than $10,000, and to be presented to the people of the United States by said supreme council.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the joint resolution may be put upon its passage at this time. It carries no obligation on the part of the Government, no appropriation of money, or anything of that kind.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATORS OF ISAAC P. TICE AND OTHERS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2219) for the relief of the administrators of Isaac P. Tice, deceased, and others. It is a bill which has passed the Senate several times, and I am sure that it will not be objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at length.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to retry and determine according to law and in equity the case of the administrators of Isaac P. Tice, deceased, against the United States, decided by the Supreme Court at the October term, 1878, and also to try and determine according to law and in equity the claims of said Tice and others for money collected on account of the Tice meters, but not paid over to him or them under the regulations of the Treasury, or based on contract with the United States; and that in said retrial and trials the statute of limitations shall not be available to the United States against the rights and claims of the estate of said Tice and others: Provided, however, That on the retrials or trials of said cases the United States or the claimant or claimants may offer in evidence any evidence given and filed in the prior trial, and also the depositions of witnesses now on file in the Court of Claims or on the files of any of the committees of Congress in relation to the aforesaid matter, which may be introduced as evidence in case of the death or disability of the deponents, together with such other material evidence as the United States or the claimant or claimants may wish to introduce: Provided, however, That all such evidence and depositions, alluded to as aforesaid, shall be subject to all other legal objections, and the court shall render its judgment in favor of the administrators of said Tice, or in favor of the other persons or their estates, for such sums as may be found to be due and unpaid to said Tice or others on any of said accounts: Provided further, That either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the judgment of the said court.

Mr. ALLISON. I dislike to object to the consideration of the bill asked for by the Senator, but as I heard the bill read it occurred to me that it is too important to be passed without some debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that a similar bill has passed the Senate four or five different times, and it has passed the House of Representatives once or twice before, but not in the same session that it passed the Senate. The House has passed it at this present session, and I hope the Senator will not object to it. It has been discussed heretofore very fully.

Mr. ALLISON. I feel that I must object for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 6, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 5, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. FRANCIS RIVER, ARKANSAS.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to take up and consider at this time the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 5030) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the St. Francis River, in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say to the House that there are a number of bills for which unanimous consent is requested, and to which there is no opposition, like bridge bills, in a certain sense merely formal matters, formal action only being demanded of them, and the Chair would like to have an opportunity to dispose of some of these. Of course this is subject to the objection of any member.

Mr. BRUMM. I shall not object to any bridge bills which may be presented for consideration at this time, but will make objection to others.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I desire to ask unanimous consent to adopt the Senate amendment to the bill to which I have just referred.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendment will be read, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was read at length.

Mr. McEWAN. Does this, Mr. Speaker, cut off the right of objection?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not reserve the right of objection while the bill is passing. This bill is now on its passage, as there was practically no objection to its consideration. Does the gentleman desire an explanation?

Mr. McEWAN. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey desires an explanation of the bill.

Mr. McEWAN. I reserve all the rights to which I am entitled until I have had an explanation as to the bill.

Mr. McCULLOCH. This bill, I will state to the gentleman, passed the House some weeks ago and authorized the construction of a bridge across the St. Francis River, in Arkansas—a wagon bridge. It went to the Senate and was there amended by changing the name of the parties incorporating the same. I simply ask the House now to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. McEWAN. On the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas I withdraw the objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. McEWAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE OVER THE MISSOURI RIVER—COUNCIL BLUFFS.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7445) to amend "An act authorizing the construction of a railway, street railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr.," and to extend the time for the completion of the bridge therein provided for.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a railway, street-railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr.," be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That this act shall be null and void if construction of said bridge shall not be commenced on or before the 1st day of January, 1902, and be completed on or before the 1st day of July, 1903: Provided, That the navigation of the Missouri River shall not be obstructed by false works during the construction of the bridge."

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Add in line 6, after the word "Nebraska," the words "as amended by an act approved January 23, 1896."

Insert after the word "bridge," in line 5, on page 2, the words:

"And provided further, That such guide piers or dikes as may be required by the Secretary of War for the maintenance of a safe channel through the draw spaces as they are arranged, pending the construction of the permanent bridge, shall be at once built and maintained until they shall be no longer necessary."

Mr. McEWAN. I reserve the right of objection, Mr. Speaker. Probably the gentleman can give an explanation that will satisfy me. I would be very glad to know how long this extension of time is given. There ought to be some limit upon the time when this bridge is to be built.

Mr. BENNETT. I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER], who is able to inform the gentleman as to the facts.

Mr. MERCER. I desire to say to the gentleman from New Jersey that this bridge has been constructed for some time, but three of the approaches to the bridge are temporary. It has been found impossible to complete the bridge as originally planned because of the changes in the channel of the Missouri River. The bill now before the House, as amended by the suggestions of the War Department, will give these people an opportunity to construct the bridge permanently as originally planned, and this extension of time should be given.

Mr. McEWAN. What is the extension of time?

Mr. MERCER. This provides that the bridge shall be completed on or before the 1st day of July, 1903.

Mr. McEWAN. That is to say, there is an extension of five years given.

Mr. MERCER. There are, I will repeat to the gentleman, three temporary spans in this bridge, which were constructed to meet conditions then existing, and to give the company time to complete the carrying out of their original plan. The navigation of the river is, in reality, no more obstructed by these three temporary spans than it would have been had the whole bridge been completed according to the original plans.

Mr. McEWAN. I do not think the bill provides in effect what the gentleman suggests.

Mr. MERCER. Oh, yes; it does.

Mr. McEWAN. If so, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. MERCER. This bill provides that the company may go on and make the permanent structure as originally intended.

Mr. McEWAN. Then I will withdraw, if there is a time limit.

Mr. MERCER. There is a time limit.

The SPEAKER. Objection is withdrawn. Is there further objection to the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BENNETT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires that all requests for recognition at this time be confined to bridge bills.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE LOGGY BAYOU, IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3056) authorizing the Shreveport and Red River Valley Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Loggy Bayou, in Louisiana.

The bill was read. It provides that the Shreveport and Red River Valley Railway Company, a corporation created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Louisiana, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge across Loggy Bayou, in the State of Louisiana, at such point suitable to the interests of navigation as may hereafter be selected by said railway company for crossing said bayou with its railroad line.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the engrossed copy of the Senate bill is not here.

Mr. OGDEN. Then I move to substitute the House bill, which is identical.

The SPEAKER. That will not help the gentleman in a parliamentary point of view at all. The Senate bill has been sent for, and probably will be here in a very short time.

Subsequently,

The SPEAKER said: The bill which was presented by the gentleman from Louisiana has been received. The bill having been read, is there objection to its present consideration?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OGDEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ROUGE RIVER, MICHIGAN.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 105) relative to the appropriation for the Rouge River, Michigan.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the Rouge River, Michigan, to be dredged between the Wabash Bridge to Maples Road, with the view of obtaining a 13-foot channel (in accordance with the letter of G. J. Lydecker, lieutenant-colonel, Corps of Engineers, dated November 20, 1897), at an expense not to exceed $5,000, to be paid out of the appropriation already available for the improvement of that stream.

Mr. BRUMM. I reserve the right to object to that.

The SPEAKER. The right to object is reserved in all these cases. The Chair will see that the House has an opportunity to make objection if it desires. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SPALDING, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SURVEY OF CHARLESTON HARBOR.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to furnish the House of Representatives, at the earliest time practicable, such information as he may have regarding the possibility of providing deeper draft at the entrance into Charleston Harbor than is contemplated by the approved project for the improvement by jetties of the entrance to that harbor; and that he be requested further to submit a plan and estimate of the cost of securing a depth of not less than 26 feet at low water from the ocean to deep water inside the harbor.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I propose to offer an amendment to that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert in line 11, after the word "harbor," the words "and to report his opinion as to the advisability thereof."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution as amended?

There was no objection.

The amendment of Mr. ELLIOTT was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ELLIOTT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HUMBOLDT HARBOR, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BARHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 119, for the improvement of Humboldt Harbor, California.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to submit detailed estimates from information now on file of the costs for the proposed dredging and improvement of Humboldt Harbor, California, as contemplated by the river and harbor act of June 3, 1896, and by the report of Cassius E. Gillette, captain of engineers, submitted to Congress in the report of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to the consideration of that resolution.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BARHAM. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. BRUMM. I can not help it. I am asked all around to allow consideration of the same kind of thing. I ask for the regular order.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. DRIGGS.

JOHN P. THOMAS.

The next business reported from the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. 164) granting an increase of pension to John P. Thomas, with Senate amendments.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have tried to find the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLIS] who introduced that bill and who is interested in it, in order to know what his desires are, but I can not find him. At the present time he is engaged in committee, and if it is proper, I ask that the bill be passed by for the present.

The SPEAKER. It would require unanimous consent for the bill to be passed by.

Mr. RAY of New York. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed by.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York, that the bill remain on the Speaker's table? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ELWIN A. SCUTT.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York desire the bill which the gentleman from Oregon is interested in to still lie on the table?

Mr. RAY of New York. I do; I do not see the gentleman, and I desire to confer with him before a motion is made.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of taking up the Private Calendar, and pending that motion, I want to ask unanimous consent to limit debate on the unfinished business. The Committee on Claims this morning agreed that we would give an hour on each side for discussion of the unfinished business.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the unfinished business?

Mr. BRUMM. The Roach bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Did the minority consent to it?

Mr. BRUMM. Yes; that is the agreement we made.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of reports by the Committee on Claims, with Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

HEIRS OF JOHN ROACH.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar. The unfinished business is Senate bill 1116, to pay the heirs of the late John Roach, deceased, $330,151.42, for labor and material, dockage and detention, and occupation of yards and shops for the gunboats Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta.

By order of the House debate on the bill and amendments is limited to two hours.

Mr. DOCKERY. I thought limitation was only to the general debate, one hour on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the proposition as put by the Speaker to be on the bill and amendments.

Mr. BRUMM. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROBB].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri control the time on the other side?

Mr. ROBB. I control a part of it, I suppose; we shall arrange it among ourselves.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman from Missouri will control the time on the part of the opposition, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] in favor of the bill.

There was no objection.

[Mr. ROBB addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BRUMM. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR], in favor of the bill.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri has evidently mistaken some of the remarks I made when I had the floor on this bill before; and I desire to call attention to this, because our charges for damages to Mr. Roach are based upon this idea, as appears in the report. I will show you what the charge was:

The compensation paid as wages to this corps of men at the said Morgan Iron Works amounted to the sum of $3,721.64 for each month, and for the whole time of the unnecessary delay, to wit, January 23, 1886, to June 23, 1886, $18,608.20.

Mr. ROBB. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MINOR. No; I have but five minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.
Mr. MINOR (continuing)—

The compensation paid as wages to the corps of men at Chester amounted to the sum of $4,061.64 for each month, and for the whole time of the unnecessary delay, to wit, May 20, 1886, to June 21, 1887, $62,801.32.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there were only two points made against this bill. One was made, or attempted to be made, by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. ROBB. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. MINOR. I want my five minutes.

He stated that because the penalties in the contract were not enforced, we ought not to bring in a bill for damages. I want to say to the House now that there were no penalties included in the contract at all.

The only right the Government reserved was to enter upon and take charge of the works and complete the ships if Roach failed to do it. That is all there is stated in the contract; and it is stated by Government officials that they could not include a penalty, because they expected to run beyond the time fixed in the contract, namely, eighteen months, and that they certainly would need this extension of time—that there would be innumerable changes to be made from time to time as the work progressed, and that was the case.

Another point is attempted to be made that we are making this claim on the affidavit of two interested parties. We have absolutely excluded the statements and affidavits made by those interested parties, and have based this claim absolutely and solely upon the records found in the Navy Department.

Now, another thing. I want to say to the gentleman and to the House that the Government expected that they would be liable to damages, and the damages did occur in this case, to which Mr. Roach was justly entitled. Now, I will cite the statement made by the president of the advisory board, Admiral Simpson.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the date of that?
Mr. MINOR. January 14, 1885.
Mr. BUTLER. Before the death of Mr. Roach?
Mr. MINOR. Certainly.

NAVAL ADVISORY BOARD, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 14, 1885.

SIR: The breaking of one length of shafting in the Dolphin, the subsequent developments in the broken shaft, and the condemnation of the new shaft made to replace the broken one cause uncertainty as to the reliability of the other lengths of steel shafting on hand.

The only way of assuring the soundness of these shafts, or of determining their reliability to stand such strains as may be put upon them, is to subject them to a torsional test. This will be a novel experiment on such a large scale, and it will require much time and will involve a large expense.

The delay in the completion of the Boston, Atlanta, and Chicago has already extended to an unexpected and serious extent, and the present embarrassment in the status of the shafting is increasing it. There is every reason why this should be stopped. The board is unwilling to risk these shafts without satisfactory tests, and to wait for these tests, in the only way in which they can be made, is only to continue the delay, which, as the test is a new one, can not be limited in anticipation. In the meantime the country is waiting for the ships, the success of which is to mark an epoch in the rehabilitation of the Navy, and the contractor is subjected to unusual delays in completing other portions of the ships, endangering his credit on account of the large amount of money that he has locked up in the ships, and for which he will have a right to exact damages to a large amount, thus increasing the cost of the ships—

And that is what the Government had anticipated. It had anticipated that these delays that would occur from time to time by the changing of machinery, of the hull, etc., would carry it beyond the time provided in the contract, and that Roach would be entitled to damages. That is the statement of Admiral Simpson, the president of the advisory board that had charge of the construction of this ship. What say you to it?

The gentleman from Missouri says, "No." I assume that this House will take the judgment of Admiral Simpson, an experienced naval officer, rather than that of the gentleman from Missouri, in whose district I assume there is not water enough to float a polly wog—

The only way of relieving the present embarrassment in an expeditious manner is to equip the vessels for immediate use by providing them with iron shafting—

Precisely what Roach wanted all the time, when these naval constructors insisted on steel; and the steel shaft is what gave rise to the whole trouble—

About the manufacture of which there is no difficulty, and with which they will be provided with shafting second only to good cast steel.

This act of the board will relieve the deadlock, will equip the ships, and relieve the contractor, and will save expense that must be incurred in the way of damages for unusual delay.

The steel shafts will, however, still be on hand. These must be tested. Those that fail should be returned to the contractor, crediting the cost of the steel shaft against the price of the iron ones. Those that stand the test must be paid for as duplicate shafting.

If this system of tests shall succeed, it will establish a standard of test for the future for steel shafting, which the Government will require in the future.

The board therefore requests that preliminary to any definite recommendations from the board that Mr. John Roach be asked to submit a certified statement of the actual cost of the proposed iron shafts for the Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta, and of the present steel shafts to date.

Very respectfully,

E. SIMPSON,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy, President of the Board.

Hon. W. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. BRUMM. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LOW.]

Mr. LOW. Mr. Chairman, I do not know who introduced this bill to the House, but I did know John Roach, and I do know that the Government wantonly and cruelly wronged this great shipbuilder by condemning the Dolphin (a new vessel for the Government that had just been launched and completed) and making null and void all the contracts he had made with the previous Administration, thus forcing him into bankruptcy.

Now, gentlemen, I do not know what the specific character of those contracts were, but it has been stated, and ably so, by other gentlemen on the floor. But I would like to call members' attention to the Dolphin incident. They condemned the Dolphin for being structurally weak. Condemnation means throwing one side as entirely useless, and yet very singularly the Government sent her down the coast somewhere below Hatteras on a trial trip.

She returned, and the officers on board who went down on that trial trip reported that it would take $25,000 to put her in a suitable condition to go to sea. That $25,000 was taken off the amount that Roach received from the Government for the building of the vessel. John Roach at that time was absolutely helpless. The strong hand of the Government was on his shoulders ready to crush him, and he settled on the Government's basis.

Now, follow it a little further. The Government started the Dolphin on a trip around the world, and, mind you, the Government never spent one dollar of the $25,000 to strengthen her which this board claimed she needed. She made a voyage around the world and was gone eighteen months, and during that time she ran over 58,000 miles, and stood the best test in the world for vessels. She encountered gales of wind and all kinds of tempestuous seas. She returned back to port, and upon examination not a scintilla of evidence was discovered justifying the decision that she was structurally weak.

Every beam, every stanchion was examined fore and aft of that vessel, and she did not show one particle of gauge. She was pronounced structurally strong and capable of any service, and John Roach's reputation and honor were vindicated. But it came too late. The cruel wound given him by his own Government was beyond human aid, and a broken heart made him an easy prey for death's messenger.

The claimants, "the legitimate ones," are before Congress to-day, not asking for a gift, but appealing for a just claim; and had the Government been as true, honest, and faithful to John Roach and his contracts as John Roach was to the Government in completing and making his covenants all right, this claim would not have been in Congress to-day. I cite this special incident of the Dolphin to show you how absolutely wrong were they in making the report that they did. It is a well-known fact throughout life in all professions and in every calling it is the strong that always crushes the weak. Such was this case. If there is a just claim that this Government owes, it is the one that is now before this House for discussion.

Mr. LOVE. Will the gentleman answer a question?
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.
Mr. BRUMM. I will surrender another minute for the gentleman from New York to answer a question.
Mr. LOVE. I want to ask why this claim was not sent to the Court of Claims?
Mr. BUTLER. Why did not the Methodist Church claim go before the Court of Claims? Because you never get them out of there.
Mr. LOVE. The gentleman need not show so much temper about it. I merely asked the gentleman from New York [Mr. LOW] a question for information, which I am sure that he would have courteously answered if you had permitted him.
Mr. LOW. Every effort has been made in this case. I have been in Congress three years, and there is one thing among others that I have learned, and that is, that whether a claim is just or unjust, whether a bill is a private bill or a public bill, whether it carries an appropriation or not, the same long fight has to be made in order to pass it through Congress.
Mr. ROBB. I now yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY].

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, having unbounded confidence in the absolute good intentions of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR] who reported this bill, and having a very sincere regard for his judgment when this bill was before the House on a former occasion, I paid very particular attention to what he had to say in advocacy of the bill, and since that time I have read his speech in the RECORD, because I wanted to find out for myself from the gentleman, who above all others is informed upon this question, what were the facts which warrant the committee in reporting this bill appropriating $330,000.

As has been stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin, he has taken a deep interest in the bill. He has reported it twice, and I think if there is anyone here who knows the facts in regard to the bill, it is the gentleman from Wisconsin who reported it. But I am sorry to say that I did not gain from the speech of my friend the evidence or the facts justifying me in supporting the bill, for almost the entire speech was taken up in pronouncing a most eloquent eulogy upon John Roach.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I would not take one laurel from the wreath in which he entwined the memory of John Roach. From what I have known of John Roach and what I can learn of him, although an adopted citizen, he was an American of whom we might be justly proud. But does the fact that John Roach lived an honored man, does the fact that he is entitled to our esteem and confidence and that we may honor his memory—does that fact alone show that this Congress should appropriate $330,000 upon the claim of his executors?

My friend from Wisconsin, in the course of what he had to say—I read from the RECORD—stated that he only claimed compensation from the Government from the time that the work commenced, November 9, 1885, to the respective dates of the completion of these vessels. Now, if my friend from Wisconsin will give me his attention for a moment—I will not weary him by going over the whole statement which has been furnished by my friend from Missouri [Mr. ROBB]—I wish to give simply an illustration of the fact that the bill as reported is really a fraud upon the Government; that it provides for the payment of a larger sum even than the report states ought to be paid. I know that this fact has escaped the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Take the case of the Atlanta. Referring to page 3 of the report, we find that the Atlanta was completed and removed from the Morgan Iron Works at New York June 28, 1886. The gentleman says in this report that the charge as made by the executors of John Roach for compensation on account of the Atlanta is for five months. The executors of John Roach have charged this Government for use and occupation of the yards for the Atlanta in New York for five months. Now let us see whether that is right. The Atlanta was completed June 28, 1886. The Government took possession of the yards, according to the gentleman from Wisconsin, November 9, 1885. This would leave the Government in the possession of those yards seven months and eighteen days.

Quintard and Weed, whose affidavits are filed here and whose statements constitute the only evidence of the time that it ought to have taken to complete the Atlanta, state that it ought to have taken four months; and for those four months neither the gentleman from Wisconsin nor anyone else claims that the Government ought to pay, because it has paid in the contract price. Deducting those four months from the seven months and eighteen days, we have as the time occupied by the Government longer than ought to have been occupied, as claimed by Quintard and Weed, three months and eighteen days; but this Government is charged in the bill with five months, the sum of $53,036.10. The Government is, therefore, improperly charged the sum of $14,850, or more than one-fourth of the amount the gentleman from Wisconsin in his report gives as the sum due to the executors of John Roach.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman inform us whether this claim has ever been before the Court of Claims or any other judicial tribunal?

Mr. RIXEY. It has not. I will refer again to that point before I get through.

Mr. KELLEY. Can the gentleman tell us anything about the amount that is to be paid as attorneys' fees, provided this claim is gotten through Congress?

Mr. RIXEY. I know nothing about that—nothing in the world.

Mr. BRUMM. You certainly know whether there is any provision for attorneys' fees.

Mr. RIXEY. I supposed the gentleman meant what proportion of the claim would go to the attorneys.

Mr. KELLEY. Exactly.

Mr. RIXEY. I know nothing about that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this statement in regard to the Atlanta, showing that the amount which this bill proposes to pay on account of that vessel is one-fourth more than it ought to be, is not correct, I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, or any other gentleman who may wish to interrupt me, to show that I am in error. [A pause.] If, then, I am right in this statement, there is a mistake in regard to this one vessel of more than 25 per cent.

What is the mistake in regard to the whole claim of $330,000? My friend from Missouri—I will not go over his figures—says that he has demonstrated to the House—and I have no doubt it is true—that according to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin there is an error of $109,000 against the Government. In addition to this, there can be no answer to the statement I have just made, and I challenge any gentleman to show wherein there is any error in that statement.

When this matter was before the House several weeks ago, and the question was being considered as to this alleged unusual delay, this interruption occurred:

> Mr. LOW. Allow me to make this suggestion: The very moment the Government took charge of that shipyard it ceased to be a private yard and became a Government yard, the employees working only eight hours a day, while in a private yard they worked ten hours a day.

In other words, John Roach could work his hands ten hours a day, but the Government under the law could not work its employees more than eight hours a day. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LOW], who has spoken here to-day in advocacy of this bill, undertakes to explain a part of the delay by telling the committee that the Government works its employees only eight hours a day, while employees of John Roach could work ten.

This necessarily accounts for one-fifth of the time. What is one-fifth of the amount claimed in this bill? The whole amount is $330,000. The Government under the law had the right to use those yards for only eight hours a day, that being a legal day. Is there any man on this floor who now wants to fine the Government or make it pay an extra amount because it did not use those yards ten hours a day, when it had no right to do so?

This, as I said, makes a difference of one-fifth of $330,000. Thus we have another error against the Government, an error of $60,000, upon the basis furnished on behalf of the claimants themselves. I ask again whether there is any man here who will contend that the Government is liable to John Roach because it did not work its hands ten hours or twelve hours or fourteen hours a day?

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I should say nothing more, it does seem to me sufficient reasons have been shown why this claim ought to go to the Court of Claims. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says it would do no good to send it there. I can not look in that way upon the court. I think the claim ought to go there for investigation.

Mr. MINOR. If you think so, why did you not make that proposition in the committee when we were considering the bill?

Mr. RIXEY. As my friend has asked me that question, I will state to him very frankly the facts. I will tell him that this matter was never before the committee at all. The report never was read before the committee——

Mr. BRUMM (interrupting). Oh, that is certainly a mistake.

Mr. RIXEY (continuing). All that occurred when I was present——

Mr. MINOR (interrupting). Why, Mr. Chairman, I read the report until it was unanimously agreed that no further reading was necessary, and the gentleman from Virginia was present.

Mr. RIXEY. I will state the facts, Mr. Chairman, in full; and I would not have stated them except for the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the interrogatory addressed to me. Soon after the organization of the Committee on Claims, the gentleman from Missouri and myself being new members, the chairman stated that it was customary, when bills had been formerly reported affirmatively by a unanimous consent of the committee, to let them be reported as soon as possible and take the lead of other measures before the committee, so as to go to the Department for consideration at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. BRUMM. That is right.

Mr. RIXEY. Now, I do not remember that the report in this case was ever read at all. I do remember that I asked the chairman of the committee—I knew the history of the matter in a general way—I asked the chairman of the committee if it was not proper to send claims of this kind to the Court of Claims. The chairman of the committee stated that he thought not, and the committee was afterwards notified in regular session that objection would be made and an effort made to send this bill to the Court of Claims.

Mr. LOVE. Was not this bill considered and acted upon by the Congress preceding this one?

Mr. RIXEY. I do not know.

Mr. BRUMM. Let me state to the gentleman that this bill has been passed twice by the Senate already in its present form.

Mr. RIXEY. I think the claim is old enough to have been sent to the Court of Claims to have a judgment rendered either for or against it if anything is really due to these parties. Now, if there was an error such as we have pointed out, that is the proper correction for it.

Mr. LOVE. In your opinion, if you will permit an interruption, how much is due to these parties?

Mr. RIXEY. In my opinion nothing is due to Roach at all. The point I am seeking to impress upon the committee is that if there is any just ground for any claim whatever against the Government, these parties should be permitted to go to the Court of Claims and determine that question. There is no other way, in my judgment, in which it can be determined satisfactorily to them or to the Government.

The facts are simply these: In 1883 Congress authorized the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the building of four ships of war—that is to say, for three battle ships and one dispatch boat, the Dolphin. This contract was let to John Roach, at that time engaged in shipbuilding; and all of these four ships were, under the provisions of the contract, to be completed in eighteen months from date of contract. There were a number of additions or changes made, which extended the time for the completion of the vessels. The first of the vessels completed was the Dolphin, which was delivered in June, 1885, five months after it should have been completed, under the terms of the contract.

When it was offered to the Government the naval board reported that there were certain defects in reference to it, and the matter was submitted to the Attorney-General, who delivered an opinion upon the subject in which it was held that the Government could not be compelled to take the Dolphin and that Roach could be compelled to return the money, or a portion of the money, paid for the construction of this boat.

In July, 1885, Roach made an assignment, having failed in business. It was agreed then that the Secretary of the Navy should, at his option, receive the Dolphin and make a settlement for that vessel. It was also determined that Roach should be permitted to sue, in the Court of Claims, for the remainder of the money, if any was found to be due him. The Secretary of the Navy received the Dolphin, and after some time it was agreed that Roach would deduct $23,000 from the contract price and give a receipt in full for this vessel.

That was done, and the matter of the Dolphin was closed. The full contract price was not paid for the construction of that vessel. And right here let me say that, from the best information I can get, I believe the Dolphin to be even at this day a good ship. But there is a bill pending here to give the executors of Roach the money he agreed to surrender to the Department on account of this vessel, and therefore the money for the Dolphin does not enter into the pending bill at all.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LOW] consumed his time to-day in discussing the Dolphin, whereas there is no claim in this bill for it. The whole amount of the controversy relates to the construction of the vessels Atlanta, Chicago, and Boston. The Dolphin is not included in the category at all.

When John Roach made his assignment, he was unable to go on and complete these ships. The Secretary of the Navy, therefore, under his contract, had the right to declare the contracts forfeited and to require John Roach and his sureties to return the money, or he had the right to go on and take an inventory and complete the ships, and pay John Roach for the ships after completing them at John Roach's ship yard. The Secretary of the Navy notified him that he would do that, and this inventory was taken. It occupies, I believe, seventy pages of the printed record. It was satisfactory to John Roach, and the Government, on the 2d or 9th of November, notified John Roach that it would take the yard and complete the ships. It did so.

Now, these gentlemen say that all this delay was caused by the Government. I find here in this printed record, under date of April 20, 1886, when the Atlanta should have been completed, according to their statement, this letter from the Navy Department:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING,
Washington, April 20, 1886.

SIR: Chief Engineer Morley reports that the work upon the machinery of the Atlanta has been delayed by the removal of the workmen to outside repair work.

Will you please correct this at once, and see that as many men are hereafter kept employed, so that the same may be completed at as early a day as practicable?

CHAS. H. LORING, Chief of Bureau.

The ASSIGNEES OF JOHN ROACH, New York.

And on the same page is the reply of these assignees. This is after the time for which they are charging the Government. These letters show who was to blame for this delay if such occurred:

MORGAN IRON WORKS, New York, April 20, 1886.

SIR: We are in receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, regarding delays on machinery of the Atlanta. We have endeavored to have nothing interfere with this work, and it has been only in cases of emergency, when a few men have been taken off for a few days, and only then when engaged on work that will be completed in advance of the air-tight fire room, which is taking more time than was anticipated, on account of the nature of the work admitting of but few men being employed on it. All other work, we are advised, except completing the painting, will be finished this week, although there are changes even now being made, all of which occupy time.

Yours, respectfully,

GEO. W. QUINTARD,
GEO. E. WEED,
Assignees.

ENGINEER IN CHIEF CHARLES H. LORING, U. S. N.,
Chief of Bureau of Steam Engineering, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What time did the Government take possession?

Mr. RIXEY. The Government took possession in November, 1885. That is the time from which the Government became responsible. If such is the fact, and it is conceded by the gentleman who made the report, the Government is overcharged many thousands of dollars, according to the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri and myself. After the time had expired for the completion of the Atlanta, according to the affidavits of Quintard and Weed, we have a complaint from the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering that these assignees were delaying the work by taking away the workmen and putting them on outside work, and the assignees replied, admitting that to be true, but saying that they were awaiting the completing of the work on the air-tight fire room. There is a subsequent letter to the same effect from the Department and a reply from the assignees.

Mr. BRUCKER. Did Mr. Roach make an assignment before the Government took possession?

Mr. RIXEY. Oh, yes; the Government had no right to take possession of the works until Roach assigned, and the reason the Government took possession was because Roach could not go on and complete the ships.

Mr. BRUCKER. You do not mean absolutely that the Government did not have the right to take possession of the works until Roach made an assignment?

Mr. RIXEY. Under the contract the Government had no right to take possession of the works unless it became convinced that Roach could not complete the vessels, and when he assigned of course it became evident that he could not complete them. It was to Roach's interest for the Government to take possession and complete these vessels, because if it did not his works would not only be idle, but he would not get any pay for the ships.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How long after he assigned did the Government take possession?

Mr. RIXEY. He assigned in July, 1885. In August the Government notified him that under the eleventh clause of the contract, as he could not go on and complete the ships, the Government would have an inventory made, and when that inventory was completed, it would go on and complete these ships. To show the liberal manner in which the Government acted with John Roach, though this inventory ran up to more than a million of dollars, and was made by the naval officials, John Roach and his assignees accepted it as just and right. It must have been a liberal settlement with John Roach. The Government then went on and completed these vessels.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is, the assignees went on and completed them?

Mr. RIXEY. No; the Government did it; but the assignees seem to have been there a good deal.

Mr. BUTLER. What settlement does the gentleman refer to when he speaks of a settlement to which John Roach gave his assent?

Mr. RIXEY. The record shows that this inventory was made and returned about the 1st of November, and it does not show that John Roach or his assignees ever complained against that inventory, and after the vessels were completed by the Government they had a full and final settlement, and the record nowhere shows that any exception was taken by John Roach or his assignees.

Mr. BUTLER. Was John Roach living at the time that settlement you speak of was made?

Mr. RIXEY. What settlement? The final settlement?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. RIXEY. I do not think he was living then. I do not know.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, but you made the statement that he did not take any exceptions to it.

Mr. RIXEY. I say that the record shows that neither John Roach nor his assignees nor his executors ever took any exceptions to it.

Mr. BUTLER. John Roach could not take any exceptions if he was dead.

Mr. BRUCKER. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman to page 160, of the record, to be found in Executive Document No. 153, where there is a letter of W. C. Whitney, Secretary of the Navy, to John Roach, in which the Secretary of the Navy uses the following language, this letter being under date of August 6, 1885:

More than six months have now elapsed since the expiration of the limit thus fixed, and the work upon the vessel has been stopped, while much remains to be done before she can be finally completed. At the same time it is evident that the public interests require the vessel in question, known as the Chicago, to be completed with all practicable speed, and it has therefore become necessary for the Department to take immediate and definite action looking to that end.

That is, in other words, Mr. Whitney, on the 6th of August, 1885, notified Mr. Roach that more than six months had elapsed since any work had been done on this boat, the Chicago, and then the Government took possession.

Mr. RIXEY. The Government did not take possession until November. The Government had no right to take possession until November, because the twelfth clause in the contract between the Government and John Roach provided—

Upon receipt of the findings of the said board, and upon his approval thereof—

That is, the findings of the board of inquiry—

the Secretary of the Navy may proceed to complete the vessels, etc.

Upon the completion of the inventory and its acceptance by the Government, possession of the shipyard was turned over to the Department on the 9th of November, as stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin. It may have taken more time to complete those vessels than John Roach could have done the work in, one reason being that the Government could not work ten hours; another is that any change in large business matters of this kind necessarily takes more time.

The contract with John Roach having provided if he was unable to complete the vessels then the Government had the right to take possession of the yards and complete the vessels, it had to be done under the eight-hour law and with such speed as they could make in the prosecution of the work.

Now, one word more. My friend from Wisconsin, I do not know whether it was to escape the weakness of his position or not, said:

We have made up this estimate outside of the testimony of Quintard and Weed.

He says that he has done so outside of that evidence and solely upon the records of the Navy Department. I challenge the gentleman to show by anything from the Navy Department that this Government ever held those works one hour or one day longer than it ought to have done.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the only evidence in support of this claim are the affidavits of Quintard and Weed, two men who swore identically in the same language that in their opinion the Chicago, upon which $600,000 had been paid out and upon which $200,000 was to be spent, could be completed in a certain number of months. They say in regard to the Boston and Atlanta practically the very same thing. Thousands of dollars had been spent upon these vessels and many thousands had yet to be spent, and yet these two gentlemen say simply they were familiar with the works, familiar with the ships, and in their judgment the Government ought to finish them in a certain number of months. That is all they say.

Mr. KELLEY. Did the Government take possession and complete these vessels under the terms of the contract made with Roach?

Mr. RIXEY. It did.

Mr. KELLEY. And they ask the Government $330,000 because the Government did that?

Mr. RIXEY. They ask $330,000 because the Government took a little longer than they say it ought to have done, and this is a question of damages, and damages alone. I say wherever a claim of this kind is founded in damages it ought to go to a court for the damages to be ascertained.

I have but one word more to say. Since the bill was reported to the House I have been shown the following copy of a letter by the chairman of the committee, which purports to be signed by Philip Hichborn, Chief Constructor of the Navy, and I will read the fourth clause of it:

There is little doubt that the contractors could, if the contracts had not been declared forfeited, have completed these vessels in less time.

I agree with him. Perhaps John Roach could have completed these vessels in less time; but I do not concede, therefore, that the Government is responsible for this, and if it is, then there ought to be some evidence in some way to decide the amount for which they would be responsible.

Again, he says:

The reorganization in itself consumed much time and the methods of procedure necessitated by the Government doing business with a plant of a private firm, and even the very caution exercised to keep the expenses at a minimum under these somewhat novel circumstances, involved delay in the construction of the vessels.

I have no doubt it did involve delay. Who was responsible? John Roach was unable to complete the vessels, and the Government, in the interest of John Roach, undertook to go on and complete these vessels, and has paid to him every dollar it agreed to pay.

Mr. LOVE. If the Government, then, had not completed the vessels, it would have been an entire loss to Roach.

Mr. RIXEY. It would have had a right to call upon John Roach's securities for every dollar which it had paid, because the vessels were not completed. What the Government did was in the interest of Roach. The record shows that in regard to these three vessels the Government has treated him in as fair a manner as any creditor could demand. I do not consider it deprived him of a dollar, and there is nothing in the record to show that there was any confiscation, penalty, or seizure enforced by the Government against John Roach, as claimed on a former occasion.

Roach made the contract to complete these vessels, and he was unable to complete them. The Government took his yards and completed them and paid him every dollar, and I do insist that instead of claiming damages from Congress he ought to go to court and establish his claim. [Applause.]

Mr. BRUMM. How much time, Mr. Chairman, is there left on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. Three minutes.

Mr. ROBB. I reserve the balance of our time.

Mr. BRUMM. I surrender two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] will give me his attention for one minute, I would like to call his attention to a statement made in his argument. I can readily understand how an acquiescence in the settlement of a disputed matter may act as an estoppel or commit the parties to it, and thereafter the point in controversy is at an end; and the point which the gentleman endeavors to make against this claim might be a legitimate one were it not for the fact that the gentleman is wrong in his statement of the fact. John Roach had died before the last boat was delivered. He died four months after the second boat was delivered, and therefore John Roach could not have been present acquiescing in a settlement made between the assignees and the Government.

That there was an intention upon the part of his assignees of claiming damages at the time is proven by the fact that in the release given by the assignees to the Government will be found this provision:

Nothing in this release contained shall be construed to prejudice the rights of said assignees, or of the estate of the party of the first part, to apply for and receive such sum or sums of money as Congress or the Court of Claims or other proper tribunal may award or authorize to be paid on account of such claim.

Therefore it is wrong to say that John Roach made no claim or to argue that this claim should be defeated because he made no claim. Mr. Roach lived four months after the second boat was delivered. He was dead six months before the last vessel was delivered, and therefore when the settlement came Mr. Roach could not speak because he was not living.

Mr. RIXEY. I did not refer to it as an estoppel at all.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not say that you did. You referred to it as showing that this claim was a fraudulent one because John Roach himself never made it; and I say that John Roach was dead at the time and could not make it.

Mr. KELLEY. His heirs did not make the claim at that time.

Mr. BUTLER. I have just read the provision in the release which shows that they had made it.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentlemon from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, we are approaching the end of a chapter in the history of the American Navy and of the American Government, which is the most disgraceful of all the chapters that have ever been written. I do not propose to follow the argument that has been made to show that under the terms of this contract, by the fair and just interpretation of it, the Government of the United States had the right to take possession of the shipyards of John Roach and proceed to complete the vessels that had been covered by his contract.

Nor do I as a lawyer undertake to argue that John Roach did not make his contract with his eyes wide open to the fact that the Government had the right to change the plans of the construction of the vessels under the contract, but I do stand upon the broad and unassailable ground that the Government, having seized his property under the terms of that contract, and for the purpose of my argument admitting that they had the right to have themselves delayed his work and thus brought about the apparent breach of his contract, yet I maintain and I defy successful contradiction of the fact that the Government was bound by the rules of law that it must be diligent in the discharge of its duty under its contract.

Roach had been put to a forfeiture because of his failure in the rapid execution of his work. The Government takes his property, and, if I have understood the arguments on the other side, they say that the Government thereupon had the right to change the specifications, making delay in the execution of the work, and then comes with this unheard of and, to my mind, utterly untenable argument that the Government could not work their men but eight hours a day, while Roach could work his ten hours a day. Let us see how these parties stood at the moment of seizure of the shipyards by the Government.

What were their mutual rights under the contract? Roach had stipulated to conform to any changes made by the Navy Department, but Roach had not stipulated that thereafter the Government could make changes which would deprive him of his property. Bear in mind now, gentlemen, this is a question of the value of the use of John Roach's property taken out of his hands under the provisions of his contract. I might stop here and say that no more infamous persecution of any American citizen was ever made than the torture of John Roach to bring about the seizure of his property.

I think I know precisely why it was done. I think I know precisely the ultimate and infamous purpose that lay behind it. I think I know that the good of this Government and the perfection of the construction of this naval vessel had nothing to do with it. It is not pretended that the changes made by the Government bettered or improved the structure, and we find, gentlemen, when we come to examine this great question at this point, that the opinions that then prevailed were utterly erroneous and unjust. A naval board examined and tested the Dolphin. I have their report before me. It was in every respect a complete indorsement. And yet the Navy Department saw fit to overrule the action of that board.

Mr. KELLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think I had better go on.

Mr. LOVE. My information is that Mr. Roach had made an assignment before the Government ever took control of the yards to complete the ships. Is that true or not?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman's question refer to the Dolphin?

Mr. LOVE. The Dolphin, I understand, is not included in this bill. I want to know if the Government was not forced to take charge of these shipyards after Roach's assignment in order to save what had already been expended?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am talking about the Dolphin. Why break up my speech in this way to take up another subject?

Mr. LOVE. I am trying to get information, and hoped the gentleman would give it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman will have to get it as I have tried to get it.

I was trying to illustrate the course of the Navy Department in making changes in the ships included in this bill by referring to the erroneous decision of the Secretary of the Navy in the matter of the Dolphin. I think my remarks on this point are absolutely pertinent.

Mr. ROBB. Does not the gentleman know that the opinion to which the gentleman has referred involves only about $62,000, whereas Roach's contract amounted to nearly $3,000,000?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can not wait for the gentleman to finish his speech. He has occupied nearly all the time of two days; and I have learned nothing from his speech up to this time—nothing whatever.

My point is this, and I will not be driven away from it: I was pointing out that the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy of that day is not only worthless in the estimation of the American people, but, so far at least as one of his opinions was concerned, it is a blot and disgrace to humanity. He said the Dolphin was "structurally weak." That is like the complaint of a soldier who complains of "a lame back." I lived to see—and so did the gentleman from Missouri if he was there—I lived to see the Dolphin after she had traversed this globe, had made a voyage of 58,000 miles. I saw her the pride and glory of every American who witnessed the great naval parade in New York Harbor—the most beautiful, the most perfect of all the ships of the world of the class to which she belonged. And to-day she is the pride of her class in the American Navy, and has no peer in the navies of the world.

Mr. ROBB. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Does he not know——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not want the gentleman to repeat his long-drawn-out speech. I trust he will be kind enough to let me go on.

Mr. ROBB. I want to ask this question——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If I do not know the fact to which the gentleman desires to bring my attention, I can not learn it now. I am pointing out the fact that the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy was a bald persecution and outrage or was born of stupendous ignorance. Therefore I give no weight to the decision of the Secretary of the Navy that there ought to have been changes in Mr. Roach's contract, or that the seizure made afterwards in accordance with the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy was justified. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the verdict of the American people is that John Roach, for some purpose which I do not understand, was hounded and persecuted and destroyed, and that the means by which this was brought about was this decision of the Attorney-General and the action of the Navy Department.

Now, what was the duty of the United States Government when it had seized that property? Every lawyer will say, and every man who is not a lawyer, that the Government ought to have gone forward with rapidity. And now comes what to my mind is the real gist of this contest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope I may have five minutes more.

Mr. BRUMM. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. KELLEY. Now will the gentleman allow me to ask——

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I can not yield. The gentleman will please excuse me. I would be very glad to accommodate him, but I can not finish my line of argument if I yield to these interruptions. The argument, whatever it is worth, will take about five minutes to reach its conclusion. Therefore I can not consent to be turned aside.

Now, when the Government had taken possession of that vast property, what was its duty? Was it to go into a reorganization of those ships? Was it to make new plans without the privity of John Roach? Was it to disarrange the plans that the Navy Department had itself furnished, and in that way hold possession of this vast property and ruin the greatest enterprise in shipbuilding that up to that time the American nation had ever known? That is this case precisely.

If gentlemen say that the delay of the work after the Government took charge was by reason of the eight-hour law, I deny that that is an answer to this just claim. If the Government of the United States saw fit to put in force the limitation upon the hours of labor, the Government could not stand and hold this splendid property and apply its ideas of the hours of labor to it, and then charge it up against John Roach. If the Government had the right to change the plans of these ships under the bungling operations of the condition that we had at that date—if it had the right to do that, it did it at its own peril to compensate John Roach for what he lost by the enterprise. There is the whole of this question.

I am not going to discuss the amount of the claim. The amount put down here is in accordance with the findings of those who are better competent than this House is to ascertain the true value of the delay and the occupation. Here was a yard fully equipped to build three great ships for the Government of the United States. That yard was taken practically out of the possession of Mr. Roach. He could not make a further contract and the assignees could not finish the business on hand. He was absolutely destroyed, as far as his business was concerned, because the Government had a contract with him that by their interference he was unable to complete.

And when he comes to Congress, or his representatives come to Congress, for compensation in the amount of reasonable damages, the Government says, in the first place, that without your knowledge or consent we compelled your compliance with the eight-hour rule. We enforced conditions to which you were not a party, and therefore you shall have no right to say that we are compelled to make compensation for that, nor shall you have the right to say, when we change the plans for the vessels, that it was done at our own expense and at our own cost. In other words, you shall have no voice in the premises whatever.

I yield back the remainder of the time allotted to me.

Mr. BRUMM. May I ask, Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining of that yielded to the gentleman from Ohio?

The CHAIRMAN. One minute remains.

Mr. BRUMM. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, seventeen years of my life were spent in continuous newspaper work. In that seventeen years of newspaper experience the Roach contract and the decisions of the Executive Department of the Government with reference to the contract were familiar subjects in the press throughout the United States.

It was charged that Mr. Roach had been favored by the Government at the expense of other shipbuilding yards. The Dolphin had not been accepted by the Navy Department, John Roach had been forced to make an assignment, and had been ruined, and died broken-hearted after the seizure of his property by the Government. At that time, as a newspaper reporter, I interviewed Mr. Roach, Secretary Whitney, and others whose names were mentioned in connection with the matter. The press reeked with abuse of John Roach. I stated then, and I may state now without fear of contradiction, that the grossest injustice was done to Mr. Roach, who was at that time the best shipbuilder the country had ever produced.

John Roach was a poor Irish boy. He came to this country without a cent. He had no schooling whatever. He could read and write, and that was all. He gleaned an education in everyday life. He never went to school. He was employed in a shipyard as a laborer. He became a calker, and from that humble beginning gradually became the foremost shipbuilder in the United States.

I read from a printed interview that I had with John Roach. The following words fell from his lips:

> To sum up this personal matter, I have for some fifty years been in business in New York. I have constructed over a hundred ships. These have all been built for merchants of this country, and most of whom are living. I challenge any man to go to these customers of mine and find one of them who will say that he is dissatisfied with the work I have done for him, or that he had just cause to complain. I have never yet, in all my fifty years of business, had a lawsuit with any man. If the work I had done for the Government had been done for private persons, there would have been no more cause to complain. Why do not these slanderers go to my customers and make out a case against me?
> Yet I have been held up in a part of the press as a man having questionable transactions with the Government through favoritism and fat contracts and so on. I put the business reputation built up during half a century against these malicious libelers, and I call upon them to bring the first proof of their reckless assertions. Everything that I have done for the Government has been as fair and just as with the citizens.

Now, he took these contracts at a lower rate than was bid by any other contractor. In this interview with me he said that the Government had acknowledged that all of the ships he had ever built for them were much cheaper and better than any ships that had been previously constructed or than the ships ordered under the Whitney administration.

To my mind the greatest evidence that this claim is just is the action and opinion of the Secretary of the Navy who made the contract with John Roach. That gentleman is WILLIAM E. CHANDLER, once Secretary of the Navy, now a United States Senator. He not only voted for this bill in the Senate, but has written letters appealing in behalf of the justice of the claims of the heirs of this honest old Irishman. And another evidence, to my mind, that the claim is just is that it has been adjudicated by another Secretary of the Navy, Benjamin F. Tracy, who has reported in its favor.

Mr. Tracy settled the claim as far as it was possible for him to settle it under the law, and then referred what he did not have the legal power to settle to the Congress of the United States, with the recommendation that it be allowed. So that you have, Mr. Chairman, not only the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy who made the contract in justification of the claim, but you have the facts on which the claim itself is based. You not only have the opinion of the Secretary who drew up the contract with Mr. Roach, but you have also the opinion of the Secretary who closed the account concurring in the report that the claim is just, and all agreeing that the grossest injustice has been done to Mr. Roach.

I know that through the failure of payments that should have been made to him for these ships his vast establishment was practically swept into bankruptcy. I know that the Government seized not only the shipyard at Chester, but the Morgan Iron Works in New York. Those iron works, Mr. Chairman, were in the district which I once had the honor to represent on this floor. They employed from 1,500 to 1,700 men.

If the Navy Department had not seized them, Mr. Roach might have borrowed money upon contracts with private parties, already made, and could have continued his work and have extricated himself from bankruptcy.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have only ten minutes, but if the gentleman will hurry up, I will yield to him.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it not a fact that the Government did not seize these works until six months after Roach had stopped work on these ships?

Mr. CUMMINGS. He stopped work because he was forced into bankruptcy by the action of the Government.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask if it was not six months after he stopped work?

Mr. CUMMINGS. He stopped work because the Navy Department did not pay him the money due on one of the ships after it had been passed by a board of naval officers.

Mr. BUTLER. That is true.

Mr. ROBB. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I dislike very much to decline to yield, but I have only a few minutes in which to say what I want to say. I know that as a newspaper correspondent I got closer to the bottom of this matter, I believe, than the naval board itself.

Mr. BARTLETT. Here is the record of the whole matter.

Mr. ROBB. I should like to ask the gentleman if he does not know that before the failure of Roach, before the assignment, upon his application the 10 per cent reservation was paid to him by the Government, in order that it might assist him?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I know nothing about that.

Mr. BRUMM. It was due him, and he should have had it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I know nothing about it, except that the Dolphin was accepted by one board and tabooed by another. The first board I believed to be a legal board, and the second board I believed to be an illegal board. I will tell further what I know. I know that politics was at the bottom of Mr. Roach's misfortunes, and that my own party at the time was engaged in the denunciations. That is what I know. [Applause.] I dislike to say so, but it is true. There never was a man in the world treated more unjustly than this honest old Irishman. He fell into the hands of political sharks and had his business ruined thereby. He was hounded to his death for partisan purposes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I was an humble participant in some matters here connected with these appropriations at that time, and I should like my distinguished friend from New York, if any injustice has been done Mr. Roach on this floor, or any cunning and connivance against him, to make it known.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do believe that injustice was done him.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am ready to face my part of it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Point it out.

Mr. McMILLIN. I should like to have it pointed out rather than have it hinted at.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have it. Let us have the facts.

Mr. ROBB. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York——

Mr. CUMMINGS. I did not say the injustice was done on the floor of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not know where it was, but inasmuch as the appropriations are made here and here only, I thought it was just that I should make this humble protest.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Oh, no; it all grew out of the newspaper reports on the Robeson business. Honest John Roach was the sufferer, because he happened at one time to build a few ships when Mr. Robeson was Secretary of the Navy. He fell under the odium attached to Robeson, and owing to that cause, and that cause alone, in my opinion, he failed, and was unable to carry on his work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBB. Was there any politics in it when the contract was made?

Mr. BRUMM. Does the gentleman wish any more time in which to answer that question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I should like a little more time.

Mr. BRUMM. I give the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. ROBB. I should like to know if there was any politics in it when the contract was made.

Mr. CUMMINGS. When what contract was made?

Mr. ROBB. Between Secretary Chandler and John Roach for the building of these ships.

Mr. CUMMINGS. There was no politics in it.

Mr. ROBB. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. CUMMINGS. Let me answer the gentleman's question. That the contract was square and fair and that the contractor did his work squarely and fairly is shown by the fact that the very Secretary of the Navy who made the contract has advocated the passage of this bill and voted for it in the United States Senate.

Mr. ROBB. I want to ask the gentleman another question. I want to ask if Secretary Whitney did not allow John Roach six months more time than was allowed under the contract in which to build these ships, and if Secretary Whitney did not decline to take possession of the yards until he was notified by Roach's attorney, by Roach's assignees, and by the naval board that Roach had assigned and that work had been discontinued?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I say that was the mark of an honest man. He did assign, and was forced to assign by the action of the Navy Department toward him on the conclusion of one of the contracts.

Mr. ROBB. I should like the gentleman to answer the question which I asked.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I did answer it.

Mr. ROBB. Did the Government take charge until six months after the expiration of the time within which the ships were to be completed?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The Government took charge upon the assignment of Mr. Roach. Now, furthermore, the evidence here, which I can point out in the report if you want it, shows that the Government held these works months longer than it was necessary to hold them.

Mr. BRUMM. The assignment was made seven days after the Attorney-General had given his opinion.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And the assignment was made seven days after.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. STEELE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 4332. An act to amend an act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved June 3, 1896.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States, dated March 28, 1898, together with the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the U. S. battle ship Maine in Havana Harbor, February 15, 1898, and the testimony taken before the court, 13,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 6,500 for the use of the Senate.

HEIRS OF JOHN ROACH.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri has three minutes more, and as I intend to close the debate, I ask him to consume his time now.

Mr. ROBB. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I know nothing about any persons connected with this claim or interested in it; but I do know that it is an unusual thing, and it ought to be an unusual thing, to ask this House to appropriate over $330,000 to pay a claim when the report from the committee bringing this bill before the House states (as the report on this bill does) "That no action has been had upon this claim, or any part thereof, by the courts or by any of the Departments of the United States Government."

The United States Government has never been asked to appear in court and defend this claim; it never has been permitted to appear in a committee room and ask to present its side of why it has not paid this amount, nor has any inquiry been made of the Departments as to the justice of this demand; and the record of this case as made by the officers of the Government, which I hold in my hand, in a Senate document published in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress (Executive Document No. 153), will show that the Government does not owe a dollar of this money; that the Government dealt fairly and honestly with Mr. Roach, and not until six months after he had abandoned the work on the ships did the Government take advantage of the eleventh section of the various contracts, as they had the right to do and as Roach agreed it should do. These clauses permitted the Government to take charge of the yards and ships and carry on the work to completion.

The Government, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, carried on the work and completed it in less time than Mr. Roach had taken to complete one-half of these ships. Moreover, there are in the records receipts in full for all the money that the Government owed on these contracts. An effort is made here to make the Government pay the enormous sum of $331,151 because, as insisted by the gentleman who opened this case [Mr. MINOR], the Attorney-General had given his opinion as to the validity of the contract with reference to the building of the Dolphin, a proposition unheard of and unparalleled in any decent court of law.

I think, sir, before we vote this money away from the coffers of the people we ought to put this claim before a court and allow it to determine these contentions involved. They present intricate questions of law, disputed questions of facts, and the court should determine whether the Government of the United States is liable before we lay the heavy hand and burden of taxation of over $300,000 upon the people of this country to pay this claim, a claim which a committee of this House has reported against the Government, and have only heard the testimony and evidence of those interested, the ex parte statements of the claimants themselves. I say, Mr. Chairman, this claim, as made by the record and by the very report of this committee, is not entitled to be paid at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry that our friends are not better posted in reference to this claim. My friend who has just taken his seat has said that it has not had a hearing in court. I want to say that as chairman of the committee I have been in communication with the Department and have a letter from the architect of the Navy, in which he gives his opinion upon this very matter, and says that the charges that are made are very reasonable. The letter reads as follows, to wit:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
Washington, D. C., March 19, 1888.

SIR: 1. Replying to your verbal inquiry as to the claims of the heirs of John Roach, deceased, for certain sums for withholding and detention of the plant at Morgan Iron Works, New York, during unnecessary delay in completing the cruiser Atlanta and for the withholding and detention of the shipyard plant at the Delaware River Iron Ship Building and Engine Works, Chester, Pa., during similar delay on the Boston and Chicago, which sums were considered in Senate Report No. 86, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, and favorably reported on, I have to state that I have given careful consideration to the subject and have to state as follows:

2. The claimants assert that "in the ten years from 1873 to 1882, both inclusive, the total tonnage built by John Roach & Son aggregated about 148,000 tons, the average being 14,800 per year; the largest product in any one year, 22,190 tons."

3. The amount of this business and the capacity of the plant can more readily be understood, perhaps, if it is explained that this would represent work amounting in value to $243,337 per month on a basis of the contracts for the Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin, the contract prices for which vessels were at the time considered low, the aggregate tonnage of the vessels named being 12,363. The loss of the use of a plant doing an annual business of about $3,000,000 is necessarily a matter of serious damage to the owner, and every day's delay in the completion of the Chicago, Atlanta, and Boston would deprive the shipbuilder of the right to use the plant for his own personal profit, and thereby cause him considerable loss.

4. There is little doubt that the contractors could, if the contracts had not been declared forfeited, have completed these vessels in less time. The reorganization in itself consumed much time and the methods of procedure necessitated by the Government doing business with the plant of a private firm and even the very caution exercised to keep the expenses at a minimum, under these somewhat novel circumstances, involved delay in the construction of the vessel.

5. In view of these facts, and in consideration of the large sums invested in the plants at the Morgan Iron Works and Chester, Pa., and their money-earning value to the contractor, I am of opinion that the sums allowed for damages for the withholding and detention of these ship-yard plants are no more than fair compensation for their use by the Government for the prolonged time the Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta were under construction at said yards.

Very respectfully,
PHILIP HICHBORN,
Chief Constructor, United States Navy, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. C. N. BRUMM,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The question was asked my colleague [Mr. MINOR] as to when the forfeiture of the contract became operative. I ought first to say that the assignment was made by John Roach seven days after the Attorney-General had rendered his opinion on the Dolphin, wherein he stated that the Dolphin was structurally weak, that she failed in speed, and that John Roach would have to refund the money that was paid to him on the contract for building the Dolphin; that upon the opinion rendered by the Attorney-General the credit of John Roach was destroyed, and he then made an assignment.

Executive Document 153, page 144, shows that on the 6th of August, 1885, the Secretary of the Navy declared each one of the contracts forfeited under clauses 11, 12, and 13 of the contract, and the rights of the United States were then operative, and yet in the face of that fact the United States did not make it operative until the following November, and for all of that time John Roach has not charged one cent for the occupancy of these yards, nor is it included in this bill.

Mr. ROBB. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BRUMM. Certainly.

Mr. ROBB. I want to know, if between August 6 and November 9 the Government was not in charge, and if the laborers were not employed there, why the heirs of Roach charged for the labor during that time?

Mr. BRUMM. They have not charged during that time. That shows that the gentleman does not know what he is talking about. It took that time for the Government to take an inventory, and my colleague [Mr. MINOR] showed that it was not necessary to delay these works for four or five months while the Government was taking an inventory. The fact is, it was a part of the original conspiracy to hold John Roach by the throat during that time.

Another error the opponents make is in stating that the Department had relegated John Roach in the settlement of this dispute to the Court of Claims. I read here the exact words from the release:

Nothing in this release contained shall be construed to prejudice the rights of said assignees or of the estate of the party of the first part to apply for and receive such sums of money as Congress, the Court of Claims, or other proper tribunal may award or authorize to be paid on account of such claim.

I only cite this as another example of the errors my friends make in discussing this question.

Now, my colleague, Mr. ROBB, says that there is no evidence that the Government caused delay except that of the assignees. Why, let me read you the official record, which is mathematical testimony and not the testimony or opinions of men. The official record of the board of appraisers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy (Executive Document 153, pages 204 and 205) shows that but 7 per cent still remained to be finished on the Atlanta.

That was when the Government took charge of the yard; only 7 per cent of the work remained to be finished on the Atlanta. On the Boston only 8 per cent of the work remained to be finished when you robbed the yard from honest John Roach; on the Chicago only 22 per cent remained to be finished, and yet gentlemen tell us that the Government did not occupy any more time than John Roach would have occupied in completing this 7, 8, and 22 per cent, notwithstanding the fact that the Government held the yards longer to finish this small percentage of the uncompleted work than the time in which Roach had agreed to build the three ships.

But, again, they say there is no evidence as to the amount of damages except that of Quintard and Weed. I am sorry that my colleague from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY], for whom I have the utmost respect, left me under the impression that the only objection he had to the bill was because there was no evidence here from the Department. I immediately placed myself in correspondence with the Department and received the letter which is already before the House.

Mr. RIXEY. I desire to interrupt the gentleman a moment.

Mr. BRUMM. Certainly.

Mr. RIXEY. What I said was that there was no evidence to sustain the claim, and I say now that there is no evidence to sustain the claim, in my opinion. I referred to the letter you showed me since the bill was reported to the House, and I say that in my judgment that letter does not sustain the claim.

Mr. BRUMM. I object to the gentleman making a speech in my time. The letter speaks for itself. Another proposition they make, and this goes to the whole matter, is that the Government was not responsible for John Roach's delay. I say if that is true I will agree to withdraw this bill. The merits of this bill rest upon the fact that the Government, and the Government alone, was responsible for the delay in building these ships. Let us see. John Roach had a contract to finish the Dolphin for a certain sum of money; the Secretary of the Navy—I believe under bad advice, probably from some inferior; I do not care to reflect upon a gentleman in so high a position—the Secretary of the Navy referred the question to the Attorney-General as to whether the contract was void under the report of the extra committee appointed by him without warrant of law, without warrant of contract, and if, in direct opposition to the very letter of the law and the contract, he appointed that board then it had no power and no jurisdiction. I mean the second board.

Mr. Chairman, the law and the contract said that there should be a naval advisory board that should decide what should be done and have supervision over the building of the Dolphin, by and with the advice and under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy. But the trial trip was to be made under the sole supervision of the Naval Advisory Board, and upon their favorable report was to be accepted by the Government. Yet, in violation of this plain provision, he created another board, and then even refused to be bound by the report of either board. This advisory board reported the Dolphin a perfect ship. This advisory board had control of the construction. And yet, for some reason that I have my own idea about, but which it is not necessary to introduce into the argument in this case, a second board, known as the Belknap board, was appointed, and this board——

Mr. ROBB. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BRUMM. I have not time now. This Belknap board reported first that the ship was "structurally weak," that she had failed to make her 15 knots an hour. The proof was overwhelming that both these findings were errors, to call them by the mildest term. The manner of the test——

Mr. ROBB. Will the gentleman——

Mr. BRUMM. I have not time now. The manner of the test was shown in the Daily Graphic, which came out in New York City, showing under what circumstances the Dolphin was tested. We have the account here, wherein it is shown that they tested the Dolphin in the wildest kind of a storm. Secretary Whitney had said—and I quote from the report—that all he asked in a stiff sea was 12 knots an hour; and the report of his pet Belknap board itself showed that she had made over 13 knots an hour. Then the Secretary, not satisfied with that report, threw it aside, saying, "That report amounts to nothing, because you made the test without my orders or knowledge, as they were given in my absence, under a mistake."

That is the record, gentlemen, of the conduct of the Secretary of the Navy. What was the manner of testing the Vesuvius? The test was made in the placid waters of some inland lake or bay. That is the difference of the tests of these two vessels.

The Navy Department found the testimony was so overwhelmingly against them that they had to do something to patch it up. They accepted the Dolphin by putting a penalty upon John Roach. Then the Dolphin made its trip around the world; and it has a record that stands unequaled by any ship that was ever built—a record showing that this vessel exceeded every expectation, that she made her voyage of thousands of miles with but two hours' delay, and those for small repairs.

Mr. ROBB. Does not the gentleman know——

Mr. BRUMM (continuing). After that the Government took the Dolphin, and yet refused to pay John Roach the balance due on that ship, for which, however, we have another bill.

Now, then, wherein is the equity of our claim? The position the committee takes on this matter is this: First, this bill has passed the Senate, not Republican, twice, and, so far as I know, without a single dissenting voice. This bill passed this House committee at the last session without a dissenting voice. This bill is in the House now without a minority report. There was no objection at the time. It was an afterthought. There is the trouble. Some power hidden, that I know not of and care not to investigate——

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BRUMM (continuing). Now, then, Mr. Chairman, this bill rests upon the fact——

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BRUMM. I refuse to be interrupted now. I have not the time, or I would yield.

Mr. ROBB. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PAYNE). The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROBB] can not interrupt the gentleman from Pennsylvania with a question of personal privilege.

Mr. BRUMM. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BRUCKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. How much time remains?

Mr. BRUMM. I do not want this to come out of my time. I refuse to be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] is entitled to the floor to conclude his remarks. He has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. RIXEY. I would like to ask——

Mr. BRUMM. I put this claim upon the fact, first, that under the course of the Administration you violated the law, you violated the contract which you entered into with John Roach.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. BRUMM. Within a month after the President's inauguration the Belknap board was appointed by Mr. Whitney——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. BRUMM. Having done that, you injured his credit and you drove him into bankruptcy. In seven days after that infamous letter of Attorney-General Garland was printed John Roach was a bankrupt. Lying helpless, he said, "Come take my yards." Even then he hoped the Government would take them and do its whole duty. In other words, you knocked John Roach down, and now you want to kick him for falling.

First, you threw him into bankruptcy, and now you want to hold him responsible for not finishing a contract that you violated. When I say "you," I mean the Government, of course. You first throw him into bankruptcy and make it impossible for him to go on any further with the work. And when he has made an assignment, you take possession of the yard, justifying yourself by saying, "John Roach stopped the work himself, and, therefore, we are not liable for any damages." Ah, sir, he destroys my house who takes away the props that support it. And when you took away the props that supported John Roach, and then robbed him, you committed a crime, and you ought to be willing now to pay the penalty.

As to the amount embodied in the bill, no one has successfully challenged its accuracy. We have the official report to show that it is a just and proper amount for the work done.

Mr. Chairman, as to the affairs of John Roach, no one has dared to challenge the statement which has been rendered by his heirs, and they simply ask that fair play be accorded to them under the pending bill. I contend that it would be a double crime on the part of this Government first to put a man in a position where he is absolutely helpless to control his own affairs, and then attempt to hold him responsible for the damage growing out of the failure to comply with the contract, which he was utterly unable to comply with because of the acts of the Government. That is the entire case.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I desire to rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. BRUMM. I hope the gentleman will wait until I get through.

Mr. ROBB. I thought the gentleman had concluded.

Mr. GAINES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BRUMM. I have not yet yielded the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. BRUMM. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Can the gentleman give us the information as to what the assets and liabilities of John Roach were at the time of his assignment?

Mr. BRUMM. I can not do so exactly in figures; but I will say to the gentleman and to the committee that the plant of Mr. Roach was well worth at least $2,000,000. That fact will not be disputed. I will say further that when the Government took him by the throat, as it were, they not only compelled him, with his fixed expenditures, to keep that plant going for an indefinite length of time—over a year—and to furnish coal, pay insurance, to occupy and keep going the two yards of the plant for the construction of these three ships—they took absolute and entire control of both yards, which were capable of docking ten ships at a time; for, as I have said, the Government took absolute control of all he had—but also forced him to comply with the conditions of a contract which the Government itself had changed, and would not allow him to take a job from anyone else.

Now, the Navy Department, through its officials, after a thorough investigation of this matter, has stated that the amount is reasonable, and I hope the committee will agree in that conclusion. This, I will state, also has the approval of Chief Constructor Hichborn of the Navy.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman now permit me to interrupt?

Mr. BRUMM. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. I would like to ask the gentleman this question with reference to the amount of the claim: Has it been disputed by anybody that under the contract the Government had the right to take charge of these works?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They had the right under the contract to take charge.

Mr. BRUMM. Certainly; under the contract they had the right. But the point I make is that they had no right to take advantage of contracts when they themselves had not complied with the provisions.

Mr. ROBB. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not know that the Government made every concession to Mr. Roach that he claimed? Does he not know it to be a fact that this contract provided for ten installments of payment, with 10 per cent interest on each, and if, on the application of Mr. Roach, the Government did not concede to him 10 per cent for the purpose of saving him from failing?

Mr. BRUMM. I am satisfied the Government carried out the contract up to the time of the letter of the Attorney-General, at least to an extent not to be complained of, except as to the changes made by the Government in these vessels. Gentlemen will remember that this was an experimental age in the way of iron and metal construction of vessels, and the Government made changes from time to time for which due allowance should have been made.

It is true that they paid Mr. Roach what he could have claimed, possibly, for the changes, but that is not the question here. The trouble came in the matter of the Attorney-General demanding that he should not be paid for the Dolphin, but on the contrary should restore to the Government almost the entire amount theretofore paid for it. That was the straw that broke the camel's back.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBB. I rise, Mr. Chairman, to a question of privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. As to a matter occurring in committee?

Mr. ROBB. Yes. I refer to a statement growing out of the argument of the chairman of the Committee on Claims, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM].

Mr. Chairman, I have always understood that it was not proper for a member of a committee to refer on the floor of the House to what took place in committee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred in detail to what took place in reference to this bill in the committee. Now, in view of that fact——

The CHAIRMAN. This, the Chair thinks, does not present a question of privilege.

Mr. BRUMM. I want time to answer that; and shall proceed to do so at a later period.

Mr. ROBB. I simply want to explain the condition of affairs, in view of the statement of the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it presents a matter of privilege.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], which will be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RIXEY. In the remarks by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], he said:

> It was an afterthought; there is the trouble—some power hidden, that I know not of and care not to investigate.

So far as the remarks of the gentleman refer to me, I want to state that that is false.

Mr. DALZELL. That is not a question of personal privilege.

Mr. BRUMM. I know the gentleman does not mean that. He ought not to make that statement.

Mr. RIXEY. I do make the statement.

Mr. BRUMM. I say it is not false, then.

Mr. RIXEY. I say that it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will suspend and be in order. Gentlemen will be seated. The point of order is made that the gentleman presents no question of personal privilege. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], which has just been reported by the Clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBB. I desire to move, in reference to the bill, the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I reserve a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be time enough to reserve the point of order after it is reported to the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That the pending bill for the relief of the heirs of John Roach be transmitted (in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, and the act of March 2, 1887) to the Court of Claims of the United States, together with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents appertaining thereto.

Mr. ROBB. I move the adoption of that resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, what act of Congress is referred to in that resolution?

Mr. BRUMM. The Bowman Act.

Mr. DALZELL. The Court of Claims has no jurisdiction of claims of this kind, has it?

Mr. BRUMM. That is a question. We certainly have jurisdiction here.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, that resolution——

The CHAIRMAN. The resolution is not debatable.

Mr. STEELE. I do not think that resolution is in order, and I make the point of order that it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The resolution proposes that the committee shall send the bill to the Court of Claims. The committee has no power, of course, to do that. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. I move that the committee report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that that resolution pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] moves that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That the pending bill for the relief of the heirs of John Roach be transmitted (in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, and the act of March 2, 1887) to the Court of Claims of the United States, together with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents appertaining thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on that resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. Is not that the same resolution that the Chair has already ruled out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the committee report the bill to the House with the recommendation contained in that resolution, as the Chair understands it.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARTLETT) there were—ayes 66, noes 128.

Accordingly the motion was rejected.

Mr. BRUMM. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. McMILLIN. A parliamentary inquiry. Does the gentleman's motion contemplate that the committee rise now?

Mr. BRUMM. For the purpose of disposing of this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest to him that he can move to lay it aside, to be reported to the House later.

Mr. BRUMM. No; we want to dispose of it now.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then on that motion let us have a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 142, noes 48.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1116) to pay the heirs of the late John Roach, deceased, $330,151.42 for labor and material, dockage and detention, and occupation of yards and shops for the gunboats Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. BRUMM. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendment to its passage.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend by inserting in line 6, after the words "seventy-seven," the words "the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am going to ask a division on that amendment. I do not see any need of this amendment, and I do not think it ought to go in.

Mr. BARTLETT. Regular order!

Mr. BRUMM. It is in order——

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. There can be no discussion.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage.

The question was put.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ROBB. I rise for the purpose of offering a resolution to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires to offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. BRUMM. I raise the point that it is too late.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was standing.

Mr. BRUMM. But we were in the middle of a vote.

The SPEAKER. The vote had not been announced. The gentleman was standing in his place asking for that. The Clerk will read the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the pending bill for the relief of the heirs of John Roach be transmitted (in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, and the act of March 2, 1887) to the Court of Claims of the United States, together with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents appertaining thereto.

Mr. BRUMM. I reserve the point of order that it is not in order.

Mr. ROBB. My motion is to recommit with the instructions embodied in that resolution.

Mr. BRUMM. I make the point of order against the motion.

The SPEAKER. That is not a motion to recommit, the Chair will have to hold.

Mr. ROBB. Then I move to recommit the bill.

The question was taken on the motion to recommit; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ROBB. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 140.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ROBB. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 183, nays 83, answered "present" 3, not voting 86; as follows:

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if I am recorded?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk states that the gentleman's name is not recorded.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. DINGLEY. I can hardly say that I come within the rule, Mr. Speaker. I was present, engaged in conversation at the time, and did not hear my name called.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. BRUMM, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills reported by the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, with Mr. PAYNE in the chair, for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House for consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Claims; and the Clerk will report the first bill.

ERIE RAILROAD COMPANY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 706) for the relief of the Erie Railroad Company.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims shall, notwithstanding the lapse of time, be authorized to take jurisdiction of and adjust the claim of the Erie Railroad Company, successor of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company and of the Erie Railway Company, for the transportation of the mails of the United States from January 1, 1874, to June 30, 1877, upon routes (old numbers) Nos. 1201, 1207, and 1208, said claim being based upon alleged contracts between the United States of America (acting in that behalf by their Postmaster-General) and the president of said Erie Railway Company, signed and acknowledged by John A. J. Creswell, Postmaster-General, on the 10th day of January, 1874, and by P. H. Watson, president of said Erie Railway Company, on the 20th day of April, 1874.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a bill to refer to the Court of Claims a claim of the Erie Railroad Company, and I will ask that the Clerk read a letter from the Department, which will show that the bill ought to pass.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 3, 1883.

SIR: I have examined the papers submitted to me in connection with Senate bill No. 779, for the relief of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company.

The claim is made on the part of the company, as I understand, that a contract was entered into January 10, 1874, between the United States and the railroad company by which a fixed compensation was agreed upon for a specific period.

The Department has hitherto claimed that there was no contract executed; and, as I am informed, none can be found upon the files of the Department.

I am not prepared to say that no contract was ever in fact made because none was filed in the Department, nor that the railroad company should be denied the benefit of a contract which the Postmaster-General in behalf of the Government has executed, and which has also been executed by the proper officers of the railroad company, because, having executed it, the Postmaster-General has failed to file it or enter it in the Department.

I should have supposed that under Revised Statutes, section 3950, no payment could have been made under such a contract until it had been executed and filed in the Department, as required by Revised Statutes, section 402, so that a copy could be furnished the Auditor (R. S., section 404); but the case of Garfielde vs. The United States (93 U. S., 242) appears to hold differently, at least so far as concerns the right to indemnity upon discontinuance of the service.

In Powers vs. The United States, 10 Court of Claims, 263, a contract was held valid though it had not been filed in the Interior Department, as required by statute.

The contract alleged to have been made has been shown me, and it appears to be genuine, executed in due form, under the seal of the Department, signed by the Postmaster-General, and by the officers of the company.

This contract provides a fixed compensation of $705 per mile, or $321,595 per year, for the period commencing January 1, 1874, and ending June 30, 1877.

The opinion of Assistant Attorney-General Spence, given upon this claim, assumes as a fact that no contract was executed. With the evidence submitted to me of the genuine, original documents, I am not prepared to say that no such contract was made.

Nor is it plain that the contract is invalid for want of power to make it. The Postmaster-General could not contract to pay a compensation in excess of the maximum rate fixed by the act of March 3, 1873 (17 Stat., p. 558), but nothing is shown to me which indicates that the rates fixed in the contract were in excess of the legal rates; that is, that the compensation was greater than the weight of mails at the time would have shown the company entitled to.

The bill submitted to me I do not think ought to pass.

1. Because it is a doubtful question whether this contract can be regarded as ever having been executed so as to bind the Government.

2. It is doubtful whether it is valid, even if executed.

3. It is not clear that the service was performed under the contract. It certainly was never so regarded by the Department, but was considered as "recognized service" and paid for under the statute, as I am informed.

But as there are questions of law involved which appear to me doubtful, it would seem to me that a bill permitting the company to test such question in the Court of Claims would be a more proper measure of relief, should Congress deem it in the interest of justice to waive the bar of the statute of limitations.

Very respectfully,
EDWIN E. BRYANT,
Assistant Attorney-General, Post-Office Department.

Hon. A. LEO KNOTT,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. BRUMM. Now I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DINGLEY. If I can have the attention of the chairman of the committee just one moment. All this bill does is to send this case to the Court of Claims, as I understand, to determine whether or not the contract was binding.

Mr. BRUMM. To determine whether the contract was binding, or whether or not it was properly filed. It is a legal proposition entirely.

Mr. DINGLEY. It was not paid because Congress intervened during that period and made a fixed rate?

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, no; it was because there was some irregularity in the Department in regard to the contract.

Mr. DINGLEY. A statute had been passed in the intermediate period fixing the compensation for carrying the mails.

Mr. BRUMM. If they have a claim at all, it rests upon a specific contract and not upon a statute.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I have not seen the report in this case, but I know what the policy of the Post-Office Department is. The Post-Office Department does not, to begin with, enter into a contract with the railroad companies. The railroad companies, it is true, make verbal agreements, and sometimes written agreements, with the Post-Office Department to carry mails within the limits of the law. I know it is a matter of very small importance to this House now——

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I assume that what the gentleman is stating is intensely interesting, and we in the back rows would really like to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will gentlemen in the rear of the seats cease conversation and gentlemen in the aisles be seated?

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Chairman, the letter of the Assistant Attorney-General, it seems to me, is sufficient to determine this claim. I think he says in as plain language as can be expressed that this railroad company has no claim against the Government. In view of the fact that the policy of the Department is not to enter into contracts with railroad companies, I can not anticipate how or why they should enter into a contract in this instance; and if they did, permit to say that at that time they could not have entered into a contract legally to give this railroad company any more than it was entitled to under the law.

There are several of these bills before Congress. They seem to be scattered all through the committees of this House; some before the Committee on Post-Offices, some before the Committee on Claims, and some maybe in other places. Here is a claim that is twenty-four years old, and which the Attorney-General says in as emphatic language as can be expressed that the railroad company has no claim against the Government; and yet Congress, without a word of debate, proposes to send this case to the Court of Claims. To do what? That is the question—what the Court of Claims are to do about it. There is some doubt about that. I have not had an opportunity to investigate the bill, and I am free to say I think this claim should have gone where similar claims do go. From the report submitted by the committee it would seem that they had not had much opportunity, or if they have they have not availed themselves of the means at their command to investigate this case.

Now, there is an allegation that there is a contract here. I should like to ask why inquiry has never been made at the proper place to ascertain whether a contract ever was executed or not? I know from some experience in connection with the Post-Office Department that as to contracts coming under the Second Assistant Postmaster-General the greatest care has always been exercised in the filing away of contracts. And I say without fear of successful contradiction, weighing my words, that if a contract ever was entered into, that matter can not be covered up in the records of the Post-Office Department, even if there were a desire to cover it up. Not alone does the law require the filing of the contract, and, if the contract is accepted, the keeping of that contract forever, but there are other records of contracts accepted besides the contracts themselves.

Now, the facts in this case evidently are as set forth by the Assistant Postmaster-General—that this railroad company has received every dollar to which it was entitled under the law. Of course the Committee on Claims treats this as a very trivial matter, saying that the bill proposes only to refer the case to the Court of Claims. We have heard so often, as if it were a perfectly harmless proposition, "The bill only refers the case to the Court of Claims." Why, sir, let me say, if you were to be here a hundred years from to-day, and if this case should not be determined before then, this claim will be pushed before Congress with greater vigor then than it is now. Probably the parties directly interested in this claim are dead; but their heirs will multiply as the years go by, and thus greater vigor will be given to the claim.

Now, when the Post-Office Department says emphatically that this railroad company must have received all that it is entitled to under the law, why endeavor to keep in existence and perpetuate the claim? My God! is it impossible to suppress a claim before Congress? You can not suppress it even when you pay it! Only a few Congresses subsequently, a claim comes up for something additional. I have had some experience on the Committee on Claims myself. I gave four years of hard work to the business of that committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Did the gentleman have any claims himself?

Mr. LOUD. Did I have any claims? Well, I never have passed a claim of my own through Congress. I do not think I ever shall have any myself. And if I ever have introduced a claim, I never had any personal interest in it beyond what the justice and equity of the case might demand. The gentleman from Tennessee who asked me that question knows well the history of claims. He knows that, like Banquo's ghost, they will not "down." You pay a claim to-day, and in a few years it is back here smiling. Something is claimed that was not paid before.

In this case, after a lapse of twenty-four years, we have a railroad company coming here and asking for mail pay. And we have not a word of explanation. The chairman of the committee and other members of the House cry "Vote!" "Vote!" upon a claim of $320,000. I think such a claim worthy of examination. Of course the amount is a mere bagatelle to you and me. We can pay a claim of half a million dollars and smile—yea, a claim of a million more, and smile again.

A MEMBER. What kind of a smile?

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman asks, what kind of a "smile?" I sometimes think the people themselves are smiling a sickly smile when they contemplate Congress. No system of revenue taxation yet devised—I measure my words—that can sustain this Government in times of peace. It was very easy to talk about sustaining this Government before we had a pension roll of $150,000,000 a year; but when we are staggering under that, I tell you a system of taxation, whether it be free-trade taxation or protective taxation, is a question that must come to plague the members of this Congress hereafter. But it seems this case is a mere matter of "Vote! Vote!" Only $320,000!

Now, I want the House to understand what the Department says, and, I think, in as plain language as can be employed. It says that this railroad company must, in the ordinary course of human events, have been paid all the money that it was entitled to under the law. I do not think Congress should refer this case to the Court of Claims in order to perpetuate its life after you and I have gone out of Congress and another set of men may be here to take it up and infuse fresh life into it.

Mr. BRUMM. My friend from California is in error when he suggests that the Postmaster-General has expressed himself in opposition to the passage of this bill. He simply stated that this claim ought not to be paid, as presented to the Department, but that it ought to go to the Court of Claims—just where we propose to send it.

Mr. LOUD. He raised no objection to that, I believe.

Mr. BRUMM. In addition to that, we have the letter of Don M. Dickinson, another Postmaster-General, saying that this matter ought to be sent to the Court of Claims.

My friend is also in error in saying that we made no effort to ascertain from the Department its view in regard to this claim. We have here what is alleged to be a contract. This whole matter involves a simple legal proposition—whether under the advice of two Postmasters-General, and now under the advice of the Committee on Claims, we ought to send this case to the Court of Claims to be decided. That court can examine the case better than we can, although they may not be able to do it as well as my friend from California.

Mr. LOUD. That would probably be impossible.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask my friend from Pennsylvania a question in connection with this bill. The Erie Railway Company, as I understand it, carried the mail under the provisions of the law?

Mr. BRUMM. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, the present law for the compensation of the railroad companies was passed, I believe, before 1874.

Mr. BINGHAM. My recollection is that it was passed in 1876. I am not able to state exactly, but that is my recollection.

Mr. LOUD. No; it was passed in 1873.

Mr. BINGHAM. In 1871 and 1872 I, as postmaster at Philadelphia, approved the contracts made with the roads there. It may have been 1873, and my memory is probably at fault. I would not pretend to be entirely accurate.

Mr. CANNON. In the Forty-second Congress, as I remember it. I came in in the Forty-third, and went immediately to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The law was then in force both as to compensation and for the cars used—the same law that is now in force, except that there has been a horizontal reduction of 5 per cent at one time and 10 per cent at another.

Mr. BINGHAM. That was done in 1876 and 1878.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if at any time since 1873 the Erie Railway, or any other railway company, carried the mails, it was done under the statute, or there might have been a contract under the statute, but it gave no greater or less rate of compensation to the railroad company than the statute fixes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Unless special facilities were added.

Mr. CANNON. But there were no special facilities at that time. This was before the period of any special-facility legislation.

Now, I repeat that if the Erie Railway Company performed any service for the Government at any time after 1873 they did it under the law, and when a bill proposes, under an alleged contract, which must have been made without authority of law, to send a claim of this character to the Court of Claims—if that is the purpose of it—it is, in my judgment, exceedingly unwise to take such action for various reasons, but mainly because the court might construe such action as conferring upon them some sort of jurisdiction that does not exist now under the law and would not exist at all except for this recommendation on the part of Congress.

For that reason I think it would be a very unwise thing to adopt the course provided here. If this recommendation is made, why it seems to me it would be setting a dangerous precedent; and in any event the bill ought not to pass. If my position is wrong, I am entirely willing to be instructed with reference to the matter.

Mr. BRUMM. It simply resolves itself into this: If this company has no case, the court will certainly not grant it any rights and will not confer the relief asked for here. If the company has a good case, it certainly is entitled to a hearing. At all events, I think these claimants should have the opportunity to present the question to the Court of Claims.

A MEMBER. Beyond question.

Mr. BRUMM (continuing). They have a right to a hearing as to whether there was a contract or not, and whether they have any just foundation for their claim against the Government. It is a right that this company should have to be permitted to establish, if it can establish it, that binding contracts were made and that they performed the service for which they did not receive compensation.

Now, here is what the Postmaster-General says:

> At all events, I think this claimant should have an opportunity to present the question to the Court of Claims, to establish, if it can, that binding contracts were made, that it performed the service, and that it did not receive compensation. On none of these questions do I assume to express an opinion.

Under the circumstances, it seems to me that it is rather a high-handed act for any gentleman on this floor to get up and say that he does not think this House ought to allow these people the right to litigate a question in which they are vitally interested, and secure, if they can, compensation for a service that they have already rendered. That right they can not exercise unless we grant it to them here, and here we have the recommendation of two Postmasters-General in favor of the action proposed, and also this is reported to the House without the dissenting voice of any member of the committee. It seems to me, therefore, that, being a purely legal question, the courts are better able to dispose of it than my learned friend from Illinois, or, indeed, any other member on this floor.

Mr. OTJEN. How long has this claim been pending?

Mr. BRUMM. It appeared here in the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, Fifty-first, and subsequent Congresses, and has been reported in every case favorably. The recommendation has been that these parties should be permitted to go to the Court of Claims and establish their rights.

Mr. CANNON. Is there not a claim that this railroad company has already received the statutory pay for carrying the mails?

A MEMBER. The report admits that.

Mr. BRUMM. That is not correct. One of the questions involved here, if the gentleman will permit me, is set out fully in the report and seems to have escaped the attention of gentlemen. This report states that the question involves controverted questions of law and facts which may, in justice to the Department and this railroad company, be submitted to judicial investigation and determination.

Mr. CANNON. But have they not already received their statutory pay for the service?

Mr. BRUMM. Not at all.

Mr. CANNON. Well, about that, or they could have gone to the Court of Claims and recovered the statutory pay.

I ask my friend whether he has any information as to whether or not they have received any pay for carrying the mails?

Mr. LOUD. The letter of the Attorney-General says they must have received it.

Mr. GREENE. This is just the kind of thing to keep this alive.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the amount involved in this claim?

Mr. CANNON. It is alleged to be three or four hundred thousand dollars. I do not know how much.

Mr. LOUD. They say $320,000, I think. I caught that in the reading.

Mr. BRUMM. The bill does not specify the amount.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I want to suggest to my friend that he either let the bill be permanently left upon the table or let it be passed over until another sitting of the Committee of the Whole, when the matter can be looked into; because I certainly have not, and I do not think my friend has, that complete knowledge touching this matter that we ought to have before we pass the bill. I have no prejudice against the Erie Railroad. If it has a claim that is founded in good conscience, it ought to be sent to the court.

Mr. BRUMM. I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I do not object to the suggestion made by the gentleman. Of course I can not speak for the whole committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let it be passed over.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the gentleman's suggestion—that it be laid on the table permanently?

Mr. YOST. No, not permanently, but that it be passed over.

Mr. BRUMM. What is the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CANNON. I suggest to the gentleman that it be allowed to remain on the Calendar, subject to be called up at some future day. And in the meantime the gentleman himself can find out the facts.

Mr. BRUMM. There is no objection to that. I ask the Clerk to call the next bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the bill be passed over, to retain its position on the Calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OLIVER C. BOSBYSHELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 581) for the relief of Oliver C. Bosbyshell, late superintendent United States mint at Philadelphia, Pa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Oliver C. Bosbyshell, late superintendent of the United States mint at Philadelphia, is hereby relieved and discharged from all liability for the acts of Henry S. Cochran, late weigh clerk of said United States mint at Philadelphia, in the embezzlement or larceny of certain gold-bullion bars, the property of the United States aforesaid, and from all liability to account for any and all embezzled or stolen gold-bullion bars by the said Henry S. Cochran, as aforesaid, the same having been without the default or negligence of the said Oliver C. Bosbyshell.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries no appropriation. It is simply to relieve the bondsmen of reliability.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let the report be read.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. BRUMM) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 581) for the relief of O. C. Bosbyshell, late superintendent United States mint at Philadelphia, Pa., having given the same careful consideration, beg leave to report it back to the House with recommendation that it be passed.

The facts are as follows:

In 1882, by regular transfer, there was brought from the United States assay office in New York to the mint of the United States at Philadelphia a large quantity of gold bullion in bars, which bars, for lack of proper storage facilities, were piled up in one corner of the vault attached to the weigh clerk's room. They remained thus loosely piled until the annual settlement of June, 1887, when the examiner of the Mint Bureau, now Director of the Mint, Hon. Robert E. Preston, who was making the settlement, directed that they be weighed, counted, and placed in a wire cage built across the end of the vault named. This was done to prevent the handling of the bars any oftener than need be. The door of the cage was locked, straps were run through the meshes of the wires across the openings, and seals were placed thereon to prevent the opening of the same without destroying the seals.

A certificate was attached certifying to the correctness of the count and to the contents, which certificate was signed by Robert E. Preston. Not anything was said or intimated at the time that the gold bullion thus locked up was for the purpose of coinage, or that it was other than a Treasury deposit. It remained in the mint unused until September, 1893, a period of over eleven years.

At the annual settlements of the mint in 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, and 1893 the officials from the Mint Bureau, finding the locks and seals of the cage mentioned intact, gave the superintendent credit for the full amount inclosed, as stated by the certificate attached.

Oliver C. Bosbyshell assumed the position of superintendent of the mint of the United States at Philadelphia on the 1st of November, 1889, relieving the Hon. Daniel M. Fox. The transfer was made under the direction of the Bureau of the Mint, represented by Mr. Preston. The locks and seals upon the cage containing the gold bullion were carefully examined, and being found intact, it was considered safe by those officially present for Colonel Bosbyshell to receive and receipt for the bullion according to the certificate signed by Mr. Preston, without counting, following the custom of the Washington officials in the annual settlements.

No keys to the cage were ever delivered to Colonel Bosbyshell. He had access to every other vault in the mint, but no access whatever to this cage.

At the time the bullion was placed in the cage, i. e., in 1887, a space of about an inch was left between the bottom of the door and the asphaltum floor, sufficient to slide a gold bar, of the size inclosed therein, through. A number of large silver bars were piled against the cage, covering this opening. When these were subsequently removed a small gold bar was found protruding from beneath the door of the cage. The authorities then placed a heavy plank against this opening, securely fastening it to iron stakes driven in the asphaltum floor, as well as to adjoining cages. This was done two months before Colonel Bosbyshell became superintendent.

In September, 1893, the cage was opened by orders from the Mint Bureau, and in the presence of Government officials from Washington.

There is strong presumption from the facts that the theft of bullion occurred before the incumbency of Colonel Bosbyshell, thereby explaining his receipt. Bars could be removed before the plank was placed at the bottom of the cage, but not afterwards, unless the plank was disturbed.

The gold bullion was received by Colonel Bosbyshell, according to the precedent established by the Government officials in the accounting at every annual settlement of the mint accounts, subsequent to the sealing up of this bullion.

The superintendent of the mint is under the control of the Bureau of the Mint at Washington, so far as the appointment of subordinates and the manner and regulation of the mint countings and settlements are concerned.

Henry S. Cochran, weigh clerk of the Philadelphia mint, was convicted of the theft of the gold bullion in question. The United States recovered on his bond $10,000, and in execution against his property. He is now serving a term of imprisonment in the Eastern Penitentiary.

There is no evidence to show that Colonel Bosbyshell was other than a faithful, efficient, and careful officer, and that he did not faithfully and diligently execute and discharge the duties of his office, or that the theft in question occurred through any act of negligence on his part.

The amount of the judgment of the United States against Colonel Bosbyshell is $14,448.20.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, D. C., January 16, 1897.

From the records of the Department it appears that Col. O. C. Bosbyshell was appointed register of deposits in the mint at Philadelphia in 1869. A few years later he was appointed assistant coiner, which position he continued to occupy until 1885, when he resigned to accept a position in the comptroller's office of the city of Philadelphia. In 1889 he was appointed superintendent of the mint. In entering upon his duty as superintendent he found there many persons who had been employed and associated with him during his previous connection with the mint, all of whose integrity had been unquestioned, and he receipted for the large amount of silver dollars and of gold bullion on the statement of those who had charge that the amount called for by the books was on hand.

Reposing faith in the statements made him, he did not have the large amount of gold and silver bullion and silver dollars weighed and counted.

Personally I have no doubt that all the bullion and coin which Colonel Bosbyshell receipted for was actually in the mint at that time, and the embezzlement of gold bullion was afterwards committed by Henry S. Cochran, weigh clerk, and who had been connected with the mint for over forty years.

The superintendent of the mint is of necessity compelled to trust a great deal to subordinates. Of Colonel Bosbyshell's personal honesty there is no doubt whatever, and I think it would be a matter of justice if Congress would pass a bill for his relief, which has been done on several occasions when embezzlements or losses have occurred in the office of the Treasurer of the United States.

R. E. PRESTON.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BRUMM. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. Does that $10,000 which has been collected apply on the $14,000, or is there $14,000 in addition to that $10,000?

Mr. BRUMM. The amount covered by the bill is the amount which they ask the bondsmen to be exonerated from. I do not remember the figures. The $10,000 was collected from the property of Cochran, and some of the bullion was restored.

Mr. BINGHAM. Collected from Cochran and his bondsmen.

Mr. BRUMM. Yes, and his bondsmen.

Mr. LACEY. Did the evidence on the trial of Cochran show when this embezzlement occurred, whether it was during Mr. Bosbyshell's time or that of the preceding man?

Mr. BINGHAM. There was no evidence of that on the trial, beyond the fact that they found some of these very same gold bars hidden by Cochran which were regained by the Government. The obligation of his bond only covered $10,000, but when Mr. Bosbyshell comes to the settlement of the accounts which they claim he must settle for, he must settle for the deficiency which was found to exist in this cage, the seals of which were unbroken. That is what his bondsmen would be held for.

Mr. BRUCKER. What was the total amount of embezzlement?

Mr. BINGHAM. Fourteen thousand dollars is yet in loss. He never had control of this gold in any wise. It was in a cage sealed by the Department. He had access to every other division of the mint excepting this cage. He had never the keys to the cage, they being in the possession of the Treasury Department, and the gold was never deposited there for coinage, for which he is responsible, but it was deposited there for storage, and remained there eleven years before this investigation was made. It must be remembered, as is stated here, that when these silver bars that had been piled against the side of the cage were taken out it was discovered that there was just an inch open whereby these gold bars could be pulled out, and Cochran did that. The testimony on the trial showed conclusively that Cochran was the guilty party, and he is now in the penitentiary.

Mr. LACEY. One other question. Is the amount to be released $4,000 or $14,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is whatever this bill sets forth.

Mr. BRUCKER. The bill does not give the amount.

Mr. BINGHAM. His bondsmen are responsible for the deficiency.

Mr. LACEY. The report does not seem to show how much the amount is which is to be released.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes; it specifies.

Mr. BRUMM. The amount of the judgment against Colonel Bosbyshell is $14,448.20.

Mr. LACEY. Did they collect $10,000 on that judgment?

Mr. BRUMM. They collected $10,000 from Cochran's bondsmen.

Mr. LACEY. Then there is only $4,000 remaining?

Mr. BINGHAM. No; the whole amount. The $14,000 is the remaining amount.

Mr. BRUMM. After deducting the $10,000.

Mr. STEELE. Let us see about this. They had silver in the same cage with gold and they sent to Washington for the key.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no; the authorities in Washington did that themselves. "At the annual settlement of the mint," the seal being unbroken, if the gentleman will read the report.

Mr. STEELE. He was charged with the custody of this property.

Mr. BINGHAM (reading)—

At the annual settlement of the mint in 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, and 1893 the officials from the Mint Bureau, finding the locks and seals of the cage mentioned intact, give the superintendent credit for the full amount inclosed, as stated by the certificate attached.

Mr. STEELE. When they took the silver away they put a plank in.

Mr. BINGHAM. As soon as they took the silver out they took this plank and riveted it down, so that it was impossible for the gold to get out. It was done before Bosbyshell went into possession; so that it was impossible for any extraction to be made.

Mr. STEELE. But it was made.

Mr. YOUNG of Pennsylvania. It was made by a man who had been weigher for a number of years.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no question, there never has been a question on the part of the Department, and it was disclosed at the trial, that Bosbyshell exercised every possible care and diligence for the protection of the Government. All of this came out in evidence in the trial, and it has never been disturbed during his administration.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

C. B. BRYAN & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1246) for the relief of C. B. Bryan & Co.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to C. B. Bryan & Co., of Memphis, Tenn., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,643.60, being for the value of a coal barge and 16,968 bushels of Pittsburg coal, as found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. BRUMM. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] who reported the bill.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the findings of the Court of Claims, not the entire report.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that connected with the report?

Mr. CARMACK. It is a part of the report. On page 2—the bottom of the page.

The Clerk read as follows:

I. C. B. Bryan, W. W. O'Neil, J. N. Large, and S. P. Large, trading under the firm name of C. B. Bryan & Co., are the successors and liquidators of the firm so named, which at the time this claim accrued consisted of said claimants and of the St. Bernard Coal Company, a corporation created under the laws of the State of Kentucky.

II. On or about the 17th day of November, 1879, the said firm, now in liquidation as aforesaid, were the owners and possessors of a coal barge, costing $700 and worth at that date the sum of $250, and of 16,968 bushels of Pittsburg coal laden upon said barge, and worth, at current wholesale rates, the sum of $3,393.60, said barge so laden being moored at the private landing of said firm, upon an island in the Mississippi River, about 2 miles above the city of Memphis, remote from the channel of navigation and the public landing, and then and long previously used exclusively as a mooring place for the coal barges of said firm.

III. On or about the day hereinbefore named the snag boat De Russy, owned by and in the service of the United States Engineer Department, came into the vicinity of the private landing aforesaid for the purpose of removing a snag from the channel of the river; but the master of said boat, deeming it inadvisable to begin the work before the next morning, headed his vessel toward said private landing for the purpose of tying up over night, and came into the still water about said landing with such speed as to crush, sink, and destroy the barge and landing aforesaid.

IV. At the time of the collision, fifteen minutes after 5 in the afternoon, it was twilight. Neither the snag boat nor any other boat in the vicinity was carrying lights, nor was there any necessity for lights.

V. The claimants endeavored to recover some of the submerged coal, but their efforts and expenditures were unavailing.

VI. It does not appear that any payment or satisfaction has been made on account of the losses stated.

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to say in regard to this bill that there is a unanimous report of the committee in favor of the bill. There have been several reports from the Committee on Claims in previous Congresses. The bill was introduced in the Forty-ninth Congress, referred to the Court of Claims, and the findings have been read by the Clerk. There was a unanimous report in the Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, and Fifty-fourth Congresses. I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman, while the findings of the court seem to be perfectly clear, why did not those parties go into court and sue before?

Mr. EVANS. Because they had no authority to do so.

Mr. LOUD. Why not?

Mr. EVANS. Because the court had no jurisdiction?

Mr. CARMACK. They could not go into court except by an act of Congress. This is an action sounding in tort.

Mr. STEELE. What excuse did they have for putting so much coal in an old dilapidated barge?

Mr. CARMACK. At that time the Court of Claims had no jurisdiction of this claim.

Mr. LOUD. The findings seem clear. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

RICHMOND LOCOMOTIVE AND MACHINE WORKS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1133) to pay to the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works its claim for damages and losses incurred in the construction of the armored battle ship Texas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works the sum of $69,550.39, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full of its claim for damages and losses incurred in the construction of the armored battle ship Texas.

Mr. YOST. Mr. Speaker, I think I can present, in a very few words, the facts upon which this claim is based. The Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works were the contractors for the machinery of the battle ship Texas. The Government was to furnish the hull. By reason of delay on the part of the Government in getting the hull ready to receive the machinery these contractors were put to heavy expense. They presented their claim to the Navy Department, and the Navy Department audited and adjusted that claim, and its statement is that the Government was indebted to the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works to the amount of $80,049.35.

The amount thus allowed by the Navy Department was favorably passed upon by five committees. The sixth committee, however, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, cut out three items—that is, for interest, surety, and for insurance—and reduced it to $69,550.39. This committee reports in favor of the last-mentioned sum, not because they do not believe that the claimant is entitled to the full amount found by the Navy Department, but because the claimant has agreed to accept this, so that the matter may be settled at once. I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CANNON. I seems to me "no." I think we had better have this report read. I have a recollection about this bill, having looked into it at one time, and I came to the conclusion that it was a very debatable bill. It seems to me that——

Mr. YOST. If the gentleman will look at page 11 of the report, at the top, he will find the recommendation of the Department, from the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. DALZELL. Why not have the report read?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. It is a long report.

Mr. CANNON. I shall have to ask, in my time, for the reading of the report, so I can get time to revive my recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman.

Mr. YOST. The gentleman does not want the exhibits read. It is a long report.

Mr. CANNON. I looked into this case as rapidly as I could at one time, and made inquiry, and from the examination my recollection is that my judgment was against the justice of this bill; and now, as it comes up, I must confess that the evidence in the case has faded from my mind, and before I assent to the practical passage of the bill I want to revive my recollection about it, and a bill of this kind ought not to be passed without consideration.

Mr. YOST. If the gentleman from Illinois will state his objections, I think we can meet them.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Is the report long?

Mr. YOST. The report is short, but the exhibits are long.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to have the report read?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a suggestion. It is manifest from the length of this report that it can not be read before 5 o'clock, when we shall take a recess. I want to suggest to the gentleman that for that reason this bill can go over without prejudice.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that I was unable to get a report. I tried to get one, and I was told that they were exhausted.

Mr. YOST. That is not our fault.

Mr. EVANS. I want to suggest that we agree to pass the bill over without prejudice and have the report reprinted.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the next bill on the Calendar?

Mr. EVANS. The next bill is one that I want to make an appeal to the House for. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. I want to say that I had agreed to ask that the committee rise at a quarter of 5 o'clock, so that we now have only thirteen minutes.

Mr. EVANS. That is the reason I asked to have the bill go over.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, Mr. Chairman, let the Clerk proceed with the reading of the report.

The Clerk began the reading of the report (by Mr. YOST), as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1133), entitled "A bill to pay to the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works its claim for damages and losses incurred in the construction of the armored battle ship Texas," respectfully report the same, with the recommendation that it do pass.

This bill passed the Senate during the Fifty-fourth Congress, but failed to pass the House of Representatives, though it was favorably reported to that body from its Committee on Claims. A copy of said report to the House of Representatives (Report No. 2286) is submitted herewith as a part of this report, giving the full history and merits of the claim.

[House Report No. 2286, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred Senate bill 3269, beg leave to report:

After full investigation your committee find that the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works, of Richmond, Va., by contract with the Government of the United States, of date May 30, 1889, became contractors for the construction and delivery of the machinery for the United States armored battle ship Texas, which was to be built by the Government at the Norfolk Navy-Yard, Va. The Government, upon its part, was to construct the hull of said vessel.

Under the terms of the contract, the contractors were placed under heavy bonds, in which forfeitures and penalties were amply provided, requiring them to have completed said machinery and to commence the erection of the same on board the Texas on November 30, 1891. On account of a very disastrous fire at the works of the contractors pending the construction of said machinery, and by which a large amount thereof was destroyed, the time within which the machinery was to be constructed and erected was extended until July 30, 1893. The contractors claim that they performed their contract in all respects, but that they were subjected to considerable and unreasonable delay and to additional expenses and damage in the completion of the machinery under their contract by reason of the failure on the part of the Government to complete the hull of the Texas in time to allow the machinery to be finished and tested as required.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have the floor I want to stop right there and ask a question. It seems that the Government extended the time within which the machinery was to be constructed because of the misfortune of the contractor. Is that correct?

Mr. YOST. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And now they come and claim that after that extension the Government did not furnish the hull exactly on time.

Mr. YOST. If the gentleman will read further on in the report he will find that the Government itself got the full benefit of that extension, and nothing is claimed for it at all. That time was not allowed in the computation. On page 8 the gentleman will find in a letter from the Secretary of the Navy a paragraph relative to this point.

Mr. CANNON. Who wrote the letter?

Mr. YOST. The Acting Secretary of the Navy, Mr. McAdoo.

Mr. CANNON. Well, that occurred to me as we were passing along, and we will get at it later on.

Mr. YOST. The gentleman's objection is fully covered on page 8.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the report, as follows:

A statement in writing setting forth the claim of the contractors, made by Mr. W. R. Trigg, president of said company, accompanies this report, marked Exhibit A. This fully presents the view of the contractor. The amended bill accompanying this report was submitted to the honorable Secretary of the Navy by the Committee on Naval Affairs with the request that he would furnish such information and advice in the premises as might be deemed proper. His letter in response is herewith filed as part of this report, marked Exhibit B. By this it will be seen that it is admitted that the contractors were subjected to delays and additional expense in the construction of the machinery by reason of the failure of the Government to complete the hull in time to allow the machinery to be placed and tested.

The Navy Department has audited and adjusted the claim of said locomotive works in conformity with House bill No. 8606, and its letter and audited statement, together with other papers returned therewith, are herewith filed as a part of this report, marked Exhibit C. From this document it appears that the chiefs of the Bureaus of Construction and Repair and Steam Engineering report upon and allow the claim of the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works as follows:

Summary of claims as allowed.

Direct damage	$56,179.73
Interest	8,740.24
Insurance	1,150.72
Dock trial	12,778.66
Damage to schooner	600.00
Security	600.00
Total	80,049.35

This amount was thus allowed by the Navy Department and favorably passed upon by five committees. The sixth committee, however—the Appropriations Committee of the Senate—but recently struck out the items of interest, insurance, and surety, thereby reducing the amount allowed to the sum of $69,550.39, in which this committee concur. Not that the entire $80,049.35 is not justly due, but the owners of the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Company having agreed to accept the smaller amount in order to secure an immediate settlement, your committee recommend that said Senate bill 3269 do pass.

EXHIBIT A.

The claim of the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works against the United States for delay by the Government in completing the hull of the U. S. armored battle ship Texas.

The Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works asks that an act be passed authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to audit the claim of the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works, and allow such an amount as he may think just to be paid to said works for damages to it by reason of the failure of the United States Government to complete, according to its agreement, the hull of the U. S. armored battle ship Texas, the machinery of which has been built by the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works. In this behalf the said company respectfully submits the following statement of facts:

In response to Government offers for bids to construct, according to the specifications, the machinery of the U. S. armored battle ship Texas, the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works was the lowest bidder out of six bids that were presented, and obtained the contract at the price of $634,000 under date of May 30, 1889. The work was to be completed and put into the ship in three and a half years. The Government undertook to build the hull in which this machinery was to be placed.

About the time of the execution of the contract the attention of the then Secretary of the Navy, Hon. B. F. Tracy, was called to the fact that there was no provision for damages to the builders of the machinery in the event that the Government failed to have the hull completed to receive the machinery in due time. The Secretary refused to consider any amendment to cover this suggestion, and ridiculed it as an unreasonable and preposterous proposition, and refused to allow it to be put into the contract.

The facts now are that the hull is not yet completed, and the final trial of the machinery on a free route, which the contractors are entitled to, can not in all probability be had for a year or more.

Owing to a disastrous fire destroying much of the buildings and machinery of the works and at the same time much of the work done for the Texas, the Department granted an extension of eight months to the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works on its contract.

In order that the machinery might be tested before the payment of the last installment, not including the reserve of 10 per cent which remained with the Government, the Government permitted a dock trial of the Texas to be had at the Norfolk Navy-Yard on the 12th and 15th of May, 1894.

At this trial the machinery indicated greater power than was required for the dock trial. During this trial, and while the ship was not under the control of the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works, the current created by the propeller drew in the schooner H. W. Slicer from the stream and sunk her, on account of which this company has had to pay damages amounting to $600.

By an agreement entered into on the 26th day of December, 1894, between the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works of the first part and the United States, represented by the Secretary of the Navy, of the second part, the contract of May 30, 1889, for the construction of the machinery of the U. S. armored battle ship Texas was modified. Among the recitals the following occurs:

Whereas in view of the fact that the completion of said machinery has been further delayed by reason of the failure of the party of the second part to complete the hull of the Texas, and in view, also, of the fact that the fulfillment of said contract on the part of the party of the first part would still further be hindered by the completion of the vessel, the party of the second part has, upon the request of the party of the first part, consented to accept the machinery at this time instead of waiting for the completion of the same. * * *

This settlement was made, but the party of the first part was required to give bond and security that whenever the ship should be completed a trial of the machinery on a free route should be had, as first contemplated by the contract and subject to the conditions and provisions described therein; and that any deficiency in horsepower or any expense incurred by the Government by the breaking down or deterioration of the machinery in part or parts thereof shall be made good by the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works.

Mr. BRUMM (interrupting the reading of the report). Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. I notice on page 4 of this bill, and I have got to revive my recollection of it by reading the report, that it seems that after this delay that upon the statement of the Richmond Works, the contractors, a settlement was made.

Mr. BRUMM. I do not care to discuss the merits of the bill at this time. I promised to ask the committee to rise at fifteen minutes to 5. Complaints are made that the reports are exhausted, and before asking the committee to rise I wish to ask that the report be printed in full in the RECORD, so that members may have the report.

Mr. CANNON. My friend, Mr. WALKER, suggests that that will cost more money, but if he will take the report and read it he will find that the matters were settled; and if that is so, he will not begrudge the reprint of the report.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I do not begrudge the reprint of the report at all. I know the report is just, and I would like to see the bill pass.

Mr. CANNON. My opinion is that, while my friend from Massachusetts may think it is a just claim, so far as his technical knowledge of the claim is concerned, what he does not know about it would make a book. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. What each of us does not know about anything would make quite a book. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. I ask unanimous consent that the full report be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CANNON. No; not in the RECORD. Let it be reprinted as a document.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, I ask unanimous consent that it be reprinted as a document.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has no authority to order the reprint of a document; that will have to be done in the House.

Mr. BRUMM. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration House bill 581 and House bill 1246, and reported the same back without amendment with the recommendation that they pass; that the committee had also had under consideration Senate bill 1133, an act to pay to the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works the claim for damages and losses incurred in the construction of the armored battle ship Texas, and had come to no resolution thereon.

OLIVER C. BOSBYSHELL.

The first bill reported by the Committee of the Whole was House bill 581, a bill for the relief of Oliver C. Bosbyshell, late superintendent United States mint, Philadelphia, Pa., which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

C. B. BRYAN & CO.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was the bill (H. R. 1246) for the relief of C. B. Bryan & Co.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRUMM, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the two bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were passed was laid on the table.

RICHMOND LOCOMOTIVE WORKS.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask that the report on Senate bill 1133, in regard to the Richmond Locomotive Works, be reprinted. The edition already issued seems to be exhausted.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask that I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Senate bill No. 628, to pay the claim of the executors of John Roach.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

IMPROVEMENT OF HUMBOLDT HARBOR, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BARHAM. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 119) for the improvement of Humboldt Harbor, California.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to submit detailed estimates from information now on file of the costs for the proposed dredging and improvement of Humboldt Harbor, California, as contemplated by the river and harbor act of June 3, 1896, and by the report of Cassius E. Gillette, captain of engineers, submitted to Congress in the report of the Chief of Engineers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this an improvement which has been authorized by any river and harbor act, or is it a new improvement?

Mr. BARHAM. It is a new improvement.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this merely a proposition for a survey?

Mr. BARHAM. Simply for an estimate. The survey is waived.

Mr. DINGLEY. If this is a proposition for an estimate for an improvement not yet authorized, I suggest that the usual provision be added for a report from the War Department upon the question whether such an improvement should, in the judgment of the Department, be undertaken by the Government.

Mr. BARHAM. The War Department has already recommended the improvement.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the improvement has been recommended already by the War Department, of course there is no occasion for the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. CANNON. Will not an estimate come here in the ordinary course of things?

Mr. BARHAM. Not at all. There is no necessity for a survey, and that is waived, thus saving the Government about $500. This resolution calls simply for an estimate.

Mr. CATCHINGS. This is a case where the War Department does not need a survey in order to make an estimate; but an estimate can not be submitted without the authority of Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to know whether the Chief of Engineers has expressed any opinion as to the desirability of this work?

Mr. CATCHINGS. According to my understanding, he has; and he can make an estimate without going to the expense of a formal survey.

Mr. DOCKERY. He has approved the work?

Mr. CATCHINGS and Mr. BARHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. If he approves the work, of course it is not necessary to add the usual proviso.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARHAM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FRANK LOYD.

Mr. TATE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7318) for the relief of Frank Loyd, of Georgia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title acquired by the United States to the land hereinafter described, at the sale made by the marshal of the northern district of Georgia under and by virtue of a fieri facias issued from district court of the United States for the northern district of Georgia on the 31st day of January, 1890, and purchased by the United States on the 3d day of March, 1891, the day of sale, at Atlanta, Ga., sold as the property of Alexander M. Mauldin to satisfy said execution, namely, 200 acres of land, lots numbered 310 and 311 in the eighteenth district and first section of Towns County, Ga., is hereby released and acquitted in favor of Frank Loyd, his heirs and assigns, upon the payment to the Solicitor of the Treasury of all costs incurred by the United States in obtaining judgment against said Alexander M. Mauldin, and in bringing said land to sale and in advertising and selling the same.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the Public Lands were read, as follows:

Insert in line 17, page 2, after the word "cost," the following: "and expense."

Also amend by adding, after the word "same," in line 19, page 2, the following: "And also all costs in case of United States against Benjamin Church for retailing."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TATE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. R. 129. Joint resolution relative to suspension of part of section 355 of Revised Statutes, relative to erection of forts, fortifications, etc.

S. 771. An act to incorporate the National Florence Crittenton Mission.

TEXAS STATE FAIR AND EXPOSITION.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 14) authorizing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the Texas State Fair and Exposition, to be held at Dallas, Tex., in 1897, to be imported free of duty, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the Texas State Fair and Exposition, to be held at Dallas, Tex., in October, 1897, upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty shall be admitted free of payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exhibition to sell, for delivery at the close of said fair and exposition, any goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition in the fair and exposition buildings or on their grounds, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when sold or withdrawn for consumption in the United States, shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such article by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation, and all penalties prescribed by law shall be applied and enforced against such articles and against the persons who may be guilty of any illegal sale or withdrawal.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of the execution of this act Dallas, Tex., may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be a port of delivery in the customs collection district in which it is situated.

The Committee on Ways and Means recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Amend the title to read:

"Joint resolution authorizing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the Texas State Fair and Dallas Exposition, to be held at Dallas, Tex., to be imported free of duty, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

In line 5, before the word "Exposition," insert the word "Dallas." In the same line, after the word "Texas," strike out "in October, 1897."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. Before consent is given, Mr. Speaker, there is another amendment to this resolution which the committee reported, and which has not been read.

Mr. PAYNE. The amendments which have been read are not the only amendments which were agreed to in committee.

Mr. BURKE. I was going to ask to have the committee's report read, which sets out in full all the amendments agreed upon.

Mr. PAYNE. One of the amendments of the committee fixed a different date from that read. Let us have the committee amendments reported.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me interrupt the gentleman for an inquiry.

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Does this report come from the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not going to object to the unanimous consent asked for by my colleague. I did not attend the meeting of the committee, but I wish to state that I am just as much opposed to an exposition in Texas at governmental expense as in Omaha.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman had been present, he would have had an opportunity to vote with me on that question. I also voted against it.

Mr. DALZELL. I wish to say that I was opposed to this proposition myself.

Mr. PAYNE. But the point that I was making is that what has been read by the Clerk are not the committee amendments.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let us have the bill read as reported by the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. In the first place, the date was changed from 1897 to 1898. But the bill as read and proposed to be amended leaves it open for all time to come.

Mr. BURKE. I ask the Clerk to read the report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. PAYNE. And the committee amendments required the State Fair Association to reimburse the United States for every dollar of expense, including the salary of special officers. That does not appear in the bill which has been read.

Mr. BURKE. But the report of the Committee on Ways and Means, which I hold in my hand, shows in full what the action was.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask to have the bill and amendments reported.

Mr. STEELE. I regret to call attention to the fact, but it is 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls attention to the fact that the hour of 5 o'clock has arrived, and under the rules the House will stand in recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] to act as Speaker pro tempore at the evening session.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Mr. CONNOLLY, as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule under which this session is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that all bills for the removal of desertion be passed over to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. BROWNLOW. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina that after the conclusion of the pension bills, then we take up the charges of desertion.

Mr. TALBERT. My object is that the bills for original pensions be reached first.

Mr. BROWNLOW. I am willing that we go ahead until we conclude the consideration of pension bills, and then take up the bills for the removal of desertion immediately following them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request as modified?

There was no objection.

And then, on motion of Mr. RAY of New York, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, under subdivision 2 of Rule XXVI, with Mr. MOODY in the chair.

MYNTIE L. HAMILTON.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2866) granting a pension to Myntie L. Hamilton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Myntie L. Hamilton, widow of Jesse B. Hamilton, late of Company A, First Regiment of the Wisconsin Cavalry.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read:

From lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "at the rate of $12 per month."

Add at the end of line 7 the following: "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so it will read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Myntie L. Hamilton."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I think that the reports ought to be read in these cases, so that the House may know what it is voting upon. I think it is in order that the report should always be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT].

The report (by Mr. CASTLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2866) granting an increase of pension to Myntie L. Hamilton, have examined the same and the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This bill proposes to increase from $8 per month to $12 the pension of Myntie L. Hamilton, of Michigan, the widow of Jesse V. Hamilton, late of Company A, First Wisconsin Cavalry, who served from September 11, 1861, to December 2, 1862, and was honorably discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability, on account of "chronic enteritis, emaciation, anæmia, softening of the structures of the heart, occasioning great embarrassment in the circulation of the blood."

The soldier filed and established a claim for pension on account of disease and partial deafness of both ears, and was pensioned therefor at $4 from date of discharge; $6 from December 14, 1881; $12 from June 8, 1886; $14 from November 15, 1887; $18 from August 27, 1888; reduced to $17 from March 4, 1892.

He filed a claim under the general law for chronic diarrhœa, disease of stomach, liver, bowels, and urinary organs, and malaria, but that claim was rejected November 10, 1893, on the ground that the evidence was not satisfactory to establish origin or continuance.

Soldier committed suicide by drowning September 9, 1892, and on September 27, 1892, the widow filed a claim under the general law, alleging that the soldier drowned himself while insane and that the insanity was due to the diseases and disabilities contracted in the service. On the same date a claim was filed under the act of June 27, 1890, which was established, and claimant was granted and is now drawing $8 per month, with the usual allowance for minors.

The claim under the general law appears to have been overlooked or ignored, as it has never been adjudicated, and the claimant has failed to furnish satisfactory evidence to connect death with service; in fact, it would probably be impossible to furnish evidence that would be accepted at the Pension Office to prove that soldier's death from suicide was due to his service, although such is probably the fact. This case is on all fours with that of Barbara Miller, which has already passed both the House and the Senate.

Claimant was married to the soldier in May, 1857, is about 60 years of age, has no income or means of support except her pension of $8 per month, and has three children under 16 years of age and one 17.

Your committee therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

From lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "at the rate of $12 per month."

Add at the end of line 7 the following: "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so it will read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Myntie L. Hamilton."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, the report here states that the soldier's death from suicide was not due to service origin, or anything of that sort.

Mr. RAY of New York. No, I beg the gentleman's pardon. It states that such was probably the fact, but that legal evidence satisfactory to the Pension Bureau can not probably be adduced at this late day. On the examination of this evidence the committee were satisfied that because of these diseases from which he suffered, which did affect the brain, he became insane.

Mr. TALBERT. It says here:

Failed to furnish satisfactory evidence to connect the death with service.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is true. He committed suicide by drowning. The question is whether or not that insanity which caused him to commit suicide was produced by these diseases, all conceded to be of service origin. At this late day it is almost impossible to get before the Pension Bureau the necessary legal evidence to establish the facts, but on a careful review of the evidence the committee were satisfied, morally certain, that he did become insane because of the diseases which he contracted in the service. That is the main ground upon which we reported the bill.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM TAYLOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 752) granting an increase of pension to William Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William Taylor, late of Company D, Fourteenth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers, on the pension roll, and cause to be paid to him a pension of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 6 strike out the words "cause to be paid to" and insert in lieu thereof the word "pay."

In line 7 strike out the words "of thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "at the rate of twenty-four."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendments proposed by the committee.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the first part of the report read. It is a long one. I do not want all the accompanying documents read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The report (by Mr. WARNER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 772) granting an increase of pension to William Taylor, submits the following report thereon:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $17 to $24 per month the pension of William Taylor, of La Crosse, Wis.

The War Department record shows that William Taylor was enrolled October 21, 1861, and was mustered into the United States service on January 30, 1862, as a private in Company D, Fourteenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, to serve three years, and was mustered out February 7, 1865.

The soldier is now a pensioner at $17 per month for double inguinal hernia incurred at Pittsburg Landing in May, 1862, and for piles and rheumatism.

The proof filed with your committee shows that the soldier was born on the 20th day of May, 1807, and is now in his ninetieth year; that he is unable to perform manual labor, owing to his extreme age and the disabilities mentioned; that he has no means of support except his pension and what he receives as doorkeeper at the court-house in the city of La Crosse, Wis., during the terms of court, and which amounted to from $75 to $100 per year for the past three years; that he has no property except a small house and lot occupied by himself and family, which is of small value; that he married late in life, and now has a family consisting of himself and wife and four children, three girls and one boy, and that his youngest daughter is about 20 years of age.

The proof filed with your committee further shows that the soldier is an industrious, temperate, and upright man; that he is addicted to no vices, is an excellent citizen of exemplary habits, of the highest integrity and standing, and is in every way worthy of favorable consideration on the part of the Government.

Your committee, in view of the extreme age of the beneficiary and his consequent inability to perform manual labor, the admitted disabilities with which he is afflicted and for which he is receiving a pension, his total dependence on his pension and his own exertions for the support of himself and family, believe that the case belongs to the class which should receive favorable consideration by Congress, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill when amended as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "cause to be paid to" and insert in lieu thereof the word "pay."

In line 7 strike out the words "of thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "at the rate of twenty-four."

The amendments proposed by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

RANSOM S. ANGELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1466) granting an increase of pension to Ransom S. Angell, late private of Company G, First Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Ransom S. Angell, late private in Company G, First Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $17 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read:

After the word "pension," in line 6, insert the words "at the rate."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting an increase of pension to Ransom S. Angell."

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to use a few minutes of the time of the committee this evening. I had a few remarks which I intended to make several days ago, but had no opportunity to do so. I concluded yesterday that I would quietly and without ostentation have them buried in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and asked unanimous consent for the purpose of doing so, but the gentleman from Maine, in the kindness of his heart, objected, and of course that settled that. Hence the necessity for passing through the House now with these few remarks in order to reach the Congressional Cemetery.

Mr. Speaker, it is said "that no country in Europe, save Turkey, is in so bad a plight as Spain, morally, socially, financially, intellectually. In the domain of literature she has excelled only in the drama and the novel. Not a single great statesman, philosopher, moralist, historian, or scientist has Spain produced." Still she must even now have some able diplomats who have been able to keep our President and his advisers in uncertainty and doubt until the long delay weakens our faith and makes the heart sick. When we remember how great Spain once was, it is difficult to realize how low she has fallen.

A century ago she owned one-third of the world. Two hundred years ago she "might have stood against the world." Now "none so poor as to do her reverence." With the loss of her great estates she has degenerated into a most cruel and relentless foe to personal and national liberty. The war for Cuban independence has been going on for more than three years, relentlessly waged by Spain by methods of cruelty, assassination, and starvation unknown to civilized warfare. This plan of authorized and systematic starvation is still going on at our very doors. In addition to this, the spirit echoes of 266 of our noble officers and seamen, American citizens, murdered, if not by Spanish authority, by Spanish treachery, comes to us from the ground or from the muddy waters of Havana Harbor, pleading, if not for vengeance, at least for settlement and speedy punishment.

What shall we, a great and powerful liberty and justice loving people, do about it? If the independence of Cuba can not be secured without war, then let war come—the sooner the better. A hostile fleet now approaches American waters, and further delay may mean a much longer and more disastrous war. Looking at the matter from the standpoint of patriotism, honor, justice, and even mercy, "Why halt we between two opinions? If the Lord be God, serve Him; if Baal, then serve him." May the God of nations guide us to that decision which is wisest and best, so we may act without unnecessary delay. [Applause.]

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FRANCES E. PEASE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 668) granting a pension to Frances E. Pease.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Frances E. Pease, widow of William R. Pease, late colonel One hundred and seventeenth New York Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $15 a month.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. HENRY of Connecticut) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 668) to pension Frances E. Pease, have examined the same and all the evidence and respectfully report:

This bill proposes to pension at $15 per month, total of rank of her husband, Frances E. Pease, of Wallingford, Conn. She is the widow of William R. Pease.

The following from the Senate report (No. 496) gives the facts and fully warrants the action of the Senate:

"The soldier graduated at West Point in 1855, and was appointed a second lieutenant; was promoted to first lieutenant March 23, 1861, and to captain June 8, 1861, and colonel August 15, 1862.

"The records of the War Department show that he contracted heart disease, or nervous affection of the heart, in 1859, while on duty in the West. The records show that Lieutenant Pease suffered from May 17, 1859, from a nervous affection of the heart, causing violent palpitation of the heart and complete prostration of the system. It is shown that he continued to suffer on account of this disability until 1863, when he was retired as a captain, United States Army, on August 25, 1863.

"He served at Camp Hasken, Virginia, when, upon recommendation of the surgeon, he was sent before a retiring board. The board was of opinion that Captain Pease was incapacitated for active service and that his incapacity resulted from sickness and exposure in the service. After his retirement he was on duty until 1870, being stationed at Washington, D. C., Hartford, Conn., and as professor of military science at State University of Wisconsin. He died June 7, 1895, at Wallingford, Conn.; cause of death, as reported by W. T. Russell, M. D., angina pectoris (primary), asthenia (secondary).

"The widow filed a claim for pension February 18, 1896, under the general law. This was rejected on the following grounds:

"'No title. Soldier died of disease contracted in military service prior to March 4, 1861. Widow not entitled to pension on account of such death unless its cause originated in some war. Adjutant-General reports that during period from September, 1858, to September, 1859, the regiment was not engaged in any action with Indians or Mormons.'

"This woman is the widow of an officer who contracted his fatal disability while in the service and line of duty, and should be pensioned at the total of rank which he held when he contracted such disability (second lieutenant, $15 per month).

"On this 1st day of December, A. D. 1897, before me, a notary public in and for the county of New Haven and State of Connecticut, personally appeared Frances E. Pease, a resident of Wallingford, county of New Haven, and State of Connecticut, who, being duly sworn according to law, declares that she is the widow of William R. Pease, who died at Wallingford aforesaid on the 7th day of June, 1895. That she was married under the name of Frances E. Strickland to the said William R. Pease on the 2d day of October, 1883, there being no legal barrier to said marriage. That she has not remarried since the death of the said William R. Pease. That there is now living, the issue of said marriage, Robert W. Pease, aged 13 years.

"That the said Robert W. Pease is not able to earn anything toward his own or the support of his mother, the said Frances E. Pease. That the said William R. Pease served during the war of the rebellion in the service of the United States, and for a number of years prior to his death was on the retired list and received from the Government of the United States $157.50 per month, and was receiving said sum to the time of his death; and that he was without means of support other than the amount so received from the Government of the United States. That she, the said Frances E. Pease, is not now receiving and has not received a pension since the death of her said husband, the said William R. Pease. That she is without adequate means of support other than her daily labor. That her only means of support is by keeping boarders, and that she is physically able to keep boarders a part of the time only.

"That she has suffered for a number of years past and is now a great sufferer from eczema, which renders her unable to perform manual labor, and but for the assistance of her mother and relatives would have suffered for the necessaries of life.

"FRANCES E. PEASE.

"STATE OF CONNECTICUT, New Haven County, ss:

"Sworn to and subscribed before me at Wallingford, in said county and State, this 1st day of December, A. D. 1897. I hereby certify that the foregoing affidavit was fully made known and explained to the affiant before swearing, and that I have no interest in said claim, either direct or indirect.

[SEAL.] "CHAS. A. HARRISON, Notary Public."

This widow is now poor and in failing health.

The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MOSES M. CRANTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1751) granting an increase of pension to Moses M. Crants.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Moses M. Crants, late a private in Company G, One hundred and seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension of $24 he is now receiving, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "and pay him a pension."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not make the Clerk read the long report, giving the service of this soldier, but will let me make a statement.

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, the evidence in this case shows this——

Mr. TALBERT. I did not have the report before me.

Mr. RAY of New York. This is a Senate bill, which comes over to us with their approval, and we have investigated the matter. The evidence shows that he did long and faithful service as a soldier; and there is nothing against his record. He contracted in the service hernia, varicocele, and asthma, and received an injury to the back. He is now suffering from these disabilities, and is allowed a pension at $24 for his service disabilities. In addition to that, he has now locomotor ataxia. You know what that is. He can not do anything; he can hardly stand; and we have given him an increase. The Bureau allowed his pension at $24, and the Senate has increased it to $30 a month, simply on account of his helplessness not of service origin. We approve the Senate bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Let him have it.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY I. VALENTINE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 584) granting a pension to Mary I. Valentine.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Mary I. Valentine, daughter of the late Joseph E. Valentine, of Company A, Ninety-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Volunteers," insert "and pay her a pension."
In same line strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

RHODA A. VAN NIMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3517) granting a pension to Rhoda A. Van Niman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rhoda A. Van Niman, widow of Enoch I. Van Niman, late of Company F, Forty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS S. TEFFT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8299) granting an increase of pension to Thomas S. Tefft.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Thomas S. Tefft, late of Company —, First New York Dragoons, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that the bill is somewhat incomplete in the fifth line. The company is not given. The Chair is not sure that has been called to the attention of the gentleman.

Mr. RAY of New York. I remember that; and I do not know whether my colleague, Mr. HOOKER, who is here, can furnish the information.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not know whether I can. I will, however, see that the bill is amended before it is passed.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LAURITZ OLSEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7321) granting a pension to Lauritz Olsen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Lauritz Olsen, late a member of the Second Minnesota Battery Light Artillery, and pay him a pension of $50 a month from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "of fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of forty."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that report read.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I will state the facts in this case. This soldier served over three years in the Army, and he is suffering from disabilities that now entitle him to a small pension; but by an accident he lost both of his hands and both forearms by a premature discharge of a cannon.

Mr. TALBERT. That accident occurred in 1888.

Mr. GIBSON. That is true. If it had been of service origin, he would have been entitled to $72 a month.

Mr. NORTHWAY. One hundred dollars a month.

Mr. GIBSON. We give him $40 a month. It is a very meritorious case, and is unanimously agreed to by the committee.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM TOMPKINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8680) granting an increase of pension to William Tompkins.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

NEWTON W. COOPER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4189) granting a pension to Newton Cooper.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Newton W. Cooper on the pension roll, at the rate of $72 per month, for the services rendered during the war of the rebellion by the said Newton W. Cooper, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws and in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Newton W. Cooper, late private, Company H, Third Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

PETER CASTLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4488) to increase the pension of Peter Castle, late of Company D, Fourth Provisional New York Cavalry.

In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "on account of disease of the heart and deafness."
In line 7, after "of," insert "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY K. OPP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6411) granting an increase of pension to Henry K. Opp.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Henry K. Opp, who was an acting assistant paymaster in the United States Navy, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert the word "twelve."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, in behalf of the committee, I desire to offer or propose an amendment that the bill read "$17" instead of "$12." Of course the object can be obtained by voting down the committee amendment now, and then I will offer the amendment I suggest.

Since your committee passed on the evidence and papers before it and fixed the rate adopted by the subcommittee, my colleague [Mr. HOOKER], who introduced this bill, and some gentlemen who live in that district have presented some additional facts and evidence which make it clear to us that this man ought to have at least $17 a month; and the subcommittee who have the bill in charge have recommended that rate, and one of that subcommittee is now here. I therefore ask that the first amendment be voted down, and I will then offer the amendment I suggest, of $17 in place of $24.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the first amendment proposed by the committee, striking out the words "twenty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the committee, inserting the word "twelve."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I now move to insert, in place of the words "twenty-five," which have been stricken out, the word "seventeen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHNSON HAYS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 310) granting a pension to Johnson Hays.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to add to the disabilities for which Johnson Hays, late private of Company G, of the Seventh Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry Volunteers, now pensioned under certificate No. 134035, "hernia-hydrocele and three broken ribs on left side," and grant him a rate of pension proportioned to the degree of disability to perform manual labor.

The amendment proposed by the committee is as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Johnson Hays."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN A. BINGHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8181) for the relief of John A. Bingham, major and judge-advocate of volunteers.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of John A. Bingham, major and judge-advocate of volunteers, on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the report read in my time.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. KERR), as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8181) granting a pension to John A. Bingham, have considered the same and most respectfully report:

This bill proposes to pension, at $50 per month, John A. Bingham, of Ohio, who was commissioned major and judge-advocate of volunteers, to rank from January 12, 1864, and was honorably discharged August 3, 1864, on tender of resignation.

No record of medical treatment while in service.

He has never applied for pension at the Pension Office under any law. It is not alleged that he has any disability due to service, but he is undoubtedly entitled to $12 under act of June 27, 1890. It is shown by evidence before this committee that soldier is 83 years of age, is very feeble, and nearly helpless physically and mentally, and is in very straitened circumstances financially, owing to causes beyond his control.

The accompanying statement, marked Exhibit A, as to his public services, has been filed with this committee.

The distinguished and meritorious services of this soldier during his military career were of incalculable value to the country in its most perilous days. We had a Grant, a Sherman, a Sheridan, a Thomas, a Hancock, and other great generals at the front, but all their ability and valor would have been of no avail without the aid of equally great and brave men at the capital of the nation to meet and nullify the fire in the rear, which was just as dangerous to the cause of the Union as were the armies of the Confederacy. One of the ablest, most patriotic, and fearless of these was Maj. John A. Bingham.

In his old age and necessitous circumstances a grateful country will gladly give this reasonable and merited pension to one of its most distinguished soldiers. In fixing the amount at this reasonable sum your committee is mindful of the society in which the beneficiary has been accustomed to move, and is disposed to give relief that shall not only "keep the wolf from the door," but make the old soldier feel that one republic is not ungrateful. His necessities are great, and he requires almost constant aid and attendance.

The bill is reported back with the recommendation that the title be amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of John A. Bingham."

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to say to the House what great service this gentleman ever did. Was he ever a soldier?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. TALBERT. Did he ever do anything except to sit at the Capitol? You propose to pay him $50 a month. I would like to know the reason the committee have brought forward any such bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will state as briefly as I may, although I put into this report, which, by the way, I drew myself, the reasons which actuated the committee to report the bill. I want the gentleman from South Carolina to understand that when I refer in these remarks to the Confederacy, or to the Confederate army, that I do not hold them in contempt. I have not a word to say against them. My friend from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] knows that I believe the time has come, as I have said more than once on the floor of this House, when the boys who wore the blue and those who wore the gray can meet at all times and on all occasions and join hands, touch elbows, and all move forward for the advancement and prosperity and glory of an undivided country.

Still, when we go back thirty years, we must refer to these things. I want to say to the gentleman that when I was young, when I went into the Army, a mere boy, I had the idea from some of the influences that had been thrown around me, and some of the teachings, that the soldiers in the Confederate army did not have any faith in their cause; that they really believed they were fighting for a wrong and to maintain a wrong principle, and that they were battling simply to punish the North. Soon I learned they were as sincere as we were.

The gentleman knows that in those days terms were bandied back and forth among those who stayed at home and fought valiantly with their mouths, and the gentleman remembers another thing—down at the front, while we lined up in line of battle one day in opposition, yet when the battle was over and a truce was declared, we went together as brothers and mournfully buried our dead.

Then you remember how we frequently met on the picket line, and instead of trying to take each other's lives, while we saw to it that no wrong was done, we used to swap tobacco for coffee and coffee for tobacco from the South and other things that you had. So that we really learned to respect one another, and as the days have gone on we respect one another more and more.

Now, in those terrible, troublous times, here at the North we had some men scattered through the country who were all the time firing into the rear of the Union Army. They were doing what they could to undermine the cause of the Union, and that is why I refer to the firing from the rear.

Now, another thing that was of great importance in those days. Gentlemen can remember that when the war was over, and when the Confederate army had laid down its arms, and when General Grant, loved by the entire American people, North as well as South, had said to the surviving Confederates, "You may take your horses and your side arms and go home, and you shall be protected so long as you obey the laws of the country," that still there were those who jeered and entertained great bitterness; you remember the assassination of President Lincoln, and you remember the danger that all ran—those who had been battling for the Union.

In these times John A. Bingham came to the front. He did noble work for the Union, and did much later on to bring the North and South together. He never expressed bitterness toward the South or the Southern people. He was a gentleman, and loved the whole country and wanted it undivided.

He was mustered into the service, and he bravely, valiantly, and nobly did his duty as a soldier, where he was in as much danger from the fanatical hand of the assassin as were the boys who faced the musket and fought for the Union or for the Confederacy. He never has asked any pension from this Government. He is now 83 years of age. He is poor. This pension will go to him for only a very few years—perhaps only a year or two. But he was a defender of the nation; he defended its laws; he defended its honor. And he did it at a time when to stand up and do his duty here in Washington, as I have said, was just as dangerous to him as for a soldier in the ranks to face the muskets of the enemy.

It is for this reason—believing that we should encourage brave men; believing that we should remember patriotic brave men; believing that we should encourage the spirit of patriotism in the young men of this nation now, both North and South, for we do not know how soon we shall need them—that your committee has recommended the granting of this pension to Maj. John A. Bingham, one of the brightest men the country ever saw.

This committee, mind you, have stood with their faces like flint against the proposition to pension sutlers, to pension photographers, to pension that class of men who clamor before the committee for pensions. But here is a man who did duty, and faithful duty, even though he did not face the cannon on the field in actual battle.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to anything the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] has said; but it does seem to me that he has not touched the subject in the course of his very eloquent little speech. Here is a claim of a pension of $50 a month for a man who never did any military service whatever, who was never under the fire of a gun, never smelt any gunpowder, never endured any hardships whatever, and who served, as stated in the report, only the short term of seven months, from January, I believe, till August, 1864.

Yet this House is called upon to vote him a pension of $50 a month, without law, without precedent, without right, without justice, without anything to back it. I for one am opposed to granting this pension, and shall vote against it. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House unfavorably.

Mr. DANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I introduced this bill for the relief of John A. Bingham. I believe he is as much entitled to the gratitude of his country in this direction as many, many others who are receiving larger pensions than the one proposed in this bill. It is true that Mr. Bingham did not do service in the field; but he did very great service during the time he was in the army as a judge-advocate, and, as has already been said, he would be entitled under the law of 1890 to a pension of $12 a month.

He is old and helpless. He has not a child on this earth that can help him to one penny. He has no living relatives that he can lean upon. He stands alone—an old man. During his sixteen years of service in this body many, many were those, then weak and needing strength, who leaned upon him—our soldiers in the field, our people at home. He was a strength to them in that day and that hour. He comes now to this great Government in the day of his weakness and asks that he may be permitted to lean upon it for the few short months that he has yet to live.

Mr. Bingham served, as I have said, sixteen years in this House. The culmination of his great career here was during the reconstruction period. He stood in this body the advocate of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. He was the author of that amendment. He stood in this body contesting with Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania, the supremacy upon that question. He was in favor of the rehabilitation of the Southern States, while Mr. Stevens was opposed to that at that time, and, as I have heard him express it, wrote his language upon the Constitution of his country.

Now, there are a great many already upon the pension rolls who could not be placed there because of any disability they incurred in the actual service of their country. There are men and women who are pensioners of this country to-day who never saw any actual service in time of war. And it does seem to me that this old man appeals as strongly to those who voted pensions upon that line as anyone who has come to Congress for relief since we began that line of legislation.

As I have said, Mr. Bingham is old. He stands alone, with no wife, no child, no one under God's heavens to aid him. The question is, Shall his country do it or shall his neighbors do it?

Mr. TALBERT. If he was entitled to a pension under the act of 1890, why did he not apply for it?

Mr. DANFORD. Well, I will say to my friend I think it was the pride of this old man that prevented him from doing it.

Mr. TALBERT. As the committee say in their report, he does not allege that he has any disabilities due to service.

Mr. DANFORD. I do not allege that, either.

Mr. RAY of New York. Under the act of June 27, 1890, providing for those who are poor and unable to perform manual labor, it is entirely immaterial whether they contracted the disease or disability in the service. If they are incapacitated, for any cause, from earning a living by manual labor, that is sufficient. Now, it is conceded that this old man is so incapacitated. Therefore, under the act of June 27, 1890, as he was actually in the service, he could apply for and receive a pension of $8 a month, not $12.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to ask the gentleman if serving as judge-advocate-general gives him a pensionable status?

Mr. RAY of New York. It does. He was actually mustered into the service.

Mr. TALBERT. Does the law say so?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. TALBERT. What law?

Mr. RAY of New York. The law, the act of 1890; he has a pensionable status. It is simply a question of amount. He was regularly mustered in. I wish gentlemen all to understand this. We have here the statement of Colonel Ainsworth, which is printed in connection with the report, in which he states that Major Bingham was regularly mustered into the service and was a soldier. He might have been sent to the front in battle at any time that the Government saw fit. It is true he did not face the cannon, but he performed a notable service for his country, and he was in the service with the rank of major.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to say to the gentleman that the report says that he has incurred no disability from even that remarkable service.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is true.

Mr. TALBERT. Then I should like to know where his pensionable status comes in?

Mr. RAY of New York. Under the act of June 27, 1890, which gives a pension to an old soldier when he becomes poor and unable to earn a living by his manual labor. That is where he has a pensionable status. There is no question about that. The only question is how much should be given him now in his old age.

Mr. SIMPSON. Was he not on detached service at the time he was acting as judge-advocate?

Mr. CONNOLLY. He was appointed as judge-advocate.

Mr. RAY of New York. He was appointed to that rank and assigned to duty here, but he might have been assigned to duty with the Army anywhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. TALBERT. I moved that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with an unfavorable recommendation. Does not that take precedence? I ask for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that the amendment is only an amendment to the title, and it would be well to dispose of that before disposing of any other motion. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT], that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with an unfavorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 8, noes 39.

Accordingly the motion of Mr. TALBERT was rejected.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] moves to amend by striking out "fifty," in the seventh line, and inserting "twenty-five."

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will be agreed to. I remember the name of John A. Bingham since my boyhood. I remember him as one of the leading, active, eloquent members of Congress through all of the years of the war. I believe that he was a member of Congress at the very time that he was serving as major and judge-advocate. He occupied the dual position. If he had been a major and at the front fighting and had received wounds, he would, under the law, treating him as all other officers with that rank are treated, have received $25 a month.

We have been giving these special pensions here to brigadier-generals who served three or four years at the front, with all the chances of battle every day of their lives. We have been putting them off in their old age with $50 a month. Colonels of regiments who served for four years and were covered with wounds, and who are now dragging out the remnants of their broken lives, are turned out with $50 a month, and some with less.

Now, this major and judge-advocate, who never saw the field of battle, never endured the hardships of a soldier's life, should not, by comparison, receive as much as they. It seems to me simply unjust to those who endured those hardships and faced those dangers to say we shall now give him $50 a month and put them off with $25 a month under the general law.

I am willing to stretch a point and vote to give him the pension of $25 a month the same as other men of the same rank are entitled to who actually served in the field and were wounded; but I am unwilling to go further, and simply because he was an eloquent, active member of Congress for sixteen years to say that he shall thereby have double the pension of men who served their country in the field. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not take much part in discussing these pension matters, and ordinarily I have voted against these eccentric pensions which seem to be a little out of the ordinary line. But I wish the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] would reconsider what he has said and what he is doing, and I wish the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] would do the same. They are both kindly disposed, and neither one wishes to do any harm. Yet, if they will stop to think a little, I doubt not they will change their opinions.

Now, Mr. Bingham is not being pensioned because he was a member of Congress, but because he was a judge-advocate in the Army. He could not have presided as judge-advocate, if I understand it correctly, at any of the great courts-martial, such as the trial of Mrs. Surratt and others, without being mustered into the Army. That gave him a standing in the Army. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] says $25 ought to be enough. Now, I hardly know just where the limit ought to be fixed.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I say that to the gentleman because the general law puts the limit there for men of that rank.

Mr. NORTHWAY. We are not pensioning him because of any disability which would fix a limit to the pension in his case under the law. We are simply placing him upon the pension roll and measuring our gratitude here as members of Congress, and so attempting to measure the gratitude of our country to him.

I remember John A. Bingham from childhood. Those who know him know the kind of man he was and is. He was a brilliant man, but when the war was over he had not one word of bitterness for any human being on earth, and as old age has come upon him he has grown entirely out of any bitterness that would fasten itself upon the heart of any individual.

He is one of the most lovable old men, a man who loves the South just as much as the North, and who looks back upon all the stirring scenes of the past with the kindliest heart and with the loveliest nature that you ever saw. He is now 85 or more years old, I think. If you pension him, the country will not be called upon to pay him a pension for long—only a year or two, perhaps, at most. Here he is to-day, with no human being to care for him, with no one but his country.

Shall he appeal to his country in vain? He is one of the loveliest men that God ever made, the freest from all the guile and malice that sometimes gather around an old man. It would seem to me that it would be a loving duty for us not to be technical and say that he has not earned it on account of not being wounded or not fighting for his country in the Army. It measures our gratitude for perhaps the only link to-day living, going back to those stirring scenes.

I believe he is the only man alive of all those who took an active part in the prosecution of those cases. Because of his ability he was appointed as one of the prosecutors in the impeachment trial of Andrew Johnson. I believe he is the only living link going back to that time. Now, I know the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] wants to deal kindly with such a man. For if there ever was a man on earth who spoke words of kindness after all the bitterness of the war, John A. Bingham was the man.

If there ever was a man in Congress who stood up here against such men as Thaddeus Stevens in their bitterness, and pronounced words of sweetness to be ever remembered, John A. Bingham was that man. It would seem to me that all of a loving country would take the poor old man in their arms and pay his way while he lives, and ease him down to a loved and honored grave. Now, I wish the gentleman would recall that motion. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to send to the Clerk's desk and have read a newspaper clipping showing that Commissioner Evans thinks that the limit of the pension roll has not been reached. It shows what he says and what Secretary Bliss says. It is a short piece in regard to pensions. I should like to have it read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

MORE MONEY NEEDED FOR PENSIONS—COMMISSIONER EVANS THINKS THE LIMIT OF ROLL HAS NOT BEEN REACHED.

In sending to Congress a deficiency estimate of $8,070,872 for pensions for this year, Secretary Bliss makes an interesting statement on the general subject of pensions up to date. Secretary Bliss says:

"On the 1st of July, 1897, there was available $140,000,000 for the payment of army and navy pensions; $4,000,000 of this amount was set apart for navy pensions, leaving $136,000,000 for payment of army pensions. The total number of pensioners on the roll June 30, 1897, was 976,014, while on the 28th of February, 1898, there were 989,613 on the roll, a net increase of 13,599.

"Between the latter dates there was disbursed for the payment of army pensions $95,370,827.46, leaving the sum of $40,629,127.54 for the payment of pensions to the end of the present fiscal year. The Commissioner of Pensions estimates that $48,700,000 will be required for the payment of pensions during the remaining four months of the fiscal year, more than $8,000,000 in excess of the unexpended appropriation.

"The Commissioner has recently expressed to me an opinion as to the future course of pension payments at variance with his views thereon as stated in the annual report, which was to the effect that after the close of the current fiscal year payments would rapidly decline. It is now his opinion that in view of the increasing applications for original pensions and for increase of pensions there will be an increase in the sum required for the payment of the army and navy pensions for some time to come.

"In this connection the table showing the number of pensioners on the roll and the value of the roll annually since 1887 is significant. From this it appears that the pension roll has substantially doubled since a quarter of a century after the close of the war. In 1890, twenty-five years after the war closed, the number of pensioners on the roll was 537,944. At the close of the current fiscal year the number on the roll will approximate 996,000, an increase of nearly 90 per cent since 1890.

"In that time the value of the roll has increased from $72,052,143.49 in 1890 to approximately $132,000,000 in the present fiscal year.

"The roll is now larger than at any former time, notwithstanding that thirty-three years have elapsed since the cessation of hostilities. It contained about 5,500 more pensioners in 1897 than it did in 1896, and approximately 20,000 more in 1898 than in 1897, and the value of the roll has also increased in the same period."

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, sentiment, partisanship, and prejudice ought all to be put aside in the discussion of these cases, and we ought to look at them from a sensible, business standpoint. Now, you hear the report from the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Pensions, and see the enormous increase that must follow the present plan of granting pensions. Thousands and thousands are being considered every day there, either for increase or for original pension, and we have the same here. To-night we have on the Calendar 66 bills for pensions.

Out of this 66, 25 of them are for the removal of the charge of desertion. Just think of that! Ten are for increase, and only 31 for original pension. Now, let us look at it from a business standpoint. I am the last man, being a Southern man, to stand up here and oppose the granting of pension to any honest, true, brave old veteran. I have never done it, and gentlemen who have served with me in the Fifty-third, the Fifty-fourth, and the Fifty-fifth Congresses up to date can testify to that fact; but I believe it to be my duty to stand up here and enter my protest against what I consider unjust and extravagant appropriations for pensions for anybody, and I do it without any feeling of prejudice or partisanship, but merely from a business standpoint as being my duty.

Now, here is a claim granting a pension of $50 a month for General Bingham. I never met General Bingham, and do not say anything against him. I would not take from him one laurel that has been weaved around him by his friends to-night. He was a grand man, an eloquent man; and hence, putting sentiment aside and dealing with it from business sense, let us see whether or not we should grant him $25 a month. I am willing to vote for that if this House seems disposed to do so.

Then, again, you see the empty seats. They are unable to consider legislation, and the Constitution of the United States requires that every bill and every piece of legislation that is passed through this House shall be done by a quorum. The rules of the House require it. Having no feeling in the matter, I am willing to vote for $25 a month, and make a compromise, and let this thing go along. I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will accept it and let the amendment be carried at $25, and we can go on and pass more bills.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that at the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, I accept the amendment, and let it go through at that. I wish, however, to make a correction in regard to the statement of my friend from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY]. He stated that at the time Major Bingham was a major and judge-advocate in the Army he was also a member of Congress.

I stated to him at the time, quietly, that that could not have been so. I have therefore sent for the record, and have before me the journals and records of the House, and now state positively that Major Bingham was not a member of Congress, and did not hold any civil place, either under the State of Ohio or the United States, at the time he was in the Army. He was serving as a soldier at that time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to interfere with the proceedings, but as a member of the delegation from Ohio were I to remain silent upon this question it would look, at least to my constituents and to the people of my State, as if I had no interest in this matter. I am proud of General Bingham's record. I am proud that he was a citizen of my great State. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that no man ever rendered greater service to his party than did General Bingham.

I believe no man has ever rendered, within the limits and scope of his opportunity, greater services to the Government at large than did General Bingham. You may remember, my fellow-members, that it was through his influence largely, and perhaps wholly, that the treaty between China and our Government was accomplished in such a satisfactory way as to render perhaps a greater service to this Government than all you will ever be required to pay him will compensate him for if he should remain on the pension roll a hundred years.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that his service in the Army was extremely limited, that his services in the field were not distinguished; but as a judge-advocate-general I grant no man can present a more brilliant, a more fair, and more just record than he. And it will give me great pleasure to know that in his declining years this country can, perhaps with generosity, recognize the service he has rendered his country.

But I ask you to remember this—that there are many men now without a dollar of pension on God's earth that rendered not only eight months' service to the Government in the Army, but three long years, and in the front at that, and are debarred now by a ruling of the Pension Office; and whenever the opportunity shall be given to me, at every hour and at every time on this floor, I desire to again and repeatedly call your attention to the fact that there is a rule of law which bars men that are more justified in asking for a pension who are just as poor and rendered as much service to the Government, not so distinguished by brains, but by courage and services in the field; and when the time comes that they are placed on the rolls here and we are asked to vote for them, I beg of that side of the House as well as this that you will not bring up this rule, but you will be as generous in voting for them as we are in voting for this, for under the rules of the Pension Department this man could not get over $12 a month. Then let us bend the rule as well for the men who served in the field as for those who were diplomats and jurists. I will vote for $25 or $50. It is a matter of indifference; I will not antagonize it; but I want to use this as a lever once more to pry open the consciences and the generosity of the members to vote in favor of the privates as well as in favor of the diplomat and the jurist and the men who bear the name of general. [Applause.]

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I would not interrupt the proceedings to impose any remarks on the committee at this time, were it not for the fact that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] sent to the Clerk's desk a clipping purporting to be an interview with the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior concerning the amount of money that we are paying out annually to pensioners. I notice that, following the reading of the article and some few remarks supplemental thereto made by the gentleman from South Carolina, the Committee on Invalid Pensions accepted the amendment suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina——

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me say to the gentleman from Michigan that the chairman accepted that suggestion at the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio who introduced the bill.

Mr. BRUCKER. I do not care where the suggestion came from. The amendment was certainly acceded to very readily by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I do not know what object the Commissioner of Pensions or the Secretary of the Interior have at this time or at any other time in authorizing these published interviews in the public prints with reference to the amount of money that is being paid to pensioners.

That, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, would not influence my vote on this proposition or any other proposition to pension an honest Union soldier. [Applause.] As far as I am concerned, I do not care whether your pension roll is $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 so long as there is an honest and needy Union soldier unpensioned. [Applause.] I am getting sick and tired of this rant in the public prints and in this Chamber about the amount of our pension roll. My action or my vote shall not be affected by any such statement. [Applause.]

The question is whether this great Government has dealt honestly, fairly, and justly by every honest Union soldier. You and I know to-day that there are thousands and thousands of decrepit, broken-down, old Union soldiers all over this country eking out a miserable existence upon $12 a month. It is a crying shame. And yet every day or two we notice that some public official, either the Commissioner of Pensions or the Secretary of the Interior, or some one else connected with the Government, are being interviewed as to how much the pension roll amounts to, attempting to influence our acts in this way. I am not talking politics; it was true under a Democratic Administration, and it is now emphasized under a Republican Administration. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman where anyone would get the information about the condition of the Department unless from the Commissioner of Pensions or the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. BRUCKER. No one has asked the Department at this time about the condition of the pension roll or the amount of money we are paying out for pensions. I stand here to say that I am willing to go before the country, and I am willing to go before my constituents, Democrats as well as Republicans, and stand upon this broad declaration, that I never shall be satisfied until the act of 1890 is amended so that the Commissioner of Pensions shall have some discretion in a case where he finds an old soldier that can not trace his disability to army service, and is poor and in destitute circumstances, that the Commissioner shall be given the opportunity of using his discretion to increase this soldier's pension to $20 a month [applause] without obliging the soldier to ask us to come here night after night to work on these little popgun, private pension bills.

If you want to deal fairly and honestly with the privates, the Union soldiers, you will amend the pension law of 1890 and give this discretionary power which I have just mentioned to the Secretary of the Interior, or to the Commissioner of Pensions; then you will not have to come up here night after night threatened with the point of no quorum. [Applause.]

You should give this relief to the old boys by adopting the amendment to the law of 1890 which I have offered, rather than to dole it out "piecemeal" by these popgun private pension bills. [Applause.]

Mr. DANFORD. I did make a suggestion to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] be accepted. I did it for the reason that we are here without a quorum and without the possibility of doing anything against the objection of any single member on this floor. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TALBERT, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ANN M. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9043) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann M. Smith, widow of the late Maj. Gen. Andrew J. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Ann M. Smith, widow of the late Maj. Gen. Andrew J. Smith, at the rate of $100 per month.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "Mrs."
In line 7, after the word "Smith," insert "and pay her a pension."
In line 7 strike out "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty."
At the end of line 8 add "in lieu of the pension she now receives."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Ann M. Smith."

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to have the report read.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment—to strike out "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty;" so as to make the amount of this pension $50 a month.

Mr. Chairman, I introduced this bill——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] desire to have the report read?

Mr. TALBERT. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE] that he allow the report to be read, and afterwards speak to his amendment. I do not want to take him off the floor.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Very well.

The report (by Mr. STURTEVANT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9043) granting a pension to Ann M. Smith, have examined the same and the evidence relating thereto, and respectfully report:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $8 to $30 per month the pension of Ann M. Smith, of St. Louis, Mo., as widow of the late Maj. Gen. Andrew Jackson Smith.

General Smith entered the United States Military Academy at West Point July 1, 1834, and was graduated July 1, 1838. He was commissioned as second lieutenant of First United States Dragoons, and received various promotions until he reached the rank of colonel in the Regular Army, January 5, 1869. He was placed on the retired list January 22, 1869, and died January 30, 1897.

His pay as colonel was $3,500 per year and $320.83 additional after five years' service, and when on the retired list $2,843.75 per year. As major-general it was $7,500 per year, and as brigadier $5,500 per year.

He was in the volunteer service from October 2, 1861, to January 15, 1866. Was mustered colonel Second California Cavalry Volunteers and resigned November 13, 1861; was commissioned brigadier-general of volunteers March 20, 1862, and major-general of volunteers May 14, 1864. At the close of his volunteer service he rejoined the Regular Army, and served as before stated until placed on the retired list. His services were long, distinguished, and meritorious, but not especially brilliant.

He died at the advanced age of 82 years, and there is no claim that his death was caused or hastened by disease or disabilities incurred in the service.

He was kind and generous to his old comrades and died poor, leaving a widow now about 80 years of age. She draws the pension, given by our general laws, of $8 per month, which is the maximum allowed to the widows of general officers whose death is not due to service. The bill as amended increases this $22 per month solely on account of the rank of her deceased husband.

Our laws granting pensions to widows on account of the service of the husband has made no distinction between the widow of the private and the widow of the officer. It is a departure from the policy of these laws to grant an increase to the widows of general officers solely on the ground of rank. Special and meritorious cases are occasionally brought to the attention of your committee where such departure is justified, and this is one. The long, meritorious, and faithful service of the soldier and the age and necessities of the widow make this an exceptional case, where Congressional action is warranted.

It will be said that general officers, like General Smith, ought, from their pay when in service and when on the retired list, to save enough to make their widows comfortable. Whatever may be said on this line, your committee answer that it is not the fault of the widow that he did not, and a grateful and generous Government will see to it that she has a reasonable sum to sustain her in her old age. In giving this increase we keep in mind the necessities of the hundreds of thousands of soldiers and soldiers' widows now on the pension rolls, of those constantly being added, and also the increasing disabilities and necessities of all who have so bravely defended the nation in its hours of peril.

Conservative and consistent action in special legislation will meet the approval of all, and your committee is of the opinion that no charge of extravagance or favoritism will be made when reasonable increases are given the aged and necessitous widows of brave and distinguished general officers. Bills reported from your committee, giving this increase to $30 per month to the widows of General Pile and General Stevenson, have already met the approval of the House.

Where the death of the general officer is shown to be the result of disease or disabilities contracted in the service, your committee has fixed the limit of increase at $50 per month, as in the cases of the widows of General Leggett and Commander Cushing. The distinction that always has obtained in our general legislation and in special legislation must be maintained here.

The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 6 strike out "Mrs."
In line 7, after the word "Smith," insert "and pay her a pension."
In line 7 strike out "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty."
At the end of line 8 add: "in lieu of the pension she now receives."
Amend the title so it will read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Ann M. Smith.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1898.

DEAR SIR: Referring to H. R. 5080 and my remarks in connection therewith, I beg to say that I intimately knew Maj. Gen. A. J. Smith for thirty years prior to his death on January 30, 1897, at the advanced age of 82 years.

I have also been familiar with his financial circumstances. His charity gifts to poor old soldiers kept his little life income constantly exhausted, so that he died without means. His widow has no means of support except a Mexican war pension of $8 per month, and the old general's friends have had to care for her. She is close on to 80 years of age, is very feeble, and in all probability will not survive more than a couple of years, if indeed she lives that long.

I earnestly hope that the committee will speedily report the bill, so that the old lady can have a little comfort in her last days. She lives in my district.

Very respectfully, yours, CHAS. E. PEARCE,
Member of Congress, Twelfth District Missouri.

Hon. GEO. W. RAY,
Chairman Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, on the 17th day of January, 1897, Congress passed a law granting a pension of $100 a month to the widow of Gen. John F. Gibbon. The year before, in the month of April, Congress passed a law giving to the widow of Gen. Abner Doubleday a pension of $100 a month. On the 8th day of January, 1895, Congress passed a law giving to the widow of Gen. N. P. Banks $100 a month. And in 1894 Congress passed a law giving a pension of $100 a month to the widow of Gen. John M. Corse. It was because of this legislation that I introduced this bill and asked of Congress to give to the widow of this gallant old major-general of the United States Army a sum corresponding to that which had been granted by Congress to the widows of generals of similar rank.

There is not an instance in twenty-two years of the legislation of Congress when the widow of a major-general of the United States Army has received a pension of less than $50 a month. I want to read one of a series of affidavits which I received yesterday—too late to be submitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions—from some of the old citizens of St. Louis. I read but one affidavit, as a sample of the whole number:

Edgar Miller, of lawful age, being duly sworn, on his oath says that he has been a resident of St. Louis for more than forty years; that he has known Ann Mason Smith, widow of the late Andrew Jackson Smith, late of the United States Army, for twenty-seven years; that she is in very feeble health and has been ill for some months, and was believed to be dying recently; that she is 74 years or more of age; that she is in straitened circumstances and in need of money for her support.

The other affidavits are exactly similar in point of information.

General Smith was in the armies of the country for over half a century. His career began away back in 1838. In the following year he was ordered out upon the Western frontier, to what afterwards became the Territory of Kansas. For more than twenty-two successive years his service was in that portion of the country, fighting Indians, pioneering new roads of civilization—down through the Mexican war, up through New Mexico, and on through California, away up to Oregon, and back again over the mountains, over the plains, until he reached Jefferson Barracks again in 1860. Then he was ordered out to San Francisco, where he was located at the time of the outbreak of the war for the Union.

He was very early commissioned a brigadier-general of the United States Army, and served during the entire war. I regret to find it stated in this report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that the record of Major-General Smith was not a brilliant one. Gentlemen of the House, I tell you that there was no more brilliant record of any general of the United States Army from the beginning to the end of the war. He was the right hand of Sherman—one of the great division and corps commanders. He saved the command of General Banks, to whose widow you gave $100 a month only two years ago. Let me read to you a little of the history of this great soldier—a careful compilation made as a memorial by the Loyal Legion of the State of Missouri:

Advanced to the rank of brigadier-general of volunteers, he served at Corinth, under General Halleck, but first began to become more widely known after General Grant again assumed command. In the operations against Chickasaw Bluffs, under Sherman, and again at Arkansas Post, his services were marked by great enterprise and courage. At the latter place, and in the capture of the fort, the prompt and daring assault of his troops contributed largely to the fortunate and brilliant result.

He was in command of a division of the Thirteenth Army Corps in the campaign against Pemberton and the siege of Vicksburg, and displayed such merit that when, soon after, it became necessary to send a division to the support of General Banks on his Red River expedition, and it was contemplated that even General Sherman should take command of it, the troops were finally, by Grant and Sherman, placed under command of Gen. A. J. Smith. He proved most worthy of their trust.

His division captured Fort De Russy and he was in April, 1864, brevetted colonel in the Regular Army for gallant and meritorious service at Pleasant Hill. When it was intended to have General Smith and his men retired from this expedition near its close, Commodore Porter declared that such a step would be disastrous to his vessels and to the Army. In May of the same year he was given the double promotion to a full lieutenant-colonelcy in the Regular Army and to be major-general of volunteers.

When returning from the Red River expedition he was sent against General Forrest, then of great fame as a cavalry leader and who had recently defeated Sturgis at Guntown, Miss. Forrest was defeated at the battle of Tupelo and again at Oldtown Creek, in June, 1864. When General Price made his last Missouri campaign, pretending that he even thought of capturing St. Louis, General Smith was stopped on his way to Tennessee, and then, by General Rosecrans, who commanded the department, was directed against the old invader. The result of that campaign was the final defeat of the enemy, so that Missouri was free from any further battles on her soil.

This service performed, General Smith took up his march again for Tennessee, and reached General Thomas's command in time to participate in the battle of Nashville, where his success was so marked as to elicit the highest commendation from the commanding general. He was again promoted March 13, 1865, in the Regular Army to brevet brigadier-general and major-general for gallant service at the battles of Tupelo, Miss., and Nashville, Tenn.

In 1865 he commanded in the campaign against Mobile with signal success. In this campaign, as in that against Forrest, General Smith exhibited capacity of the highest order in the independent command of troops, and demonstrated that his success was not the result solely of the planning of others. It was when his superior officer was at times incapable that this soldier assumed the burden and exhibited the enterprise that led to success or saved from disaster.

This is the record of this grand old hero of the war, who lies closer to the hearts of the Western soldiers than any man in the United States Army. [Applause.] Go out there into that Mississippi Valley and speak of Gen. A. J. Smith and see the tears well up into the eyes of those boys who followed him upon those bloody battlefields.

Now, gentlemen, through all this service of twenty-two years out upon the frontier, piloting the march of civilization, battling with the Indians, and building up this great empire of the West, the widow of this old hero was with him. She camped with him, bivouacked with him, suffered all the hardships of his life with him. Her health is now broken and she is standing upon the verge of the grave. She has, in the providence of the Almighty, but a year or two more to live.

Mr. SIMPSON. How old is she?

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. She is very nearly 80 years of age. General Smith died a year or two ago, at the age of 82, and can we not ease the pillow of this good old woman a little, and do by her what this Congress has done by the widow of every major-general since the close of the war?

Mr. MINOR. General Blunt's widow got a hundred dollars.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. General Blunt's widow got a hundred dollars. Now, it is only a week or two ago since you voted a pension of $50 a month to the widow of Commander Cushing, that splendid hero of the Navy, whose record stands for gallantry and for heroism beside that of Nelson and Farragut and Porter. No braver man ever trod a ship than Cushing.

But, gentlemen, his widow, to whom you voted $50 a month a week ago, did not marry him until 1870, and he died in 1874. She did not partake of his trials and sufferings or his sacrifices during the war, and, as the report says, "she is not in what would ordinarily be termed necessitous circumstances, but is at that age and in that financial condition where her moderate means will be rapidly exhausted unless a grateful Government extends further aid."

I make no complaint or criticism upon the action of this House in relation to Mrs. Cushing. It was right. I only cite it to show that the widow of this old hero, who has shared his sacrifices, shared his trials, and broken her health to stand by his side and uphold his hand during all the half century of his army service and army devotion to the interest of his flag and his country, should be treated at least as well. [Applause.]

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I do not see exactly why the gentleman should come here to-night and renew a battle which has been fought out upon the floor of the House, on a question of principle.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. Propound it.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I want to know if you will answer it?

Mr. RAY of New York. Propound it; I will wait.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Has this case ever been before this House?

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I say that I can not——

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Will the gentleman answer the question or will he not?

Mr. RAY of New York. I will not answer such a question as that.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. That is all right.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman knows that this bill has never been before this House before, and he knows that I know it, and therefore there is no reason in asking such a question.

Now, I say again I do not know why he should come here to renew this battle on a question of principle which has been settled by the House itself, unless it be for the purpose of delaying the granting of pensions to needy and worthy old soldiers and to their widows. The record of General Smith has not been belittled and will not be belittled. It can not be belittled. But we are not pensioning General Smith. He is not here.

Now, what is the question involved? We have here a question of granting an increase of pension to the widow of a general who is dead and gone. That general was educated at the expense of the United States. He went into the Army and was promoted years ago to the position of colonel, when he drew $3,500 per year salary, and after he had served for five years he drew $3,820.33 a year. That was gradually increased.

He was commissioned during the civil war, first a brigadier and then a major general, and he drew $7,500 a year as major-general. In the year 1889 he was placed on the retired list by this Government, after which time he did no duty whatever, and from that time down to the date of his death, eight years, he drew in round number $3,000 every year. He was postmaster at St. Louis. He had a salary and an income that should have enabled him to save something.

I do not blame him because he did not. I am not here to say a word about that; but he drew from this Government, for more than a quarter of a century, over $5,000 a year, and was drawing a large salary as postmaster in the last days of his life and at the same time drawing $3,000 a year from this Government for doing nothing. This Republic was kind and generous to him. He left this widow.

There is no pretense that General Smith died because of any disease contracted or any wound received in the service. The truth is the record shows he never was touched by a bullet, or if he ever was, it was so lightly that no record has been made of it. He was high up in rank, but those who went through the dust and the mud and the smoke and flame of battle know that when the battle was on, the privates were at the front; they took the lead and iron death, while the generals, as a rule, were back in the woods, or on some high hill, out of reach of the guns.

When I say this I do not belittle the records of the generals at all, because brains are worth something, and you must have a head, and these men who wore the shoulder straps won their stars and deserved all they got.

Now, the case of the widow of General Stevenson was up here a week ago, I think. He did not die of any disease or disability contracted in the service, and so the Committee on Invalid Pensions fixed the rate for his widow at $30 per month, as we have done in the case of General Pile, just as worthy a soldier as any of these other generals. Mrs. Pile's bill went through this House without a word being said. We have fixed that rate in several cases that have gone through this House without a word being said.

When the case of the widow of General Stevenson came up, the gentleman from Missouri made a fight, and by massing his forces here in Committee of the Whole he carried it, and on a vote of 79 he had 40 votes to raise the pension to $50, and there were 39 votes against it. The question was carried into the House, and on Friday last, by a vote of more than 90 to something like 40, the House itself decided that the Committee on Invalid Pensions was doing right and had done right and should be sustained in its action. The House approved $30 in such a case as this. Now, what was that action?

The general law gives to this widow $8 a month and no more, and when we increase it to $30 per month, we are giving the widow of this general officer $22 per month more than is given to the widow of a private soldier, $22 a month more than is given to the widow of the captain or the major or the colonel under precisely the same conditions, and we give it to her solely on account of her husband's rank. She has not been deprived of anything by reason of his military service. She has shared these large salaries.

That old soldier lived to reach the age of 83 years. He lived out the full measure of his life, and when we give to her more than is given to the widows of other brave soldiers of the Republic in the same condition, an increase of $22 a month, we go a great way when we give it to her simply because of the rank of her husband and her necessity. That has been done in four or five cases where the death of the soldier was not due to disease or disability contracted in the service.

In the case where a woman is left a widow, and the death of her husband was caused by wounds received or disabilities incurred in the service, and the wife loses her husband because of his service and before he has lived out his full measure of life, the general law gives to her a pension of $30 per month because she has lost her husband by reason of his army service.

Now, in those cases the Committee on Invalid Pensions have not given an increase in the same ratio that we have in this other class of cases, because there we have refused to grant an increase in any case above $50, which is in any event only $20 a month in excess of the legal rate, and in many of these cases we have only gone to $40, and in one case to $35, depending on the surroundings of the widow.

So that we have been perfectly consistent. We have been reasonable; we have maintained the same distinction that is maintained by the general law, which gives, you see, only $8 per month to the widow where the death of her husband was not due to his service, and $30 to the widow who loses her husband because of his army service. When we give the increase we give it in the same proportion, excepting that we make a larger increase in the case of a widow like this than we do in the other cases. Now, that is reasonable, sensible, consistent, and commends itself to the whole country, and will commend itself to the privates and to the widows of privates, and to the widows of officers of the lower rank who served in the Army.

I ask you again, gentlemen, as I have before, to remember we have before our committee over 3,500 private pension bills. A great majority of those we have examined have presented deserving and meritorious cases of war widows, of broken-down and battle-scarred old veterans, men shot to pieces and helpless, drawing $8, $12, and $15 a month; war widows of old soldiers, who served their country for four years, only drawing $8 a month and trying to eke a scanty sustenance upon that sum of money, poor and poverty stricken.

Now, all these should be cared for, and we had better allow $30 per month to the widow of a brigadier-general, and take up six or eight of the widows of private soldiers who are needy and in danger of the poorhouse, and take the extra $20 some would give the general's widow on account of the rank of her husband, and distribute it among these privates' widows, and then we can reach the homes of hundreds, yea, of thousands, of the widows of brave old soldiers, and we can reach hundreds of battle-scarred veterans of the late war. Extravagant special legislation must be guarded against.

I am in favor of pensioning the disabled soldier; I am in favor of reasonably pensioning the war widows, giving them what will relieve their necessities; but I am not in favor of opening our Treasury and pouring out the money like water to widows or officers simply because of rank. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the action of the committee will be again sustained as it has been three times before, and that this committee amendment will be adopted and the suggested amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE] be voted down.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman seems to indulge in a little personal criticism on this occasion, when he says that I am here to fight over again an old fight. Let me say to the distinguished gentleman from New York that I do not ask his privilege to be on this floor or to make any fight that suits my pleasure. I am not responsible to him, but to my constituents in the city of St. Louis, and will fight here just as often and just as long as I choose, without any apology to him.

Mr. RAY of New York. Do not bite me. I would not fight. I would run away——

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I know you will.

Mr. RAY of New York. Before I would have you bite me.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. And he says I am here delaying pension legislation. Let us see what the RECORD shows. The gentleman has occupied 50 per cent more time in this discussion than I have. And it was the same on the floor of the House when he undertook to mislead the House, as he did. He occupied an hour and fifteen minutes, and refused to give us, who represented the other side, more than ten minutes.

Mr. RAY of New York. But you know better than that.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. That is your fairness. I know that I am stating the truth, and by the watch.

Mr. RAY of New York. I occupied thirty-two minutes, and that is all; and that the RECORD shows. The Speaker so stated at the time.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. But the gentleman from New York and the people to whom he gave time to represent his side of the case occupied an hour and fifteen minutes by my watch. My colleague from Missouri [Mr. JOY] asked him a little consideration, and yet he would only give him ten minutes, and my colleague had to give five of that to me. [Laughter.] That is the fairness of the chairman of the committee!

Now, I want to say to this House, in all fairness and consideration, with respect to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I know their work is hard and ardnous, and I sympathize with them in that work; but I want to say to this House that it is not the Committee on Invalid Pensions that made the general rules for this House to follow. This House has established a rule of twenty-two years' duration, unvaried in the case of major-generals of the Army. And now, when all these old widows of these grand old heroes of the war are standing upon the verge of the grave, bowed down with infirmity, you want to institute a new rule and make their remaining years just as miserable as you can.

Mr. RAY of New York. I beg your pardon. I want to pass this bill so she will have a pension.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I am on the floor now and wish to have my say. I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from New York that I will stand here as often and as long and speak as energetically as he will for the benefit of the widows of the private soldiers. I have sympathized with them as much as he has and know them as well as he does and will stand by them as long.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 27.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EMILY A. HAUSNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7803) granting a pension to Emily A. Hausner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Emily A. Hausner, of Ithaca, N. Y., widow of Charles W. Hausner, late Company E, Sixty-fourth New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RAY of New York. Will the gentleman permit an explanation?

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly.

Mr. RAY of New York. This soldier, in actual battle at Fair Oaks, Va., I think, was shot through the hip and through the breast—that is, his side—not through the lungs. He was also shot through the neck, right through under the ear, coming out just under the lobe of the other ear. The ball struck the spinal column. From that time on he began to grow blind. He had different diseases, and finally he became substantially blind, and died of what the doctor said (it was not his family physician) was "cerebral apoplexy."

That statement came on to Washington. The regular family physician testified that it was not cerebral apoplexy, but disease of the brain, caused by the injury to the backbone, or spinal column. Still the Pension Bureau adhered to that statement, and so held that the widow is not entitled to $12 a month, simply because the physician who was there when he died said that he died of cerebral apoplexy. It involves simply a question of $4 a month. The report is voluminous and shows beyond question that he died because of injuries received in the service.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SIDNEY J. HARE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5776) for the relief of Sidney J. Hare, late private in Company C, Ninety-sixth Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, instructed and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Sidney J. Hare, late private in Company C, Ninety-sixth Regiment of New York Volunteers, at the rate of —— dollars per month in lieu of any pension he may now be receiving from the United States Government, to begin from the date of the passage of this act.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the words "rate of," insert the word "twenty-four."

Strike out all after the word "receiving" in line 8.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Sidney J. Hare."

The committee amendments were adopted.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ADOLPHINE KREZ.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1467) granting a pension to Adolphine Krez, widow of Conrad Krez, late colonel Twenty-seventh Wisconsin Infantry and brevet brigadier-general of volunteers.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Adolphine Krez, widow of Conrad Krez, late colonel of the Twenty-seventh Wisconsin Infantry and brevet brigadier-general of volunteers, and pay her a pension of $30 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the report read.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. NORTON of Ohio), as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1467) proposing to pension Adolphine Krez, have examined the same and the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

The Senate bill proposes to pension, at $30 per month, Adolphine Krez, of Milwaukee, Wis. This claimant is the widow of Conrad Krez, who enlisted August 21, 1862, as private, Twenty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

He was commissioned colonel September 2, 1862, and later was assigned to the command of the Third Brigade, Third Division, Thirteenth Army Corps, and remained in command of this brigade until June 14, 1865, when he resumed command of his regiment, and was mustered out August 29, 1865. He was brevetted brigadier-general United States Volunteers for faithful and meritorious services in the Army. He took part in the siege of Vicksburg and many other battles and engagements. It is apparent that he was a brave, faithful, and efficient officer.

At his death, which can not satisfactorily be shown to be due to service, he left his widow, Adolphine Krez, now over 60 years of age. She is sickly and under the doctor's care. She has the use of the house in which she lives, and the use of other property which brings her about $12 per month. Aside from this she is entirely dependent upon two unmarried daughters.

In view of the necessitous circumstances of this widow, her sickly and dependent condition, the rank and long and meritorious service of her husband, your committee concur in the Senate bill and report the same back favorably. Could it be shown that her husband died of disease contracted or wounds received in the service she would be entitled to $30 per month from the Government, and as the soldier was brevetted brigadier-general your committee treat his widow, who was his wife during the war, the same as we treat the widows of other general officers under the same circumstances.

The Senate bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 8, after the word "pension," insert "at the rate."

Amend the title so it will read: "An act granting a pension to Adolphine Krez."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE W. OSBORN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4961) to pension George W. Osborn.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of George W. Osborn, of Mattoon, Ill., of Company C, Fifty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay him a pension of $50 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee are as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "of fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of twenty-four."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to George W. Osborn."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEN. JAMES W. M'MILLAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 157) to increase the pension of Gen. James W. McMillan.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Gen. James W. McMillan, colonel of the Twenty-first Indiana Volunteer Infantry and brevet major-general United States Volunteers, upon the pension roll, and allow and pay him a pension of $50 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to have the report read, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAY of New York. I think I can state the case to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TALBERT. I would ask the chairman what General McMillan now gets.

Mr. RAY of New York. I think in the neighborhood of $1,200 or $1,500, but he can not hold his place long. He is all broken down; he will have to give it up soon.

Mr. GIBSON. He is 71 years old.

Mr. RAY of New York. When I was in the Army he commanded my brigade for a time, and I knew him. He was as brave as a lion. He was born in Kentucky and was one of God's noblemen. He was a grand man. He was a disciplinarian, but he was kind to every soldier in the ranks. I want to tell you one incident that happened in the Shenandoah Valley. When he was riding up at the head of his brigade in the advance some of the regiments in front had been broken and were scattering, and General McMillan met a captain going to the rear and he halted him. He said, "Where are you going, Captain?" The captain said, "I am going to the rear." "What for?" said the general. "Well," said the captain, "if I stay up there I will get shot." The old General pulled his pistol and said, "You will get shot if you don't stay up there," and the captain went back. And the old General rode up to the front of the line and re-formed it, and the victory was soon won. He has been a grand man, and now in his old age he ought to have this assistance.

I have seen him in my committee room with this bullet in his body. You go down to the Pension Office and look at the scars on his head which he received at the battle of Winchester when a piece of shell struck him. Go look at him, and if you do not say that he is entitled to $50 while he stays here on earth, I will ask the Senate and the House to retract their action.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask for the reading of the report in this case.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following report (by Mr. MIERS of Indiana):

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 603 and House bill 1009, granting a pension to Clarissa E. Hobbs, have examined the same and the evidence relating thereto and report the Senate bill.

This bill proposes to pension, at $12 per month, Clarissa E. Hobbs, of Louisville, Nebr.

The Senate report states the facts, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 603) granting a pension to Clarissa E. Hobbs, have examined the same, and report:

"A similar bill was introduced in the Senate during the Fifty-fourth Congress, passed the Senate, and was reported favorably by the House.

"The Senate report was as follows, which your committee adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill:

"The petitioner referred to herein made application to the Pension Office under the general law granting pensions to nurses, but was rejected on the ground that there was no record in the War Department of any authority by which the petitioner was employed as hospital nurse. The fact of her services is beyond question, as the following affidavit will show, and other evidence in the papers fully corroborate.

"It appears that she was regimental nurse of the Twelfth Iowa Infantry from its organization at Camp Union, Iowa, on the 18th day of October, 1861, to the 2d day of January, 1862, and she was honorably released at St. Louis, Mo. She also served at Smithland, Ky., Savannah, Tenn., and Pittsburg Landing, and in said service she incurred these disabilities, from which she has been suffering ever since; and while she has no medical record on file in the War Department, it appears, over the signature of Col. F. C. Ainsworth, Chief of the Record and Pension Office, War Department, 'that she has a record as nurse, and that she faithfully performed the duties of nurse and rendered more efficient service to the sick than any other nurse in the hospital.' The following affidavit is submitted:

"STATE OF IOWA, Wright County:

"I, F. C. Cromwell, being first duly sworn, do depose and say: That I was a member of Company A, of Twelfth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry; that I enlisted on or about September 15, 1861, at Aldora, Iowa; I went into camp of instruction at Dubuque, Iowa, on or about October 1, 1861; that on or about said date J. C. H. Hobbs volunteered in said company and regiment; that said J. C. H. Hobbs was accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Clarissa E. Hobbs; that on or near the above date J. C. H. Hobbs was detailed as hospital steward, and that Clarissa E. Hobbs acted as nurse to said company and regiment during our stay at Dubuque, Iowa, and that she accompanied said regiment to St. Louis, Mo., and that she accompanied said regiment to Smithland, Ky., also to Fort Donelson, Tenn., and from there to Savannah, Tenn.

"I further state that it was my custom to visit the sick in the hospitals where our regiment was encamped, and that I personally visited at Dubuque, Iowa, St. Louis, Mo., Smithland, Ky., Fort Donelson, Tenn., and Savannah, Tenn., the hospitals of our regiment during the time of the encampment of said regiment at said places in the fall of 1861 and spring of 1862, and that I was well acquainted with the said Clarissa E. Hobbs, and saw her acting as nurse in all of said places, and that the last time I recollect of seeing her acting in that capacity was on or about April 1, 1862, at Savannah, Tenn.

"And I further state that said regiment (Twelfth Iowa Volunteers), including myself, was captured at Shiloh, Tenn., April 6, 1862, and that during our imprisonment of about six months and a half no regimental records of said organization were kept. I further state that on or about January, 1863, after said regiment had been exchanged, a reorganization was effected at St. Louis, Mo.; that the records at that time were made up from memory of its surviving members; that I myself assisted in furnishing the data of said records; that the assistant surgeon and J. H. C. Hobbs, hospital steward, both having been promoted to other commands, were not present; neither was Mrs. Clarissa E. Hobbs; and my recollection is that the record of Mrs. Clarissa E. Hobbs was not thought of at that time.

"F. C. CROMWELL.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me by the said F. C. Cromwell this 14th day of April, 1896.

"F. C. FENNINGER,
"Notary Public in and for Wright County, Iowa.

"It also appears that Charles C. Parker, late surgeon of the Twelfth Iowa Infantry, makes an affidavit to the fact that he was surgeon of said regiment and that she was a nurse in the regimental hospital and performed faithful and efficient service. A. G. Simpson, second lieutenant of said regiment, also corroborates. It further appears that her husband, James C. H. Hobbs, was hospital steward in said regiment, and he also certified to the service."

This case is within the spirit of the law, and is entitled to this pension.

The Senate bill is therefore reported back, with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

After the word "her," line 5, insert the words "a pension."

Mr. TALBERT (before the reading of the report was concluded). I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Y. The society calls attention to the fact that that is "a spot connected with the colonial history of the nation and of our State, and the General Society of Colonial Wars is earnestly in favor of the purchase, recommending to the State societies to take such action as may advance the same, and representing that such purchase will, in our judgment, be wise and patriotic, as preserving so distinctive an object lesson of our fathers' patriotism and such an incentive, through national ownership, to stimulate the new generations to love of country and right action." The society urgently desires that Congress may deem it wise and proper to pass the needed legislation to secure this moldering fortification and historic ground. The communication is signed by Henry Oakes Kent, governor, and Charles Lathrop Parsons, secretary. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY. I ask that the bill just received from the House in relation to the payment of John Roach's estate be laid before the Senate. I merely desire to move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1116) to pay the heirs of the late John Roach, deceased, $330,151.42, for labor and material, dockage and detention, and occupation of yards and shops for the gunboats Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta.

A joint resolution (H. Res. 119) for the improvement of Humboldt Harbor, California.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 13, on page 78.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Miscellaneous objects," on page 79, after line 11, to strike out:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to prescribe rules and regulations governing the custody and disposition of such funds or property as may now be in the hands of, or may hereafter be intrusted to the care of, the superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane, for the use of a patient or patients in the hospital. He is also authorized, if in his judgment it appear advisable, to deposit said trust funds in the United States Treasury, and to draw therefrom under such regulations as may be prescribed hereunder.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane shall deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in his name as agent, all funds now in his hands or which may hereafter be intrusted to him by or for the use of patients, which shall be kept as a separate account; and he is hereby authorized to draw therefrom on his order, from time to time, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, for the use of such patients, but not to exceed for any one patient the amount intrusted to the superintendent on account of such patient; and he shall give a separate bond, satisfactory to the said Secretary, for the faithful performance of his duties in respect to these funds as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That directors appointed under the provisions of section 4363 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall remain in office until the appointment and acceptance of office of their successors; and the directors of the institution shall have control of the disbursement of all moneys appropriated by Congress for the benefit of said institution, accounts for which shall be settled and adjusted at the Treasury Department, as required by the provisions of section 236 of the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-seven thousand five hundred" and insert "twenty-nine thousand;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which sum not less than $1,000 shall be used for normal instruction;" so as to make the clause read:

Howard University: For maintenance of the Howard University, to be used in payment of part of the salaries of the officers, professors, teachers, and other regular employees of the university, the balance of which will be paid from donations and other sources, $29,000, of which sum not less than $1,000 shall be used for normal instruction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 14, to increase the appropriation for improvement of grounds and repairs of buildings at the Howard University from $1,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 17, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of the Howard University from $32,600 to $35,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 11, on page 83.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have waited until all the paragraphs relating to Howard University were read. My attention is specially attracted to lines 17 to 21, on page 82:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used, directly or indirectly, for the support of the theological department of said university, nor for the support of any sectarian, denominational, or religious instruction therein.

Mr. HOAR. On what page is that found?

Mr. HAWLEY. On page 82. Everywhere the United States recognizes in some form or other that there is a God, and that He is to be addressed in humble supplication for strength to perform our duties and for the maintenance of our health and the safety and honor of our country. That is done every day here and every day in the other House. It is done every day at the headquarters of the regiments. It was done during the war. There is a chaplain on most of the ships of the Navy.

Now, why should this institution be forbidden to have any religious instruction? I am sure that a prayer delivered by a man who is capable of praying in a proper sense and in a proper spirit is religious instruction. I want to know if this provision forbids Howard University from having a chaplain for morning prayer?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not, Mr. President. No provision here interferes with religious instruction at the university. It only provides that the appropriation shall be used for the purposes of education in the university and nothing else. It is a provision that has been in this bill for at least nine years, year by year. It meets with the approval of those who are in charge of the university.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then I understand the chairman to say that the Government appropriation is to be used for secular instruction only, and that the university may have as large a private fund as it pleases for carrying on the theological school.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no doubt about it. The theological school has been conducted for many years out of donations and contributions made by people who are interested in theological instruction there.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 83, after line 18, to insert:

Improvement of the Yosemite National Park: For construction of bridges, fencing, and trails, and improvement of roads, other than toll roads, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, after line 23, to insert:

Improvement of the Sequoia National Park: For construction of bridges, fencing, and trails, and improvement of roads, other than toll roads, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 3, to insert:

Improvement of the General Grant National Park: For construction of a trail around the perimeter of the park, and for material and labor and the construction of a barbed-wire fence around the park, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 9, to insert:

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill why that provision is proposed to be stricken out? Is it not necessary for the improvement of the Yosemite National Park?

Mr. ALLISON. That provision is inserted in another place in the bill, on page 83, as the Senator will observe, in the appropriations under the Interior Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the clause which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 99, line 1, after the word "available," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improvement of the Yellowstone National Park: For the repair and maintenance of existing roads and bridges and improvement and protection of the Yellowstone National Park, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, including not exceeding $5,000 to be immediately available, $45,000.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the paragraph which has just been read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 99, line 1, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out "forty-five" and inserting "fifty," and at the end of line 2, on the same page, by inserting "of which $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended to survey and construct a wagon road of uniform grade, as near as may be practicable, from Gardiner to Golden Gate by way of Mammoth Hot Springs."

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will explain that amendment briefly.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, we have now constructed about 160 miles of road in the Yellowstone National Park. It is the concurrent testimony of all persons who have visited that park that the poorest piece of road in the park is at the very entrance of it, over which all travel proceeds. The road was built from the Mammoth Hot Springs to the Golden Gate, a distance of about 4 miles, on the old trail, and instead of preserving a uniform grade the undulations of the hills over which the road passes constitute the present grade of the road. So that it seems very desirable that this road should be placed upon a uniform grade.

Every person who has visited the park in recent years has passed very severe criticisms upon this part of the road. I think upon reflection it will be found wise and just that the amendment should be made. The Department has recommended that this portion of the road be completely rebuilt. The entire stretch of road referred to in the amendment will aggregate about 10 miles, and I think that the sum set apart for the purpose of furnishing a good grade on that portion of the road will be sufficient.

I have had personal knowledge of this road through the park for many years, and I can assure the Senator in charge of the bill that any committee, or any person or any number of persons appointed to inspect the road, would at once concede the wisdom of this proposed amendment.

Mr. BATE. I should like to ask the Senator, of what material is this road made? What kind of a road is it for which we here appropriate $45,000?

Mr. CARTER. The sum of $45,000 proposed to be appropriated is to be applicable throughout the entire park for the maintenance of roads now in existence and for the construction of such other roads as the superintendent of the park may deem necessary. The amount is much below the estimate presented by the Department. The amendment I offered provides for the use of some part of the appropriation, to wit, the sum of $15,000, upon a particular part of the road.

Mr. BATE. What committee has recommended the amendment which the Senator has proposed?

Mr. CARTER. It has not been recommended by any committee. I recommend it on my own responsibility, knowing that it is proper, and upon the basis of the recommendation of the Department of the Interior and the superintendent of the park.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Military parks," on page 99, after line 12, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of War to complete the battlefield of Lookout Mountain, in the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, by the purchase of the Point Park, at the north point of Lookout Mountain, heretofore authorized by act of Congress, $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, line 16, to increase the appropriation "For continuing the work of establishing a national park at Gettysburg, Pa.," from $50,000 to $75,000.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the following clause, on page 100:

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

Toward the construction of works on harbors and rivers under contracts or otherwise, and within the limits authorized by law, namely, etc.

Mr. STEWART. I see that is an appropriation for "harbors and rivers under contracts or otherwise." I suppose the "otherwise" belongs to the Committee on Commerce. I did not suppose that the Committee on Appropriations would take jurisdiction of river and harbor bills except to carry out contracts when there were provisions allowing contracts to be made in advance. I inquire if contracts were made in all the cases where these appropriations are made, or does that word "otherwise" cover most of the appropriations? If so, it seems to me we ought to have some recommendation from the Committee on Commerce regarding them.

Mr. ALLISON. The words "or otherwise" were inserted here for the purpose of covering improvements that are made directly under the supervision of the Secretary of War or under the supervision of the Mississippi and the Missouri River commissions, where the work is done without a contract. The Mississippi River appropriation found in the river and harbor bill of 1897 provides for a specific amount of work to be done each year for a period of three years, and that the work may be done in the discretion of the commission by the hiring of labor, appliances, etc., without the intervention of contracts. If the Senator will again look at the provision in the bill, he will see that it contains the words "and within the limits authorized by law;" so that it is not intended by the words here inserted to cover any appropriations which are not specifically provided for, as I understand, in the river and harbor bill of 1896. If there are any such, they can be struck out on motion.

Mr. STEWART. I suppose they would not come under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations unless contracts have been let?

Mr. BERRY. Oh, yes. The Senator from Nevada will observe that the provision in the bill as it came from the House covers cases where continuing contracts were authorized. It is not confined to those which have been let, because under the present existing law the Secretary of War has the right to make these contracts, having been authorized to do so. These appropriations are made to cover cases where contracts were let and also those that were authorized.

Mr. STEWART. Then I understand the appropriations follow immediately the statutes without any action of the Department in making contracts. That is very much different from what was the understanding at the time the law was passed. It was supposed that these contracts would be made, and that then the Committee on Appropriations would appropriate the money to carry them out. If it follows that as soon as a law is passed authorizing contracts the appropriation follows, the appropriation might just as well precede any action. I did not know that the Committee on Appropriations had taken jurisdiction except for the purpose of providing for the payment of work under contracts made.

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary of War a year or two ago, under the advice of the then Chief of Engineers, refused to make contracts until appropriations were made under the provisions of the river and harbor act. In several instances appropriations were made two years before the contracts were made. There are a few cases in this bill where contracts have not been made, but only a few, perhaps six or eight. There is, however, a large amount of this work which is not done by contract at all, as I have stated with reference to the Mississippi and the Missouri rivers. No contracts have been made, as I understand, for those rivers, or, at least, if there are such contracts they are limited.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I will call his attention to another matter, that in one or two instances—in one instance, anyway; I do not know of any other—the Secretary of War has proposed that it shall be contingent upon the making of an appropriation by Congress at this session; and that covers that proposition likewise.

Mr. ALLISON. The provision is inserted in all the contracts that the work is to be paid for as the appropriations are made from year to year. So if no appropriations are made, the contractor receives no pay.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Iowa misunderstands me. In this particular case I think the contract is void unless Congress makes an appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. At this session?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Is that for the beginning of some work?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. There may be a case or two of that character.

Mr. WHITE. Then the words ought to stand manifestly.

Mr. ALLISON. I infer from the remarks of the Senator from California that he alludes to the provision for San Pedro.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what is the nature of that contract. It has only been made within a few days, I understand.

Mr. WILSON. If I can have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a few moments, I desire to get some information about some of these contracts. I find on examination that most of the works for which appropriations are provided in this bill have very large unexpended balances. I suppose there is hardly one that is being appropriated for now that had not in the neighborhood of from three to four hundred thousand dollars unexpended balance on December 1, 1897; and, Mr. President, it seems to me hardly fair to come into the Senate with a large appropriation when we have already a large balance standing to the credit of these various improvements.

In my State we have one continuing contract, and the Chief of Engineers, I think very properly and very justly, said that he had just let a contract and had $350,000 unexpended, therefore he would not need any money for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899. If that be true as to the continuing contract upon Grays Harbor, it seems to me it is also true as to a great many contracts provided for in this bill. Take, for instance, the Illinois and Mississippi Canal. We are making a large appropriation for that project—over a million dollars—and we have the statement here of the Chief of Engineers that he has not yet even obtained the right of way.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion there?

Mr. WILSON. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. The right of way was not sought to be obtained all the way through at one time, but the right of way is being obtained as the canal is being constructed mile by mile.

Mr. WILSON. I only take the statement I find in the testimony taken before the Committee on Appropriations in the other branch of Congress.

Take, for instance, also the improvement at Rockland, Me. There they are only estimating that if they let the contract, or cancel the one that they have already let, they will be in need of this money. I submit it is only fair, running all through the appropriations for works as to which there is a large unexpended balance, that we should apply the same rule to Illinois and to Maine that is applied to the State of Washington. We have a large number of projects in that State that can not come under the contract system. We shall not be able to secure any appropriation this year because it is understood there will be no river and harbor bill at this session. We only have one improvement under the contract system. We had an appropriation of $350,000 for that purpose, and the Chief of Engineers says it is not necessary to appropriate any further money. We were inclined to think he was correct, but I think he should have gone further, and to a great many of these projects for proposed improvements the same rule should have been applied that is applied to us.

Take, for instance, the improvement at Humboldt, Cal. They have there $366,000 unexpended December 1, 1897. In New York, at Gowanus Bay, they have a balance of $395,882 of money unexpended December 1, 1897; for improving the harbor at Savannah, Ga., they have $350,000 unexpended; for improving the harbor at Boston, Mass., there was $516,251 unexpended December 1, 1897; for improving the harbor of Buffalo, N. Y., there was $503,109 unexpended December 1, 1897.

With those large unexpended balances, it seems to me, in these days when we are so much in need of practicing economy, that to carry on these projects the same rule the Chief of Engineers has applied to the State of Washington might have been applied to the State of Illinois, the State of Georgia, the State of New York, and the State of Massachusetts.

I submit that a careful and close inspection of the estimates and of the testimony taken before the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives will bear out my conclusions in this matter.

Mr. ALLISON. In making up the items for these improvements it is necessary for us, of course, to consult the engineer officers of the Army who have them in charge. I think the House of Representatives provided substantially for every appropriation recommended by the engineer officers of the Government.

The work at Grays Harbor, to which the Senator from Washington alluded, is an improvement which is to cost, I think, $800,000. There was appropriated last year for this work $350,000.

That, together with a small prior appropriation, left a residuum of $368,000 on the 1st of December. The engineer officer stated that that would be sufficient to carry on the work during the next fiscal year. Therefore there was no appropriation inserted for Grays Harbor.

Respecting the Illinois and Mississippi Canal, the engineer officer of the Government recommended an appropriation of $1,900,000, stating that that sum could be economically expended in the prosecution of the work, and yet in the House of Representatives there was only appropriated $1,427,740, or over $500,000 less than the estimates. The committee of the Senate believed on examination that that was a sufficient sum for this improvement, although under the original appropriation in the river and harbor bill for this improvement it was required that one-fourth of the sum should be appropriated each year.

So I think if the Senator will look carefully into the various items and the reports of the engineers which he holds in his hands, he will see that reasonable provision has been made for most of these improvements. Indeed, I am inclined to agree with the Senator that we could get along in many of these cases with a less sum than has been provided for by the House of Representatives, although in every instance it has been stated that the sums appropriated can be economically expended. It is certainly no fault of the Committee on Appropriations if they follow the requirements of the statute upon this subject.

The Committee on Appropriations would be very glad, of course, to get rid of this entire scheme of providing money for rivers and harbors upon the sundry civil appropriation bill, and would be glad to remand that question, as I think it ought to be remanded, to the Committee on Commerce of this body.

I think the Senator will find, after all, that the improvement at Grays Harbor will go on with alacrity under the appropriations already made.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I have no doubt that in due season the improvements at Grays Harbor will go on, as the chairman of the committee states. I am not complaining at all of the fact that no appropriation has been made for that purpose. I understand fully and completely that we have an unexpended balance of $350,000, and that that is sufficient to run us for this year; and the Chief of Engineers very properly stated that it was not necessary to appropriate any further amount. I am inclined to agree with him in that. What I complain of is that of all the projects under the contract system, by some singular arrangement, that is the only one not provided for here. While we have $350,000 of the amount appropriated for that work unexpended, I find all over the United States there are other projects, with an equal amount of money unexpended, which are not treated in the same manner and in the same way.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], who has information which I have not on the question of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal, states that they are securing the right of way as they move along. The Chief of Engineers states that he hopes the difficulties in securing this right of way will be removed, and that if removed he will expend $1,986,000. It seems to me that the rule applied to our project in the State of Washington should be applied to the State of Illinois—first, get the right of way, and having secured that, under the contract system make the appropriation. In a great improvement that we have been wanting to make at Seattle, connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington, we are told we can do nothing; that we can have nothing; that no appropriation will be made until we first secure the right of way. It seems to me, if we are first to secure the right of way for the canal from Puget Sound to Lake Washington, they should also for the Illinois and Mississippi Canal; not bring in an enormous appropriation here until they have properly secured the right of way for that purpose.

The contract for the improvement at Rockland, Me., I understand is to be canceled and to be re-let. Therefore it seems to me that the amount of money already appropriated for that purpose, to wit, $351,000, is sufficient. So I have criticised these large appropriations when they are for works which already have an enormous unexpended balance to their credit. I think it very singular that the only work under the contract system in the West should have been eliminated from any appropriation in this bill, although it may probably have been proper to have done so.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator must remember that the canal in the State of Washington, of which he speaks, has not been authorized by law; neither is there any authorization for an appropriation for it. Therefore it must, under our rule, come under the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. WILSON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The Illinois and Mississippi Canal has been specifically authorized, the maximum cost provided for, and a direction has been given that an appropriation for one-fourth of that amount shall be annually made. The one-fourth was not made last year, and the Chief of Engineers recommended that this year not only the one-fourth should be appropriated, but the additional sum. The Committee on Appropriations thought we were only required to make the appropriation for this year, in accordance with the statute, and therefore appropriated only $1,400,000 instead of $1,900,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 23, on page 100.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the committee one other question in regard to this matter. In all the laws authorizing contracts to be made I believe there is a limit of the amount, is there not?

Mr. ALLISON. It is within the authorized limit.

Mr. STEWART. Within the authorized limit. How do you know that the work will be constructed within the authorized limit when there is no contract? How can you proceed when no contract is made? There is an authorized limit, and you may contract up to that limit, but how can you know any contract will be made within the limit before a contract is made? You make the appropriation before the contract is made. It seems to me that the limit in the law will amount to nothing if you go on and make appropriations before you know whether the work can be constructed within the limit. I do not know how you arrive at that.

Mr. ALLISON. Take the item just read by the Secretary, which provides for the completion of the improvement of Hudson River in New York. That means that the work must be done within the limit or otherwise it can not be constructed. In all these appropriations the understanding is that the work shall be completed within the limit prescribed not by the proposed statute, but by a former statute.

Mr. STEWART. That the work provided for in a former statute shall be completed within the amount fixed in that statute?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. Have you language in all of the statutes that will confine it to that limit or is there a loophole?

Mr. ALLISON. I think in every instance the statute provides that the cost shall not exceed a certain limit, where it is necessary to make such a provision. In a good many of these improvements the limit, of course, is not fixed. Take all these great river improvements——

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I know what causes the disturbance to my friend the Senator from Nevada. It is the San Pedro appropriation, in which he has always taken rather a fatherly interest, and on page 104 the Senator from Iowa will observe that the limit prescribed by the river and harbor act is retained and reexpressed. So the Senator from Iowa is entirely correct in the assertion he has made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Engineer Department," on page 101, after line 16, to insert:

Improving Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island: For continuing improvement, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, line 9, after the word "improvement," to insert "under existing project;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Oakland, Cal.: For continuing improvement, under existing project, $133,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 10, to insert:

For the purpose of carrying out the following provision of the river and harbor act of 1896: "For the construction of restraining barriers for the protection of the Sacramento and Feather rivers in California, $250,000, such restraining barriers to be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the recommendations of the California Débris Commission, pursuant to the provisions of, and for the purposes set forth in, section 25 of the act of the Congress of the United States entitled 'An act to create the California Débris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California,' approved March 1, 1893: Provided, That the Treasurer of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to receive from the State of California, through the débris commission of said State, or other officer thereunto duly authorized, any and all sums of money that have been, or may hereafter be, appropriated by said State for the purposes herein set forth. And said sums when so received and hereby appropriated for the purposes above named, to be expended in the manner above provided," and for the further purpose of making available to the United States the appropriation, or any part thereof, made by the provisions of an act of the legislature of the State of California, approved March 17, 1897, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the appointment, duties, and compensation of a débris commissioner, and to make appropriation to be expended under his directions in the discharge of his duties as such commissioner, approved March 24, 1893,'" and of said amended act, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in the preparation for and construction of the proposed works authorized and appropriated for by the aforesaid provisions, to enter into an agreement that the contractor shall look solely to the State of California for one-half of such expense, to be paid out of said State appropriation, and the United States shall in no manner be liable for said one-half.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, after line 8, to insert:

Improving Yaquina Bay, Oregon: For continuing improvement, $100,000.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to the amendment, but I may have something to say about the text later on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 11; no quorum voting.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut and Mr. WHITE. No quorum has voted.

Mr. ALLISON. The yeas and nays will disclose the presence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BATE. Is this a call of the Senate or a vote by yeas and nays?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is being taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. BATE. It has been demonstrated that we have not a quorum, and I think the rules of the Senate require that then there shall be a call of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Faulkner,	Mantle,	Sewell,
Allison,	Foraker,	Mason,	Shoup,
Bacon,	Frye,	Mills,	Smith,
Bate,	Gear,	Mitchell,	Spooner,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Seventy-four Senators have answerd to their names. A quorum is present. The yeas and nays will now be called upon the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the call for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn, and that we will go into executive session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unless the yeas and nays are now demanded, the Chair will again put the question to a viva voce vote. [A pause.] The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Commerce submitted to the Committee on Appropriations an amendment to go in at the end of this paragraph, in line 15, page 116. I think it is a wise provision. I ask that it may be read and inserted, if there is no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORMAN in the chair). The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the amendment just agreed to the following:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 126, after line 23, to insert:

Hot Springs Branch, Hot Springs, S. Dak.: The Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers is hereby authorized to locate, establish, and construct a branch of the National Home, to be used as a sanitarium for disabled volunteer soldiers, within the limits of the town of Hot Springs, in the county of Fall River, in the State of South Dakota, to cost in all, for each and every purpose connected with such erection, establishment, and construction, $100,000, and toward this object there is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator who has the bill in charge if there is any good reason why the special sanitarium provided for should be limited to volunteer soldiers. Why should it not also include the soldiers of the Regular Army, if they need it?

Mr. ALLISON. I believe there is a hospital now for the Regular Army at Hot Springs, Ark. This is a part of the Volunteer Soldiers' Home establishment and is recommended first by the Board of Managers and next by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. It would seem, if there were a special hospital of this sort, or even if there were two, that there would be no particular reason for keeping apart to that extent the disabled soldiers who had served in the Regular Army and the disabled volunteers. I do not know much about the subject and merely ask the question for information.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will bear in mind that all the volunteer Homes are kept separate from the Home for the Regular Army.

Mr. HOAR. I know that, of course.

Mr. ALLISON. It was intended that this hospital should be a part of the system of the Home for volunteer soldiers.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that it should be open for the regular soldiers to go there if they wanted to do so. Still I know nothing about the subject. The Senator from Iowa is familiar with it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think an amendment to the amendment is necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 128, line 21, after the word "million," to strike out "eight hundred and twenty-one thousand" and insert "nine hundred and thirteen thousand five hundred;" and in line 23, after the word "dollars," to insert "Hereafter all supplies for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be purchased, shipped, and distributed as may be directed by the Board of Managers;" so as to make the clause read:

In all, $2,913,521. Hereafter all supplies for the National Home for Disabled

Volunteer Soldiers shall be purchased, shipped, and distributed as may be directed by the Board of Managers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 130, after line 13, to insert:

UNDER THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Payments on account of the explosion at the United States torpedo station, Newport, R. I.: For payment to the heirs and legal representatives of those who were killed while in the employ of the United States in the discharge of their duties on the 3d day of July, 1893, at the United States Torpedo Station on Goat Island, in the harbor of Newport, R. I., by the explosion of the gun-cotton factory, $15,000; of which sum there shall be paid to the legal or personal representatives of each of the following persons the sum of $5,000: Frank Loughlin, Jeremiah Harrington, and Michael O'Reagan: Provided, That where the deceased left a widow and children the widow shall receive one-half and the children shall share alike.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, before this amendment is acted upon, I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee who has the bill in charge to it, and to ask him whether it is proposed by the committee in recommending this payment of $15,000 to change the policy of the Government which has existed up to the present time in reference to individual injuries? It is important that this matter should be determined, and that the will of the Senate should be known with reference to it, particularly for this reason: The Committee on Claims is flooded with claims of this character. They have not been heretofore paid, save in some exceptional cases, where the attention of the whole country has been called to the magnitude of the injury, particularly in the case that occurred here in this city a few years ago. The committee have a number of claims now pending. Some of them are awaiting a full meeting of the committee so that they may be more fully considered, and it may be very well at the present time to definitely understand what the policy of the Senate is to be with reference to claims of this character.

Where persons are injured in the public service outside of the Army and the Navy, are we to pay them for the injuries inflicted—pay them something in the way of compensation, or some money payment in some other way? It is an important and serious question. Some of the claims that we have now before the committee go back some twenty-five or thirty years, and if the door is to be opened to the payment of claims of this character generally it would bring a very large number of them before the Senate for some recognition.

It may be that in this case there are some reasons why it should be an exception to the general rule, and we ought to determine whether the general rule is to be changed or whether this is to be treated as an exceptional case.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, it is not the intention of the Committee on Appropriations to establish any new rule respecting payments for losses incurred in the service of the country either by disability or death; but this matter came to us last year from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it presented a case of unusual hardship, making it, as we supposed, fairly an exception to the general rule.

Mr. WHITE. Can the Senator from Iowa state briefly the facts and the general nature of the case?

Mr. ALLISON. This was an explosion of the gun factory at the United States torpedo station at Newport, R. I.

Mr. WHITE. Were the men referred to in the amendment employed as laborers there?

Mr. ALLISON. They were laborers in the gun factory, and were blown to pieces; and it seemed to us to be an exceptional case. I know of very many cases where the rule, as suggested by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], would require us to make payment, such as losses of postal clerks, losses sustained by internal-revenue officers, etc. I know there are a number of cases of that character which have been presented to us from time to time.

Mr. COCKRELL. And they have always been rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. And they have always been rejected, as the Senator from Missouri very well says.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will ask the Senator whether these men were mere employees or whether they were officers of any kind?

Mr. ALLISON. I think they were not officers. They were employees of the gun factory. We felt this to be such a case of peculiar hardship that we have proposed payment this year as we did last year. It is a question for the Senate to decide.

Mr. COCKRELL. These men were engaged in peculiarly hazardous work.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Let us take the Ford's Theater case, where Congress intervened and paid for personal injuries inflicted. There the injuries were inflicted upon various employees of the Government who were working at an apparently safe employment. They were mere clerks carrying on certain labor on behalf of the Government, and while they were thus employed there was carelessness in making an excavation, which resulted in the falling of the building and the consequent injury of the employees.

It was not a case where men engaged in exceptional employment or work of a hazardous character; but in this particular instance these employees, as I understand the Senator from Iowa, were engaged in the vocation of attending an explosive factory and doing certain work there where, from the very nature of the employment, an explosion was liable to occur. No doubt there is great hardship resulting from injuries inflicted in that way, but it appears to me if the Government of the United States assumes responsibility in this case there is no reason why it should not pay in every case where an employee, however extra hazardous his employment may be and however cognizant he may be of the character of that employment, is killed or injured in the pursuit of it. If we are to establish that rule it ought to be general, and there should be no exception, it appears to me, about it.

There is another thing in regard to this matter. There are a number of claims pending here that are justly due, admitted to be justly due, cases where people have grown gray in waiting for their settlement, who are fast approaching the term of their lives, and they can not get the money. This discrimination in favor of a claim of an unusual character—and to my mind the propriety of the payment of which is doubtful—seems to me to be at least a questionable policy.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator from Utah proceeds, I should be glad to state briefly the circumstances under which this accident occurred.

Mr. WHITE. I shall be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. There was a fire in this gun factory. One of the men named in the amendment was an enlisted man, who was employed as a laborer in that factory. These three men knew precisely where the explosives were stored. I will read briefly what is stated respecting what they did at that time:

1. Frank Loughlin, Jeremiah Harrington, and Michael O'Reagan lost their lives while endeavoring to extinguish the fire which resulted in the total destruction of the gun-cotton factory at this station July 3, 1893.

2. Loughlin and Harrington were regularly employed in the building, knew the character of its contents and the danger to which they were exposed; while O'Reagan, a most faithful employee of the station for about eleven years, as enlisted man and per diem laborer, was one of the first to respond to the fire alarm and joined the other two men.

3. Loughlin, who had been acting as foreman of the gun-cotton factory, knew that the only dangerous material in the building (about 7 pounds of long-staple gun cotton) was stowed in a powder tank, which, on the first alarm of fire, should have been thrown into the sea; and doubtless being cognizant of the fact that such disposition of that material had not been made, took the nozzle of the fire hose, and, with Harrington and O'Reagan, attempted to combat the fire in its immediate vicinity, fully aware of the dangerous nature of the undertaking. While thus engaged in the performance of what they believed to be their duty the explosion occurred, resulting in the death of the three men.

Mr. PASCO. In what year did the explosion occur?

Mr. ALLISON. In 1893. These men entered upon the hazardous duty of endeavoring to prevent the explosion by risking their own lives. Of course, they need not have done so. It would seem that this case is absolutely an exceptional one.

Mr. COCKRELL. Purely exceptional.

Mr. WHITE. I agree with the Senator from Iowa that it is an exceptional case, under that statement of facts.

Mr. ALLISON. I have all the testimony here.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, after the statement made by the Senator from Iowa, it does appear to me that this is an exceptional case. I do not know that I have any objection to the appropriation, although in the Committee on Claims there are very numerous cases, seemingly quite meritorious, which have been presented to that committee for consideration. I shall not interpose any objection to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Let me state that these cases have been very embarrassing to the Committee on Claims. We have there a very large number of cases where accidents have happened by carelessness on the part of some Government employee whereby others have been hurt. Such cases are constantly coming up; and this principle would involve a very large amount if we are to treat them in the way here proposed. The committee have postponed the consideration of such cases from time to time or decided against them, but have made an exception in some cases where the claimants have been employed about the Capitol and Government buildings here in Washington. We have set our faces against the payment of other claims.

The question has been up time and time again; and inasmuch as this case is now under consideration, I wish to have its nature properly understood, so that it will not result in the presentation of a number of new cases here. I see this case is clearly an exception and that these men were engaged in an extra hazardous business.

Mr. ALLISON. And they were working for the Government.

Mr. STEWART. Yes. I do not think this case involves other cases pending before the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, it is always an ungracious task to report against any claims of this character, and they are always claims which excite the compassion of Senators whose duty it is to examine them on these different committees; and I thought it important that this matter should be definitely settled before this particular case was acted upon.

I will say that the cases which are embraced in this appropriation have already been cited to me, as a member of the Committee on Claims, as a reason why we should adopt a favorable report in some ten or a dozen cases which are now in the committee room, and which have been actually there considered. They are all of them claims of persons who were in the employ of the Government, who incurred some risk, who suffered the loss of life or of limb, and who have been seeking compensation. If the whole report has not been read—I think it has not been—it may be very well for the Senator from Iowa, who has charge of the bill, to have it spread at length upon the RECORD.

Of course the wishes of the Committee on Claims are always in favor of making favorable reports in such cases. Our sympathies are excited and we are always willing to do what we can for those who have been unfortunate and who have suffered; but the rule which has been adopted up to this time has been a very strict one. Even when the Ford's Theater case was acted upon, it was treated as an exceptional case, and for that very reason it was referred to a special committee and not to the Committee on Claims, and it was treated by that special committee. I hope that the facts which make this explosion, in which these three persons lost their lives, an exceptional case will be stated in the RECORD, so that it may be made clear, when we consider in the committee the other cases to which I have referred, that this is not intended to be a precedent for the Committee on Claims to follow in ordinary cases.

Mr. ALLISON. The report is somewhat lengthy, but I would be glad to have it inserted in the RECORD. It is a report made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] from the Committee on Naval Affairs, in which they recommend this payment. The report has, I think, been twice made, and a bill has already passed the Senate providing for this appropriation.

I agree with the Senator from Florida that such payments should be made only in exceptional cases, and I think the testimony which is embodied in this report clearly discloses the character of the case and makes it exceptional.

Mr. HALE. Is that the Newport case?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the Newport case. If the Senator from Florida desires it, I shall be glad to have the report inserted in the RECORD, though it is already in our archives. For that reason it is hardly necessary to again print it, but if the Senator desires it, I will agree that it shall be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. PASCO. I think it is best to insert it in the RECORD, that Senators may examine it and that it may be better known to the public, so that those who have claims for individual injuries may see that the Committee on Appropriations in reporting this case favorably and in urging its passage have treated it as an exception and not with the intention of making it a precedent for future cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to say that if this case had not been purely and essentially an exceptional case, I certainly should have opposed it, and opposed it bitterly. I do not think the Government is responsible or should be held responsible for accidents which may happen to its employees; but here was a case where, instead of taking care of themselves where a fire occurred, they were trying to save Government property, and in doing so they risked their lives and lost them.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the report may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the report referred to will be inserted in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The report referred to is as follows:

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 106) entitled "A bill for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of those who were killed by the explosion of the gun-cotton factory at the United States torpedo station at Newport, R. I.," having had the same under consideration, report it back favorably and recommend its passage.

A similar bill in the House of Representatives was favorably reported in the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress. The report submitted at that time is attached hereto.

[House Report No. 1819, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7109) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of those persons who were killed by the explosion of the gun-cotton factory at the United States torpedo station at Newport, R. I., have considered the same, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, in his report for 1893, on page 14, says:

"On July 3, 1893, the gun-cotton factory (at the naval torpedo station) was destroyed by fire, a full statement of which will be found in the report of the board appointed to investigate the subject (see appendix). Three employees, Jeremiah Harrington, first-class laborer; Frank Loughlin, second-class pipe fitter, and Michael O'Reagan, first-class laborer, lost their lives while fighting this fire, and it is earnestly requested that Congress be asked to grant assistance to their families. The employees of this station receive no extra compensation for the undoubted risk to which they are subjected. The fact that so few lives have been lost since the establishment of this station is due to the care which has been constantly exercised."

On page 37 of same report the inspector of ordnance at the torpedo station says:

"The destruction of the gun-cotton factory by fire, attended by loss of life, on July 3, 1893, has been made the subject of special reports to the Department and the Bureau. While the direct testimony in regard to the cause is conflicting and unsatisfactory, the opinion of the board that it was due to a spark caused by a foreign substance in the picker is concurred in by me as being the most probable.

"The immediate cause of loss of life was the explosion of some 6 or 7 pounds of dry long-staple gun cotton, used for priming detonators, etc., which was loosely stowed in a powder tank, the lid of which was tightly screwed down to exclude moisture."

The special reports of the board appointed to investigate the circumstances attending the fire and explosion are attached to this report as an appendix.

To accompany the fourth indorsement, Commander George A. Converse, inspector of ordnance of the United States torpedo station, submits the following memorandum:

TORPEDO STATION, Newport, R. I., February 7, 1896.

1. Frank Loughlin, Jeremiah Harrington, and Michael O'Reagan lost their lives while endeavoring to extinguish the fire which resulted in the total destruction of the gun-cotton factory at this station July 3, 1893.

2. Loughlin and Harrington were regularly employed in the building, knew the character of its contents and the danger to which they were exposed; while O'Reagan, a most faithful employee of the station for about eleven years, as enlisted man and per diem laborer, was one of the first to respond to the fire alarm and joined the other two men.

3. Loughlin, who had been acting as foreman of the gun-cotton factory, knew that the only dangerous material in the building (about 7 pounds of long-staple gun cotton) was stowed in a powder tank, which, on the first alarm of fire, should have been thrown into the sea; and doubtless being cognizant of the fact that such disposition of that material had not been made, took the nozzle of the fire hose, and, with Harrington and O'Reagan, attempted to combat the fire in its immediate vicinity, fully aware of the dangerous nature of the undertaking. While thus engaged in the performance of what they believed to be their duty the explosion occurred, resulting in the death of the three men.

4. From my personal observation of the conduct of these men at the time of the explosion, I can state that they acted with great bravery, and sacrificed their lives in an attempt to prevent the destruction of Government property.

5. I renew my recommendation that provision should be made for the widows, children, or legal representatives of these men, believing that all civilians actually employed in the manufacture of explosives or war material in Government factories should be entitled to the same consideration as persons who are required to use such material in the naval or military service.

6. I believe that it is customary for private companies engaged in the manufacture of explosive material to insure the lives of the employees for the benefit of the surviving relatives; and it seems but just that an equal provision should be made by the Government.

7. A copy of the letter referred to by Mr. BULL is transmitted herewith, and attention is invited to the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance for the year 1893, which contains the recommendation that Congress be asked to render assistance to the families of these men.

GEORGE A. CONVERSE,
Commander, U. S. N., Inspector of Ordnance, Torpedo Station.

The letter mentioned in the last paragraph of the foregoing memorandum is as follows:

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, July 5, 1893.

SIR: Please convey to the families of those men who were killed at the fire at the gun-cotton factory the deep sympathy of the honorable Secretary of the Navy, and his profound sorrow at their loss.

The Bureau will make every effort to secure for them some compensation for the dependent condition in which they have been placed.

Respectfully,

W. T. SAMPSON,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

Commander G. A. CONVERSE, U. S. N.,
Inspector of Ordnance, in charge of Naval Torpedo Station,
Newport, R. I.

In a letter from Hon. Hilary A. Herbert, Secretary of the Navy, dated March 13, 1896, and addressed to the Hon. MELVILLE BULL, House of Representatives, the Secretary says:

"It appears that upon the occasion of the fire at the torpedo station on July 3, 1893, Frank Loughlin, Jeremiah Harrington, and Michael O'Reagan lost their lives while engaged in the performance of duties which were of an extremely hazardous nature. The families of the deceased persons have the deep sympathy of the Department."

From the evidence on file before your committee, consisting chiefly of the official reports hereto appended, and the testimony taken before a coroner's jury of inquest held on July 6, 1893, a great deal of which is conflicting, due, perhaps, to the excitement attending the fire, which spread with such great rapidity as to soon get beyond the control of the men who were fighting it, enough is gleaned to establish the following facts:

(1) That the gun-cotton factory at the United States torpedo station at Newport, R. I., was destroyed by fire on July 3, 1893, the origin of which is in doubt.

(2) That during the progress of the fire a tank containing about 7 pounds of dry, long-staple gun cotton exploded.

(3) That Frank Loughlin, Jeremiah Harrington, and Michael O'Reagan, mechanics in the employ of the Government at said station, were almost instantly killed by said explosion while in the discharge of their duty.

(4) That the facilities for combating a fire on ordinary occasions were adequate, but on the day of the fire in question the indoor facilities, as shown in the testimony of Commander Belknap before the coroner's jury, were not utilized because "the factory was not working, as the next day was the Fourth of July. The pump was not going."

(5) That the rules for the conduct of fires at the torpedo station and at the gun-cotton factory were regarded by some and disregarded by others; the fact of the suspension of work in the factory on that day and the pumps being idle no doubt causing confusion and misunderstanding, some being under the impression that the water was turned on to flood the building, while others said that it was not. In the excitement every man seems to have done what he thought was best.

(6) That the fire and the explosion were not due to carelessness on the part of anyone, but was an unfortunate occurrence, likely to happen at any time among combustible material and explosives.

(7) That in obedience to clause 7 of the rules for conduct of fire at the gun-cotton factory, that "personal safety or consideration will be disregarded until the authority present consents," Frank Loughlin, Jeremiah Harrington, and Michael O'Reagan met death in their heroic and unselfish efforts to protect Government property.

Your committee, in view of the foregoing facts and also in view of the recommendations of the officers of the Navy Department, especially of Commander Converse, who was an eyewitness of the sacrifice that these men made, and who commends in strong words their unflinching loyalty to duty and their bravery, report the accompanying bill for the relief of the widows and fatherless children of these brave men back to the House with the recommendation that it be amended as hereinafter indicated and, as amended, it do pass.

The bill provides for an appropriation of $24,000, to be divided equally among the heirs and legal representatives of the deceased, which would give $8,000 to each. Following the precedent set in the case of the Ford Theater disaster, which was of more recent occurrence, and because it happened almost before the eyes of Congress, justice was promptly granted, and not long delayed, as in this case, your committee recommend that the words "twenty-four thousand," in line 11, be stricken out and the words "fifteen thousand" be inserted; and in line 13 strike out the word "eight" and insert "five." With these amendments the bill will conform to the provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill, approved March 2, 1895, granting relief to the relatives of the Ford Theater victims.

APPENDIX.

NAVAL TORPEDO STATION, Newport, R. I., July 14, 1893.

SIR: (1) In obedience to your order of the 10th instant, the original of which is appended (marked A), we have investigated the circumstances attending the destruction of the gun-cotton factory at this station on the 3d of July, instant, and have the honor to report as follows:

ORIGIN OF FIRE.

(2) The fire appears to have originated in or near the "picked-cotton room" S (on plan of factory appended, marked B), at about 1.35 p. m. July 3. The picking machine 36 was in operation, and was attended by Dennis Mahan, first-class laborer. His station was in the "picking room" T. At the time mentioned he heard a noise or concussion, as of a door flying open and striking something soft, in the direction of the corridor between S and P. He supposed the door between S and the corridor had been blown open by the draft from the picker. It was held by a button, which sometimes worked loose. He looked into the corridor; the door was closed, but a fire had broken out in a quantity of English bleached cotton stowed against the partition separating the corridor from the room P. The upper half of the door between S and the corridor consisted of a frame covered with wire netting. Mahan could not account for the noise he heard, and had no idea of the cause of the fire.

He did not know whether there was any fire in the room S; he thought not, but could not tell. He would have known if anything metallic had passed through the picker. He thought nothing had. There has been an occasion when an iron cotton hook was found in room S, and its presence there could not be accounted for unless it had passed through the picker. Such passage, however, had not been noticed. He shouted fire, alarmed the other workmen, ran for fire buckets in room U, but found them empty; then got out of the building. He returned later and helped pass out wet gun cotton from room J. He knew of a tank containing about 7 pounds of dry, long-staple gun cotton, which was in room O, but knew of no order to throw it out in case of fire. He knew of the fire hose and pump having been tested on the 1st instant. He did not know whether the sprinklers had been turned on. There were seven or eight powder tanks, closed air-tight, and containing dry, picked cotton ready for dipping in room O.

(3) Lauritz Julienssen, first-class laborer, was picking raw cotton by hand in room V. He heard Mahan call "Fire!" and rushed through the central corridor to tell Harrington, who was attending the poacher S. He did not see the flames at this time; did not know of the tank of dry gun cotton in room O, or of any order to throw it out. After first leaving the building, he returned and helped throw out wet gun cotton from room J.

(4) Jeremiah Harrington, first-class laborer, foreman of the factory, and Frank Loughlin, second-class pipe fitter, assistant foreman, and engineer, went to the north end at the alarm, and after seeing the flames appear to have left the building immediately. They both reached the machine-shop building to report to Lieutenant-Commander Belknap about the time the alarm was sounded. Harrington reported that the fire was caused by spontaneous combustion of the English cotton. Mr. Belknap asked them if water had been turned on, to which they replied no. Later, Harrington made the same report as to the origin of the fire to the inspector of ordnance in charge.

(5) There is no other direct evidence as to the cause and origin of the fire. The board, after careful consideration, accept the opinion of Lieutenant-Commander Belknap, superintendent of the gun-cotton factory, expressed in his report of the 10th instant to the inspector of ordnance in charge, a copy of which is appended, marked C. It is extremely improbable that thoroughly clean, dry cotton could develop spontaneous combustion. The board is therefore of the opinion that the fire originated in a spark from the picker, caused by the teeth striking a foreign substance accidentally fed in with the cotton. It has been the custom to take every reasonable precaution against such an occurrence. All the cotton fed to the picker was first hand picked in room V to free it from foreign substances. A fire in room S would undoubtedly communicate itself to the cotton in the corridor through the wire netting of the door in a very short time. Mahan's idea that the fire originated where he first saw it was natural, but does not impair the other view. He could not have told at the time whether there was fire in room S or not.

FIRE STATIONS.

(6) Appended to this report are D, the general fire bill; E, rules for the gun-cotton factory; and F, rules for conduct of crew at gun-cotton factory in case of fire; copies of all of which are posted in the factory, and the crew instructed in their provisions. The last exercise at fire stations was held on the 1st instant. The foreman and his assistant were specially instructed in all the requirements; but ordinarily the laborers, who were subject to change from time to time, were given simple duties only, to avoid confusion. They were directed to give the alarm, and then lead out the nearest hose. The foreman and his assistant had been repeatedly instructed in the case of fire to throw out a labeled tank of long-staple dry gun cotton, kept near the northern window of room O, and used for igniters and vent sealing primers.

(7) All the statements point to the fact that the crew were demoralized by the suddenness of the fire and its rapid spreading, and left the building at once. No alarm was turned in from the factory, though there were push buttons at three different points; the salt-water pump was not started; the hose was not led out, and the sprinklers connected with the stand pipe were not turned on. These facts are demonstrated by an inspection of the valves and fittings since the fire. Mahan states that he went for fire buckets in room U, but found them empty. The weight of evidence indicates that he got out of the building without stopping for anything.

No filled buckets were kept in the north end of the building. In the south end there were buckets for use in the cooling room. A fire hose was bighted down near the cock 42 in the north end of the main hall, and another near 43 in the central part of the building, both of which would have reached the seat of the fire. No. 44 was another cock with hose attached in the south end, and 45 was the valve for admitting steam to the salt-water pump in the room below. The sprinklers were in the final drying room R.

THE EXPLOSION.

(8) This occurred in room O, blowing the side of the building out to the east and northeast. From an inspection of the ruins and the statements of witnesses, it seems evident that the source of the explosion was the tank containing 6 or 7 pounds of long-staple dry gun cotton. This was closed air-tight, which, with the heat from the flames, furnished the necessary conditions to produce a second-order explosion of dry gun cotton. All the results bear this out. The explosion was accompanied by a dull, heavy report, differing distinctly from the sharp ringing crack of a detonation, or explosion of the first order. The effects were widespread, rather than local, a considerable portion of the wall of the building being blown out, and the roof over the seat of the explosion being lifted bodily.

Although débris was thrown out laterally with violence, there was none of the vertical effect attendant on the detonation of gun cotton under timbers. An examination of the ruins showed boarding, joists, and floor timbers wrenched and splintered, but none were found with the clean cuts across grain, which a detonation would have produced. The pieces of copper tanks found, though badly torn, did not exhibit the peculiar erosion usually attending detonation. The tanks which contained dry raw cotton for dipping show evidence of fusion or perforation from the outside. This is conclusive that their contents had no part in the explosion. The location of the explosion, the point also where the tank of dry gun cotton was known to stand, is clearly indicated by the clean, bare appearance of the earth for a distance of several feet. Elsewhere the surface is covered with cinders and débris.

CONDUCT OF THE FIRE.

(9) The first alarm was given by Printer Dunphy, who saw the smoke and flames from the printing room in the machine-shop building. Harrington and Loughlin arrived in the building almost immediately after to report to Lieutenant-Commander Belknap. The general alarm was sounded at once, and the reel and ladders were promptly on the scene. The first two hoses were attached to the fire plug marked 1 on the plan G. appended. One was carried to the north end of the building, the other to the central door. The flames had now got too much headway to be controlled. The inspector of ordnance in charge ordered that the north end be abandoned and all streams concentrated on the wet gun cotton in the middle and south end of the building. Another hose was coupled to the plug marked 2 and led to the central door.

The order to abandon the north end was repeated by Lieutenant-Commander Belknap, but before it could be obeyed the explosion occurred. This must have been about 1.50 p. m. The men killed and injured were on the hose near room O, and were close to, or had just broken in, the window to thrust in the nozzle. After the explosion all streams were directed on the central part of the building to keep the finished gun cotton wet, the nozzle men lying below the bank. Some of the wet gun cotton, about 800 pounds, had been passed out from the building. The remainder, about 2,700 pounds, with the exception of portions of several boxes, was consumed without explosion. The unconsumed blocks remained in the ruins, burned to different stages, many of them intact. The packing boxes were burned and charred to various degrees. The duration of the fire from its discovery to the destruction of the building was approximately one hour.

The appliances for fire, both in the factory and at the station, were ample for all ordinary contingencies. Had the directions as to extinguishing apparatus and the throwing out of dry gun cotton been observed by the crew at the factory at the first alarm, the fire, though probably too extensive to be at once extinguished, might have been confined to the northern end of the building, and there would have been no explosion and no loss of life.

(10) The usual personnel of the station were present at the time of the fire, with the exception of the crew of the Stiletto and Lieutenant-Commander Kennedy, Lieutenant Holman, and Lieutenant Smith, who were all absent on duty. Commander Converse directed the work of combating the fire from the bank opposite the center of the building, in about the position marked W in the plan G. Lieutenant-Commander Belknap was on the bank near fire plug 1, and Ensign Capehart, at the time of the explosion, was on the edge of the bank near room O, at the position X. The men killed or injured were all on or near the hose whose stream was being directed toward room O. Harrington, Loughlin, Reagan, and Burns were at the nozzles, close to the east side of room O. According to Burns's statement, Loughlin seemed specially anxious to get the stream into room O. Harrington had been away to get a ladder, and had just joined the others.

(11) The complete list of killed and wounded is as follows:

Killed.—Jeremiah Harrington, first-class laborer; Frank Loughlin, second-class pipe fitter; Michael Reagan, first-class laborer.

Injured.—E. E. Capehart, ensign; Daniel Burns, quartermaster, third class; L. J. G. Kuhlwein, seaman; P. Nilsson, landsman; Ky. Kennel, third-class laborer; L. Julienssen, first-class laborer; J. A. Dunphy, first-class printer; M. F. O'Sullivan, first-class blacksmith; George A. Brown, first-class joiner; James Marren, first-class laborer.

(12) After the alarm was given every possible effort was made by the whole personnel to subdue the flames. The conduct of most of the men erred on the side of daring. The greatest difficulty was experienced in keeping them back out of danger.

(13) Appended to this report are twelve photographs of the ruins as they appeared on the 6th instant:

1. General view from northeast.
2. General view from north.
3. General view from southeast.
4. General view from south.
5. View of northeast corner of room O, showing ground bared by force of explosion, and remains of powder tanks in which dry raw cotton was kept.
6. Center and north end from east.
7. Doorway in center of building, showing remains of wet gun cotton.
8. Center of building from north end, showing remains of wet gun cotton.
9. South end from southeast.
10. Basement door at south end.
11. Smokeless powder mixing house, distant 40 feet from point of explosion and in face of room M.
12. Remains of wet gun cotton gathered from ruins.

Respectfully submitted.

TORPEDO STATION, Newport, R. I., July 20, 1893.

The foregoing report is approved. The opinion of the board that a spark from the picker produced by the presence of a foreign substance in the cotton with which it was being fed is accepted by me as the most probable cause of the fire.

Commander, U. S. N., Inspector of Ordnance, in Charge.

NAVAL TORPEDO STATION, Newport, R. I., July 10, 1893.

GENTLEMEN: (1) You are hereby appointed a board of investigation to inquire into circumstances attending the destruction of the gun-cotton factory at this station on the afternoon of the 3d of July, instant.

(2) You will make your report in accordance with the requirements of article 1720 of the United States Navy Regulations, 1893.

(3) It is desired that in your investigation particular attention be given to ascertaining, if possible, the immediate cause of the fire, concerning which great doubt exists.

Respectfully,

G. A. CONVERSE,
Commander, U. S. N., Inspector of Ordnance, in Charge.

NAVAL TORPEDO STATION, Newport, R. I., July 10, 1893.

SIR: (1) I beg leave to make the following report concerning the recent fire in the gun-cotton factory, covering points upon which information is desired by the board of investigation:

AS TO THE CAUSE OF THE FIRE.

(2) The fire was discovered by an employee named D. Mahan, who was at the time running the picker. He states that he heard a noise like the slamming of a door of the room into which the picker fed, and, stepping aside to see if the door was open, saw flames issuing from a pile of cotton just outside the door, which was shut.

(3) When the picker was in use it made a strong draft of air, which carried the light, fluffy particles of the picked cotton to the extreme end of the room and through the large meshes of the wire screen which was let into the upper part of the door. After running the picker it was customary to collect these fluffy particles to use around the factory, as they were not suitable for dipping. Sometimes when the picker was running the button which held the door would work loose, and the door, forced by the draft, would fly back with a bang against the side of the building, and Mahan thought that this caused the noise he heard.

(4) I believe, however, that a spark caused by the picker striking in its revolutions a piece of metal or gravel ignited the dust in the room; that the dust burned with a light explosive force, making the noise Mahan heard, and that particles of the fluffy cotton were blown through the meshes of the door, setting fire to the pile on the outside. It is extremely probable that the cotton inside the room was also burning.

(5) All of the cotton waste in the part of the factory where the fire originated was clean, dry, and free from oil or other extraneous matter. The pile of cotton outside the door was composed of bleached waste and fluffy particles of cop waste. The bleached waste was some left over from that used in making gun-cotton charge No. 173; it was received in bales over a year ago and found to be very clean, absorbent, and in hot weather remarkably free from firing in the process of dipping.

NAMES AND DUTIES OF EMPLOYEES.

(6) The regular force employed in the gun-cotton factory numbered five men, but, as work had only just been resumed after a shut down of some six weeks while repairs were made to the pulper, a vacancy that had occurred had not been filled, and four men only were at work at the time of the fire, engaged in running the pulper, picker, and final drier. They were J. Harrington, foreman; F. Loughlin, assistant foreman and engineer; and D. Mahan and L. Juliensen, first-class laborers. The first two mentioned had had long experience in the work of the factory, and were fully competent either to take part in or to direct the performance of any one of the processes. Harrington was made foreman in December, 1891; Juliensen was a new hand on trial.

(7) Upon the alarm of fire the duties were as follows: Harrington, in general charge, was to look after the northern half of the building, and he was specially charged, after sounding the alarm, to throw the tank of long-staple gun cotton out of the building, to turn on the sprinklers in the final drying room, and to see the fire hose led out and started. Loughlin was to look after the south end, to start the salt-water pump if it was not running, and to see that the fire hose in the center and south end were led out and started.

The other hands were to lead out the hose near to which they happened to be working. In the event of fire making headway all were to pass out boxes of gun cotton (compressed). The fire apparatus was tested the 1st instant, and found to be in good working order; the fire hose and nozzles were always kept coupled and ready for instant use; the directions for fire could have been carried out under any circumstances in two or three minutes, yet when the fire broke out all hands seem to have precipitately abandoned the building, Harrington and Loughlin both coming over to the machine shop to notify me.

LOCALITY OF THE TANK CONTAINING LONG-STAPLE COTTON.

(8) There were some 6 or 7 pounds of long-staple gun cotton, made about a year ago for use in igniters and vent-sealing primers, stored loosely packed in an empty powder tank. This was kept adjacent to the north window in the room, between the engine and final press, used for the storage of the tanks containing the cotton ready for nitration. It was plainly marked, and both Harrington and Loughlin had been repeatedly cautioned by me as to the disposition to be made of it in case of fire, and it would almost seem as if they had recollected and were endeavoring to get it out when they were killed, for, instead of going down into the ditch, as I had ordered when directed by the inspector to concentrate all water on the boxes of wet gun cotton, they dragged the hose back from the north end of the factory, carried the nozzle to the window of the storage room, and thrust it in. The explosion took place very shortly afterwards.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. BELKNAP,
Lieutenant-Commander, United States Navy.

Commander G. A. CONVERSE, U. S. N.,
Inspector, in Charge.

Referred to the "board of investigation," of which Lieutenant Kennedy is senior member.

G. A. CONVERSE,
Commander, U. S. N., Commanding Torpedo Station.

Received July 11, 1893.

DUNCAN KENNEDY,
Lieutenant, U. S. N., Senior Member of Board.

Respectfully returned. Copy appended to the report of the board.

DUNCAN KENNEDY,
Lieutenant, U. S. N., Senior Member of Board.

FIRE BILL.

The fire alarm will be a continuous ringing of the electric fire-alarm bell for the space of one minute. This will be followed by the steam whistles of the machine shop, ferry launch, and all boats under steam, sounding the general alarm, thus: ——— — — — ——— thrice repeated. The general signal will be followed by the signal denoting the fire district, as given below.

The island is divided into three districts for the purpose of locating the fire.

First district.—All that part of the island north of a line joining the northeast corner of the gun-cotton factory and the southeast corner of the machine shop. Whistle signal, ——— — ———.

Second district.—All that part of the island lying between the above-mentioned line and a line running east and west at south end of the inspector's quarters. Whistle signal, ——— — — ——— — — ——— — — —.

Third district.—All that part of the island south of the last-mentioned line. Whistle signal, ——— — — — ——— — — — ——— — — — —.

On the alarm being sounded all the officers of the station will go to the district in which the fire is.

In the event of the fire taking place at or near the wharves, or on board any of the boats belonging to the station, the ferry launch will immediately spread fires and stand by to tow other boats out of danger.

On the first alarm being sounded all enlisted men will go to their stations, as given below. A repetition of the alarm will call all the mechanics to the scene of the fire, except those at the gun-cotton factory, who will lead out their hose and protect that building and the magazines in the vicinity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the language used in the paragraph on page 130, beginning in line 9. The language is:

For payment of amounts for commutation of rations to prisoners of war in rebel States.

I suggest that it should read as follows:

For payment of amounts for commutation of rations to prisoners of war in States formerly in rebellion.

Mr. ALLISON. This provision is in the statutes which have been passed for a great many years, and this appropriation was made to conform to those statutes. It has been the language used for thirty years.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Of course if that language has been used in the statutes heretofore, I have no objection to it remaining in the bill, but I submit that it is rather an awkward statement.

Mr. ALLISON. The phraseology has been used for a long time.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Under the Department of Justice," on page 131, after line 7, to insert:

For fireproof record case, double door for vault, metallic window frame and shutters, office of the register of wills, per estimate of the Architect of the Capitol, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 131, line 14, after the word "Attorney-General," to insert "and the Secretary of the Interior;" and in line 18, after the words "Rocky Mountains," to insert "under the provisions of the 'Act for the erection of United States prisons and for the imprisonment of United States prisoners, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1891;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Interior to have prepared plans, specifications, and estimates, and for expenses connected with the selection of a prison site south of the thirty-ninth degree of north latitude and east of the Rocky Mountains, under the provisions of the "Act for the erection of United States prisons and for the imprisonment of United States prisoners, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, to be immediately available, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 132, line 15, to increase the appropriation "for detecting and punishing violations of the intercourse acts of Congress and frauds committed in the Indian service" from $4,000 to $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the following clause, on page 132:

Prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States preliminary to indictment; for the investigation of official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks of the United States courts, and United States commissioners, and for this purpose all the records and dockets of these officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney-General at any time; and for the inspection of United States prisoners and prisons, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General, $40,000.

Mr. WILSON. I do not know that it is in order here, but I should like to offer, for the consideration of the Senate, the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read, for if it can be inserted in this bill it will save some thirty or forty thousand dollars in the way of fees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington will be read, but the Chair will inform the Senator that the understanding is that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations shall first be considered, and then the bill be open to general amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to having the amendment read, and then I will ask the Senator to let it lie over.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to have the amendment read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

That hereafter it shall be unlawful to pay to Indians who obtain intoxicating beverages, or aid and abet the same, from any person or persons accused of the offense of selling or supply the same contrary to the acts of Congress prohibiting the sale and disposal of intoxicating beverages to Indians, any fees or compensation for attendance, or detention in custody or otherwise, as witnesses in proceedings before any court or committing magistrate, pursuant to such acts of Congress, or expenses of travel in going to or returning from the place of such proceedings. Such witnesses may be compelled to attend and testify as in other cases, and marshals shall pay the traveling expenses and board of such witnesses while in custody, but not to such witnesses.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 133, line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert "and any unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1898 may be used for the fiscal year 1899;" so as to make the clause read:

Provided, That the commissions or appointments of United States district attorneys under section 767 of the Revised Statutes, or the act of February 27, 1897, shall expire at the end of the present session of the Senate, and such appointments hereafter made shall expire at the end of the session of the Senate next succeeding the date of the appointment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has been called out of the Chamber in the discharge of the service of the Senate. He asked me to request that this amendment should go over until the reading of the bill was concluded, reserving the point of order. He will be back presently.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be passed over. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 5, on page 136.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 5, page 136, I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty," and to insert at the end of the clause what I send to the desk.

C., as recorded in book B, folio 97, in the office of the surveyor of said District) be, and the same is hereby, closed and made a part of the land which the said Public Printer is herein directed to acquire for a site for a building for the Government Printing Office.

Mr. ALLISON. This is an important amendment looking to the acquisition of additional land for the Government Printing Office. When the amendment was first considered by the Committee on Appropriations, it was thought best not to make an appropriation at this session to provide for the condemnation of the property; but, ascertaining the condition of the law in this District, it was found that in order to secure condemnation it was necessary to make an appropriation. Therefore, as an amendment to the amendment, I offer what I send to the desk, to be inserted as stated, being changes necessary in order to make an appropriation for the purchase of the property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 153, at the end of line 22, insert:

And a sum sufficient, not to exceed $225,000, to pay for said real estate in the manner hereinafter provided, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire what the mode of condemnation is to be?

Mr. ALLISON. That is set out in the amendment. The appraisement is to be made by a commission consisting of three persons.

Mr. STEWART. I want to say right here that I am opposed to purchasing any property in the District of Columbia to be appraised by a jury. Their decisions are so wild that no business transaction can be based upon them. I have observed their verdicts for some years, and they have no reference to the value of property. They are the wildest things I ever did see. I have seen wild horses and all that kind of thing, but nothing is so wild as the verdict of a jury summoned in this District to condemn property.

Mr. WHITE. Is it their tendency to appraise high or low?

Mr. STEWART. It is their tendency to give all the party who owns the property wants, if they can find out.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator from Nevada say that they generally appraise too high or too low?

Mr. STEWART. Too high, three or four times too high.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 154, line 13, I move to strike out all after the word "reasonable" to the end of the paragraph, in the following words: "The same shall be certified to Congress for its action thereon," and to insert:

The sum or sums so ascertained shall be paid into said court for their use.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 154, I move to strike out, after the word "upon," in line 18, the words "appropriation therefor being made by Congress be," and to insert:

Payment into the said court as aforesaid of the amount so ascertained and assessed as to each parcel be thereupon.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 155, lines 6 and 7, I move to strike out, after the words "United States," the words:

And appropriation are duly made therefor.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 156, line 18, after the word "office," to strike out "That section 2 of the act aforesaid, approved March 3, 1887, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto at the end thereof the following: 'The jurisdiction hereby conferred upon the said circuit and district courts shall not extend to cases brought to recover fees, salary, or compensation for official services of officers of the United States or brought for such purpose by persons claiming as such officers or as assignees or legal representatives thereof,'" and insert "That section 9 of the act aforesaid, approved March 3, 1887, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting in the fifth line thereof, after the word 'contained,' the words: 'Provided, That in all cases hereinbefore provided for an appeal to the circuit court of appeals shall be allowed on behalf of the United States from all judgments adverse to the United States of United States district or circuit courts.'"

So as to make the last section of the bill read:

SEC. 3. That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1887, chapter 359, second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, be amended by adding thereto the following proviso, to wit: Provided further, That no suit against the Government of the United States, brought by any officer of the United States to recover fees for services alleged to have been performed for the United States, shall be allowed under this act unless an account for said fees shall have been rendered and finally acted upon according to the provisions of the act of July 31, 1894 (chapter 174, 28 Statutes at Large, page 162), unless the proper accounting officer of the Treasury fails to finally act thereon within six months after the account is received in said office. That section 9 of the act aforesaid, approved March 3, 1887, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting in the fifth line thereof, after the word "contained," the words: "Provided, That in all cases hereinbefore provided for an appeal to the circuit court of appeals shall be allowed on behalf of the United States from all judgments adverse to the United States of United States district or circuit courts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill has been concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. At the bottom of page 64 and the top of page 65 I wish to change the amount of the unexpended balance made available for improvement of ventilation in the Capitol Building, by making the sum $2,173.54 instead of $2,724.99.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 25, page 64, and line 1, page 65, strike out the words "two thousand seven hundred and twenty-four dollars and ninety-nine cents" and insert "two thousand one hundred and seventy-three dollars and fifty-four cents."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In the items for the Government Hospital for the Insane, on page 79, line 11, after the word "friends," I move to insert:

And not exceeding $1,000 may be expended in the purchase of such books, periodicals, and papers as may be required for the purposes of the hospital.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 111, after line 24, I move to insert:

Antietam battlefield: For repair and preservation of monuments, tablets, observation towers, roads and fences, etc., made and constructed by the United States upon public land within the limits of the Antietam battlefield, near Sharpsburg, Md., $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 141, after line 24, I move to insert what I send to the desk. I do this without the approval of the committee, or rather the committee has not had an opportunity to consider the amendment, but I think it is a proper one, and I offer it at this time so as to clean up a memorandum I have here.

The SECRETARY. After line 24, on page 141, insert:

Nicaragua Canal Commission: The engineer member of the Nicaragua Canal Commission, appointed from the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army as authorized by the sundry civil act approved June 4, 1897, shall be entitled to receive compensation, in addition to his regular army pay and allowances, equal to the difference between such annual army pay and allowances and the compensation of the other two members of the commission.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is a proper amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. It puts the army engineer upon the same basis with the others.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. There are some amendments that were passed over, and I ask that they may now be considered with the exception of one or two where the Senators interested are not present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the first amendment passed over is on page 3. The first amendment will be stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I reserved the amendments of the committee on that page embraced within lines 13 and 19, inclusive.

The first amendment reserved was, on page 3, after line 12, in the items for immigrant station, Ellis Island, New York, to insert:

For new tunnel, steam mains, sewerage, and water supply to and from buildings, $11,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reserved was, on page 3, after line 15, to insert:

For water supply from Jersey City, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reserved was, on page 3, after line 16, to insert:

For naphtha launch, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reserved was, on page 3, after line 17, to insert:

For new ferry house on island, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move to insert, after line 19, on page 3:

Immigrants' disinfection bath house and laundry, $55,200.
Kitchen and restaurant building, $30,000.
Repairs to crib work on northeast side of basin and ferry slip, $20,000.

I will state that in conference with the Committee on Appropriations these items have been agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The statement of the Senator from Indiana is not quite accurate. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, the Senator from Indiana, who is the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, and myself looked over the items, and the Assistant Secretary convinced me that the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Indiana ought to be embraced in the bill; but it was agreed to by no other member of the Committee on Appropriations, because I have not had an opportunity to submit it to the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that when the matter comes into conference the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana will be stricken out, for I think it is entirely unnecessary, and the institution can be carried on just as well without it as with it. That is my judgment.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will briefly state that a year or more ago the immigrant station at Ellis Island was destroyed by fire. Congress at the last session passed a bill appropriating $600,000 for the reconstruction of an immigrant building upon the island and for the enlargement of the island. The Treasury Department prepared for the reconstruction of this very important station according to the most approved designs and in a durable manner.

Those having in charge the work appeared before the Committee on Immigration and submitted to that committee the plans they had adopted and fully presented the imperative needs of the service. The committee was convinced that the work and improvements provided for by the original appropriation were inadequate, and that the additional work and improvements contemplated by the amendment are absolutely essential in the proper transaction of the vast and important business at the immigrant station.

The first item which I have offered by way of amendment amounts to $55,200 for the construction of an immigrant's disinfection bath house and laundry. The assistant commissioner of immigration at New York makes the following careful and complete statement with reference to the character of and necessity for this improvement:

In this building it is proposed to disinfect the clothing and clean the person of every immigrant arriving at the port of New York who may be detained over night for any reason.

This is a separate plant from the smaller disinfecting apparatus used at the hospital, where all those diseased or liable to spread contagion are treated in another way by the medical authorities. * * * After the immigrants pass their inspection and are held for any reason, before they retire for the night, it is proposed to pass them into this disinfection building, where there should be provided a bathing establishment containing a sufficient number of shower baths for men and separate baths for women and children.

In connection with these baths should be a room for disinfecting the clothing and effects of immigrants by means of formaline-gas apparatus, in order to destroy all vermin. This apparatus, which is the most modern and effective, while being at the same time very inexpensive, can also be used to disinfect blankets, and deodorize and disinfect the rooms in the main building, where the immigrants live and sleep while detained.

In connection with this should be a free laundry, tubs for the use of immigrants, with hot and cold water, and drying racks over steam coils. In this building should also be established a laundry suitable for the work of the island, exclusive of the hospital, for towels, blankets, bedclothing, etc.

The building should be well lighted, ventilated, and properly warmed, made of nonabsorbing, noncorrosive material, walls lined with enameled bricks, and the whole capable of being thoroughly scoured and cleaned. On coming to this building from the main building the men and women are to be separated, taking all their possessions which are to be disinfected with them. On going to their several rooms they disrobe, their effects are placed in a basket and a check given for them.

From there they proceed to the bathroom; after the baths to a dressing room, where they are to be provided with a suit of clothing suitable for night wear. In the meanwhile the effects are placed in baskets, each one by itself, and placed in the disinfecting room to be treated thoroughly by formaline gas. During this time the immigrant goes to bed, and in the morning receives his belongings thoroughly disinfected.

No further explanation of this item is deemed necessary. It seems to the committee that the very highest sanitary considerations would support the recommendation that has been made by the immigration officers and by the Treasury Department.

The next item provides for a kitchen and restaurant building. As the Senator from Missouri is perhaps aware, Ellis Island is a small one. There will be no buildings upon it not belonging to the Government. There will be no provision made for the support of the large number of officials and employees upon it except it is made by the Government. There will be neither public restaurants nor hotels there, and it is thought not only advisable, but absolutely essential, by the Immigration Bureau that there should be provision made by the Government for furnishing kitchen and restaurant facilities for the employees, they, of course, paying the expense of their meals.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is, practically furnishing a hotel to feed them at Government expense.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. They must either have a hotel furnished there or go to the mainland, to either the New York or New Jersey shore, which is entirely impracticable. The assistant commissioner of immigration submits the following reasons why this item should be authorized:

As the total number of persons employed, including Government officials and employees of all classes necessary to conduct the business of the depot, will average 300, there must be provision made for at least a lunch meal, and the building should contain a kitchen, storeroom, cold storage, bake ovens, pantries, dining room for employees, etc.

It seems to the committee that this appropriation, which is strongly urged by the officers in charge of the immigrant station and by the Treasury Department, is amply justified by the obvious necessities of the situation.

The next and last item is, "Repairs to cribwork on northeast side of basin and ferry slip, $20,000." The Treasury Department reports in detail what this is for and the necessity for it, as follows:

This item covers the repair of that part of the crib only which is immediately adjacent to the new main building. It was originally work of an inferior character, planned with a view to the smallest expenditure at the time. It was also greatly damaged by the fire which destroyed the main building, which stood almost on the back line of the crib.

The repair is absolutely necessary for access to the main building. The old crib was made of round instead of square timber, which has allowed the filling to wash out. The crib is also bulged toward the basin. The estimate is in sufficient amount only to make the front secure. It is not intended to take out and rebuild the whole crib.

The amendment embraces only those items which seemed in the judgment of the committee to be absolutely essential for the proper conduct of the immigrant service at Ellis Island.

I will add in reference to my opening statement that I was a little inaccurate in saying that the Appropriations Committee had agreed upon the amendment. I should have said the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ALLISON], who has charge of the pending bill, had so agreed.

Mr. BACON. I understand that all the amendments suggested by the committee have been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I ask that the next amendment reserved may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 21, under the heading "Protection and administration of forest reserves," in line 21——

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment was agreed to, I believe.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, on page 67, line 21, striking out, after the word "persons," the words "to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior for duty" be receded from.

Mr. ALLISON. I supposed that by unanimous consent that had been passed over. If it has not been passed over, I trust it will now go over until the amendments of the committee have been acted upon.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was the understanding. The amendment has been agreed to. The matter was called up yesterday, and it was acquiesced in apparently by all that the question should be again raised when the bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I so understood.

Mr. WILSON. I thoroughly understand that, but I am not at fault. The committee themselves started to call for the amendments which had been passed over.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is certainly correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the agreement was that the amendment referred to by the Senator from Washington should be taken up when the bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. In order to perfect the text of the bill, in line 9, on page 67, before the word "may," I move to strike out "he" and insert "the Secretary of the Interior."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 9, before the word "may," it is proposed to strike out "he," and insert "the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move the same amendment in line 24, on page 67.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 24, before the word "may," it is proposed to strike out "he" and insert "the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

Provided, That forestry agents and supervisors, and other persons under this appropriation, shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment which was passed over on page 135 will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 135, line 17, in the clause making appropriations "for fees of the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia," the Committee on Appropriations reported to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the commissions or appointments of United States district attorneys under section 767 of the Revised Statutes, or the act of February 27, 1897, shall expire at the end of the present session of the Senate, and such appointments hereafter made shall expire at the end of the session of the Senate next succeeding the date of the appointment.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asked that that amendment might be passed over for the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] who is now in his seat.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, it strikes me that that amendment is subject to a point of order. I have voted a good many times to sustain the Committee on Appropriations on points of order which were not so well taken as would be a point of order against this amendment.

It certainly seems to me peculiar legislation. It is aimed at one or two persons. The fair way would be not to make the provision retroactive. I should have no objection to having it apply to future appointments, but I think it is better to allow the persons who have been appointed to continue in their offices until the President sees fit to change them.

I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Vermont will not make the slightest opposition to this amendment.

To cover the case, as it was said, of an emergency one year ago, in 1897, there was passed unanimously through the Senate and through the House of Representatives in one day a small bill authorizing the courts to appoint district attorneys in the case of a vacancy, particularly in the District of Columbia, where there was no such power in the courts. It was not intended by Congress, and never could have been, that such temporary appointments should become permanent appointments, because the law and the Constitution require that such appointments shall be made by the President of the United States, and then be confirmed by the Senate.

Under the provision of the law to which I have referred, the power of the Senate in these cases, which is given to it by the Constitution, is absolutely nullified. Certainly neither the Senator from Vermont nor any other Senator would desire such a condition to continue after this body had pronounced its judgment, and take from us the right to which we are entitled under the Constitution and the law. That is all that this amendment is intended to provide for. Such appointments may run to the end of this session or to the end of any session of Congress where such an emergency occurs, in order to give ample opportunity for the selection of proper persons to fill such offices.

I am certain the Senator from Vermont, after the statement I have made, will not insist upon his point of order, because it can not be applied, as a matter of course, to an amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations to limit an appropriation contained in the bill. The Senator, I am certain, would not desire to take advantage of an accidental piece of legislation of this character and thus deprive the Senate of the right to exercise its judgment.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I have always been inclined to sustain the Committee on Appropriations whenever they raise points of order on new legislation. Certainly I do not know a case where the point of order would apply with any more force than it does to this provision. I should have no objection to it and should not make the point of order were it not for the language, beginning in line 20, which makes the provision apply to appointments already made. If Senators insist upon inserting any such provision, let it cover future appointments, but do not let it have a retroactive effect. The President will no doubt heed the views of the Senate in due time, and so I think it is altogether better to leave the matter where it is, and it will soon settle itself.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me ask the Senator a question. When that law was passed, was it contemplated that that man should continue in office indefinitely beyond the time for which he was appointed? Was it not in contemplation then that the bill which was passed was to provide for an emergency? Congress has adjourned since that time, and yet no action has been taken by the President.

This is not an ex post facto law. It will operate upon all such appointments made heretofore and provides that they shall expire at the end of the present session of Congress. That ought to be the general law and cover all cases.

Mr. PROCTOR. Perhaps it should be, but it seems to me very clear that this is not the proper corrective to prevent such cases in the future; and this case, of course, the Executive will in due time take care of. I see no reason for taking it out of his hands; and so I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is one of the most desirable amendments which the committee has reported.

In the present state of the law, United States district attorneys and marshals constitute an exception to the general rule that public officers, when once appointed, shall serve until their successors are qualified. Therefore, when the four years' term of a marshal or district attorney has expired, a vacancy at once arises.

This peculiar situation has been under consideration by the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee has reported a bill bringing these two offices into harmony with the general rule, and providing that all appointees alike shall hold until their successors are qualified in due course.

To provide against the interruption of justice which would result from vacancies such as I have described in the offices of district attorney, it became necessary several years ago to pass a statute authorizing the justices of the Supreme Court to appoint district attorneys where vacancies occurred in their circuits.

But when a vacancy occurred in the office of the district attorney for the District of Columbia about a year ago it was discovered that no method of filling that vacancy existed. All are familiar with the facts connected with that attorneyship. President Cleveland made an appointment. That appointment was deliberately rejected by the Senate.

Under these circumstances the District of Columbia was about to be left without a district attorney. So, by common consent, a new statute was passed, which applied the principles of the general law to this District and authorized an appointment to be made by the supreme court of the District of Columbia. Strange to say, the very gentleman whose confirmation had failed in the Senate was named by the court under this statute. As the law stands to-day, that man may hold office for two years, five years, ten years, or indefinitely. A district attorney who is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate under the greatest solemnity only holds his office for four years, but here is an officer, appointed by a court during an emergency, who may hold his office for an unlimited time. That is indefensible, in my judgment, and it seems to me that the Senator from Vermont should not make the point of order upon an amendment so meritorious.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] is sufficient of itself to justify the point of order. This is undoubtedly general legislation. It is not pretended that under the law, as the law exists to-day, the persons who are intended to be affected by this amendment are not lawfully in office.

Mr. CHILTON. If the Senator from Kentucky will allow me, I was not so much arguing the point of order as I was presenting the merits of the question and seconding the suggestion made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] should withdraw his point of order.

Mr. LINDSAY. Then it is not necessary to argue the point of order. The amendment is general legislation, it is clearly prohibited by the rule, and the point of order ought to be sustained.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I suppose that there is no question in the mind of any Senator that the amendment is liable to the point of order if it shall be insisted upon. I have not thought it a very important matter one way or the other, but I suppose—speaking now only for myself—that the gentleman referred to is a very good officer. The judge seems to have continued him in office, to have reappointed him, or to have made a temporary appointment, and the President seems to have delayed the appointment of his successor for a considerable time longer than was expected when the appointment of the present incumbent was made.

But if this law should pass and for any reason it was to be presumed that within a week or two or a day or two the President would be ready to make an appointment, I would suppose the judge would be likely to continue this gentleman in office for a brief time rather than to have a new officer learn all the duties of the office, give a new bond, take a new oath of office, and all that. So it strikes me, with great deference to the Senators who have urged the adoption of the amendment, that it is not a very important matter one way or the other.

Of course nobody can supppose for a moment that a practice will grow up with any President, or that any judge will be likely, without very extraordinary reasons, to continue in office any person after he had once been rejected by the Senate. Still, the point of order being made, I suppose no Senator doubts that it is well taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no other Senator wishes to be heard upon the point of order, the Chair is ready to decide the question.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the Chair decide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, the proposed amendment being general legislation. Therefore the Chair holds that it is not in order.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, which I think comes within the rule limiting this appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 135, line 17, in the clause making appropriations "for fees of United States district attorney for the District of Columbia," after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation authorized in the two preceding paragraphs shall be used to pay salary, fees, or expenses of a district attorney appointed under section 767 of the Revised Statutes or the act of February 27, 1897, for a time beyond the end of the session of the Senate next succeeding the date of said appointment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after line 9, on page 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

For the post-office, court-house, and custom-house, St. Paul, Minn.: The limit of cost of building, including heating and ventilating apparatus, fireproof vaults, elevators, and approaches, complete, is hereby extended $250,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to contract for the completion of said building as aforesaid, within said limit of cost, in accordance with amended plans of said building to be prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to cause suitable accommodations to be provided in said building for all officials of the United States located in said city who are entitled to quarters in public buildings.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] was considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and the committee regarded it as exceptional as respects public buildings; and therefore, while not incorporating it in the bill, the committee instructed me to make no point of order upon it, though it is in the nature of legislation which would subject it to a point of order if made. I do not, however, make a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 105, after line 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 105, in the clause making appropriations for "improving falls of the Ohio River at Louisville, Ky.," after the word "dollars," in line 2, it is proposed to insert:

Of which sum $15,000 shall be used for restoring the banks of the Ohio River at or near Shawneetown, Ill., recently swept away by the high waters on said river, such sum to be immediately available.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that amendment may be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. I propose for the consideration of the Senate the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 98, after line 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

To provide for the coaling of ships of war and their tenders, barges, and other vessels at the wharves and elevators at the city of Mobile, and for victualing and watering of ships of war at said wharves, $200,000, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in deepening and widening of the channel leading into Mobile Bay from the Gulf of Mexico and up to the wharves at Mobile, Ala.

Mr. PETTUS. This amendment is a very important one concerning our present situation. The outer bar of Mobile Bay has gradually washed out until there is now a depth of about 23 feet. Many of the war vessels, however, can not come over that bar. After passing the bar a few miles, the entrance to the harbor is guarded on one side by Fort Morgan and on the other side by Fort Gaines.

In case of war Mobile Harbor is the best place in the United States, so far as price goes, to obtain coal for our vessels. As it is now situated, our larger vessels can not go over the bar there at all. The bar is only a little more than a quarter of a mile wide. It has been washed out by the regular current of the river, within my recollection, some 6 or 8 feet without any sort of assistance.

The object of the amendment is to secure to our vessels passage into Mobile Harbor, where they will be under the protection of the forts, because as soon as they pass over the bar they will be in what is called the lower bay, where there is an abundance of water. They will be there under shelter, and they will be there where they can obtain a supply of coal more cheaply than they can obtain it at any other place in the United States.

I hope the Senate will allow the amendment to pass.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not at this moment make any point of order on the amendment, although I was not aware until I had conversed with the Senator from Alabama that the Committee on Commerce had rejected it; but, if this appropriation is to be made, it must be made upon the very exceptional grounds stated by the Senator from Alabama, and it should be done by unanimous consent, so that it may be thoroughly understood that we are not to convert this bill into a river and harbor bill. If the emergency is such and if the conditions are such that the amendment should be inserted here by unanimous consent, without suggesting other amendments in the nature of river and harbor amendments, I shall not object; but unless it can be understood by Senators that it is an emergency amendment, and that it is so regarded by the Committee on Commerce, I think it should not be in this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator rise to address the Senate on the pending amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. FRYE. I am called out, and will ask the Senator if he will allow me to offer an amendment which will take but a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 25, after the words "Revised Statutes," in line 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "Revised Statutes," in line 15, on page 25, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to purchase, from the appropriation for the maintenance of the Revenue-Cutter Service, uniform clothing for the enlisted men of said service, the same to be sold to the crews of vessels in service: Provided, That the actual cost of the clothing thus supplied to enlisted persons shall be withheld from their pay and repaid to said appropriation.

Mr. FRYE. This amendment is rendered necessary by the fact that nine revenue cutters have been ordered into service and that the men are without uniforms.

Mr. COCKRELL. How are the uniforms furnished to others—are they furnished by the Government?

Mr. FRYE. No; by themselves; but they will be relieved by this provision. They all pay for their own uniforms.

Mr. COCKRELL. This amendment does not place these men in a different position from the others?

Mr. FRYE. No. This amendment provides that they shall pay the amount back to the Secretary of the Treasury when the appropriation is made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa for my own information whether he proposes to finish the pending bill this afternoon?

Mr. ALLISON. That is not my purpose.

Mr. HOAR. If it be not the purpose of the Senator, I wish he would allow this amendment to go along with the others.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. HOAR. I did not know the Senator had the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. I know you did not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] had the floor and yielded to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. FRYE. I inquire of the Chair if the amendment offered by me has been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment has been agreed to. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. MORGAN. I want to make a single remark about the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. PETTUS] before the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] leaves the Chamber. He is chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations stated that the Committee on Commerce thought the amendment ought to be rejected on its merits when it was pending in that committee. I think that is not the fact.

Mr. FRYE. No; it had not been rejected on its merits, but rejected under a rule adopted by the committee that whatever was legitimate to a river and harbor appropriation bill we would report adversely to the Senate to be placed upon another bill.

Mr. MORGAN. My colleague has stated the exceptional circumstances and the exceptional necessities in regard to the amendment submitted by him. I merely want to add that the officers of the Navy and the officers of the Army concerned in this matter are very anxious to have this appropriation made for military purposes, if for nothing else, and that the whole purpose of the amendment is to enable ships to get up to the wharves of Mobile over the outside bar, where they can get elevators for the purpose of coaling and get water and supplies. It is now costing us an immense amount of money to secure coal and other supplies. Our vessels, as we have seen already, have had to leave the Dry Tortugas on account of drought there, and they are hauling in hundreds of thousands of gallons of water, seeking to supply the cisterns at Dry Tortugas. It is a very important matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the object of the appropriation?

Mr. MORGAN. To clean out, or, rather, to enlarge, the channel leading from the wharves at Mobile out to deep water.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought that channel had been cleaned out.

Mr. MORGAN. Not to a sufficient depth, as stated by my colleague, to permit vessels of the largest draft to pass over the bar.

Mr. BACON. What is the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. MORGAN. Two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to reserve the point of order upon this amendment, unless there is unanimous consent that it shall come in upon the grounds stated by the Senators from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the only ground on which we offer it. It is not an ordinary river and harbor improvement.

Mr. ALLISON. I am notified on this side of the Chamber that for the same reasons and upon the same grounds other amendments will be offered to the bill; and it is not my purpose, representing the Committee on Appropriations, to allow the pending measure to be converted into a river and harbor bill. I think there is great force in the suggestions which have been made by the Senators from Alabama; but if the effect of this shall be that it will be followed by other amendments of a similar character, I shall be bound to raise the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to say just a word.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not take grounds which it seems to me, without intention on his part, of course, are not thoroughly patriotic. If there is ground for this amendment such as the Senator from Alabama states, that it is in some way a war measure, that it is necessary for the carrying out of the schemes of the Navy in regard to loading and unloading vessels and supplying our fleets, then any other harbor to which the same applies ought to be upon the same footing, and unless such other harbor shall be upon the same footing, of course it need not be considered.

I want to advise the Senator now that I have an amendment in regard to the very important harbor of Wilmington, in the State which I in part represent, where three of the oldest and largest shipbuilding plants in this country are located and in active operation and are now doing work for the Government. They are seriously hampered by the exceptional fact that the appropriation of $225,000, made two years ago under the contract system, of which $100,000 was made available, has utterly failed because the board of engineers reported that there should be an increase in the limit of cost. Therefore nothing has been done for two years under the appropriation available, while the War Department and the Navy Department are all interested. Two vessels of the Navy are now being built there which will find serious difficulty in getting out.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not intend to be put in the attitude of wanting in patriotism as respects this question either by the Senator from Alabama or any other Senator. I know the situation of the Senator from Delaware with respect to his harbor, and I should be very glad myself to allow the amendment suggested by him to be inserted in the bill; but if any amendments are to be inserted in the bill in the nature of river and harbor improvements, they must be inserted by unanimous consent and be put upon the ground suggested by the Senator from Delaware, or else I shall make the point of order upon every one of them.

There is no Senator here who does not know perfectly well that a bill as to any river or harbor or any portion of this Union which it is necessary for the United States to use, occupy, or improve for the purpose of carrying on war, if we shall be engaged in war, will pass the Senate and the other branch of Congress without a moment's hesitation. Therefore I wish simply to put myself in the position of opposing river and harbor amendments upon the sundry civil bill. I am willing that these appropriations suggested as war measures may be put on the bill; but they shall not be put on without a point of order, except for that reason.

Mr. PETTUS. I appeal to the Senator from Iowa to let this amendment pass on its merits. Let whatever may come hereafter be met in its proper time. This work ought to be done, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the amendment may be put upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the amendment submitted by him may be adopted as a part of the pending bill. Is there objection?

Mr. STEWART. I shall certainly not object, but I wish to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the invitation to make this a river and harbor measure did not come from his committee or from the Senate, but from the other House. There are in the bill several items—I do not know how many—of appropriations in that class of cases where contracts were authorized, but where no contracts have been made, and the only reason for the appropriation is to carry out existing law. This brings in selected cases while the great mass of cases are left out. It seems to me it would have been wiser if we could have had from the other side a river and harbor bill, so that we could all have had an equal chance.

I certainly shall not object to this amendment. It appears to be a matter of necessity, but this bill must be construed and considered a river and harbor measure to all intents and purposes by those who will read it. It is said that it is to be confined to those projects where contracts are authorized. That does not do any good, because the committee can not know whether the improvement will exceed the limit until the contract is made. Nobody ever thought of turning it over to the Committee on Appropriations until the contract is made. The fact that the authorization of a contract is made amounts to nothing. You go on as if there were no such authorization. If you are going to appropriate when no contract is made, you have an original river and harbor bill, and it is not fair, because here are all these other items. If you are going to have a river and harbor bill, let them come in regularly.

This makes a selection and without such discrimination as the committee would make if it were brought before them. Does anybody doubt that the appropriations desired by the two Senators before me, the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Delaware, would be granted if we had before us a river and harbor bill? These items may yet be stricken out in conference if you get them in. So I say this seems to me an irregular way of doing business, although there ought not to be any objection to either of these propositions.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Iowa will withdraw his motion.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. This is a matter that can not be disposed of in a moment, however.

I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that I am not hostile in any sense, and I do not know anyone who is, to his amendment, but if this is a measure necessary to our national defense, we have a committee in this body which deals with that class of questions; and if it shall come here as a measure of national defense, I certainly shall not object to it, nor will I object to any suggestion that comes here as a measure of national defense. But no committee has passed upon this question, and so far as I know no Department has suggested it. I will not be put in hostility to the amendment, but I do not agree that it shall go upon this bill until we have had some further investigation. Therefore I do not wish either to agree to accept or to exclude the amendment at this moment.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. The Senator from Iowa said he would not object if the amendment could be agreed to by unanimous consent. It was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Alabama when it was agreed to by unanimous consent?

Mr. PETTUS. The Chair so announced.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly the Chair could not have made such an announcement when I was on my feet ready to make objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state, so that there may be no misunderstanding, that the Chair, on the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, asked whether the unanimous consent of the Senate would be granted, and at the moment of closing, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] addressed the Chair and was recognized. Of course, the Chair made no decision upon the question of granting unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I am willing that this matter shall lie over until to-morrow, just as it is, in order that we may see what measures are to be presented here for consideration upon grounds of national defense. I suggest to Senators who have amendments of this character that they secure the recommendation of the committees having charge of national defense upon these subjects and not open the door here to a river and harbor bill. I ask that the pending bill may be laid aside for the day.

Mr. TELLER. I was about to ask if the Senator from Iowa would not allow the bill to be laid over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks that the pending bill may be laid aside until to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. TELLER. Some days since I asked the Senate to recall from the other House the bill (H. R. 1595) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, in order that I might move an amendment to an amendment which had already been adopted, as I thought, without proper examination. The bill was sent back from the House of Representatives, and the vote by which it was passed reconsidered, and the amendment was reconsidered. It is now on the Calendar, and I desire to submit an amendment to it. I will state that all of the parties who are interested in the bill have seen the amendment and all agree that it is proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. In lieu of the amendment found on page 2, commencing in the twenty-eighth line, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment beginning in line 28, page 2, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to secure from the State of Texas the necessary land on which to build a dam on the Rio Grande River at or near El Paso in that State. No reservoirs for the storage of water shall be built on said river within the boundaries of the Territory of New Mexico without an act of Congress authorizing the same.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the object of it?

Mr. TELLER. I will read the amendment as the committee reported it and as it passed the Senate, which has been reconsidered. That amendment went very much further, I think, than anybody who examined it supposed it did.

Provided, That nothing in this act or the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," or the act approved January 21, 1895, entitled "An act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes," or the act approved February 26, 1897, entitled "An act to provide for the use and occupation of reservoir rights reserved," shall be so construed as to authorize the appropriation or storage of the waters of any stream or river, State, interstate, or international, to which others below have right by prior appropriation, or the obstruction or interference with the navigable capacity of such streams or rivers; and such appropriation or storage, obstruction or interference, is hereby prohibited.

That is a very sweeping amendment, and when the attention of those who desired it was called to it they admitted that it went way beyond what they anticipated, it being drawn by somebody outside of the Senate, I understand. The present amendment accomplishes just what they want to accomplish and does not interfere with the people who are irrigating on the upper parts of those streams.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me? The amendment which was finally incorporated in the bill and passed by the Senate was not, I think, fully understood by the Committee on Public Lands. Since the passage of the bill and the adoption of the amendment its sweeping character has become quite obvious. I am inclined to think that objections will lie to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado. I am informed that certain litigation is now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States involving questions this bill touches so far as the Territory of New Mexico is concerned. I am not advised as to the extent or the manner in which the proposed amendment might affect the rights of the parties now litigating in the Supreme Court.

As I understand, the question involved in the case is whether a reservoir can be constructed or a dam built in the river or a ditch or canal constructed to divert the water from the channel of the stream in the Territory of New Mexico in such manner as to interfere with navigation in the lower river in Texas or along the Mexican border. That is a very serious and momentous question, and I believe it would be better, all in all, to recommit the bill and the proposed amendment to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TELLER. I will state that my amendment does not go to the extent the Senator from Montana indicates. It merely prevents the building of a storage reservoir on that river without the consent of Congress, and no such reservoir ought to be built except with the consent of Congress.

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

Mr. TELLER. But if there is to be any debate or trouble about it, I move to have the bill, together with my amendment, recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

THE HUBBARD COLLECTION OF ENGRAVINGS.

Mr. WETMORE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 139) authorizing the Librarian of Congress to accept the collection of engravings proposed to be donated to the Library of Congress by Mrs. Gertrude M. Hubbard.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Librarian of Congress is hereby empowered and directed to accept the offer of Mrs. Gertrude M. Hubbard, widow of the late Gardiner Greene Hubbard, communicated to him by the following letter, on the terms and conditions therein stated; and to communicate to Mrs. Hubbard the grateful appreciation of Congress of the public spirit and munificence manifested by said gift:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 21, 1898.

MY DEAR SIR: I hereby offer to the Congressional Library, for the benefit of the people of the United States, the collection of engravings made by my husband, the late Gardiner Greene Hubbard, and in addition thereto the art books, to be treated as part of the collection.

This disposition of the collection, the gathering of which was to him the pleasure of many years chiefly devoted to the welfare of his fellow-men, is in accordance with his wishes, and is that which would give him the greatest satisfaction.

I desire that a suitable gallery in the Library be devoted to this collection, and such additions as may from time to time be made to it, to be known as the "Gardiner Greene Hubbard Gallery," where it can be accessible to the public, to be studied and enjoyed under such reasonable regulations as may be made by Congress or by the authority to whom Congress may delegate the control of the Congressional Library.

Accompanying the collection is a bust of Mr. Hubbard by Gaetano Trentanove, which I desire may be kept in a suitable place in the gallery.

I propose during my lifetime to add to the collection from time to time, and in my will to make provision for increasing the collection by creating a fund of $20,000, to be placed in the hands of trustees, the interest of which is to be used by the Librarian of Congress in the purchase of additional engravings, it being my understanding that the expenses incident to the proper care of this collection will be borne by the Congressional Library and not be a charge against this fund.

I am, very sincerely, yours,

GERTRUDE M. HUBBARD.

The Hon. JOHN RUSSELL YOUNG,
Librarian of the Congressional Library, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MILLS. What is the value of the proposed donation?

Mr. WETMORE. I understand it is very considerable. I think the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] can inform the Senate more fully on that point.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it is impossible, I suppose, to fix the absolute value of the collection, but it was the work of this gentleman for a great many years. He was a man of very large wealth, and it is one of the finest collections in the world. I suppose a great many thousand dollars might easily be obtained for it if it were offered for sale. Mr. Hubbard for many years collected rare and costly engravings, in some instances the only copies in existence, all over the Continent of Europe. An expert came on from the city of Boston the other day, one of the most eminent experts in this country on that subject, and he made a comparison of it with the Gray and Randall collection, which is the property of Harvard College. Those two collections have now become one, and are the property of Harvard College, and they are kept for the public advantage in the Art Museum in Boston. They constitute undoubtedly the most valuable collection in this country, and one of the few principal collections in the world. This gentleman reports that this collection compares very favorably with that, and that in some departments it is much richer.

I suppose it would be like asking what is the value of a famous picture. No money estimate could be put on it. But I have no doubt it is worth a good many thousand dollars—a hundred thousand dollars or a hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, but I can not say exactly.

Mr. MILLS. I would have no objection, of course, to accepting this donation by Mrs. Hubbard, but it seems we are to pay a price that is of some value. A gallery is to be set apart and known by his name, which is about equivalent to building a monument to him for all time to come, or as long as the Library lasts. That is a very distinguished honor to be conferred on an individual when we come to think that some of the most illustrious names written on the pages of our history are not mentioned in the Library and that there are no busts and no monuments to represent them. It seems to me we ought first to commence to build monuments to the great men of this country, the men who have been conspicuous in building up the Library. I should like to see there a bust of Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the apartment to be devoted to this purpose is already used for engravings. It is not a new appropriation of a gallery, and I hope and believe that this will be a very great event in the history of the National Library and will be an example and stimulant to other benefactors.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] gives the reason why I am not willing that the joint resolution shall be passed. I do not think the Congressional Library ought to be converted into an establishment for commemorating the munificence or generosity of those who may desire to perpetuate their names in that way.

The joint resolution provides not merely that we shall accept this donation, but that a particular part of the building shall be set apart and be known by the name of the donor or rather that of the person whom she represents. If it is accepted, of course, it is but the beginning of a great number of such things. There is the most magnificent building in the world, and there is no place probably in this whole country where men of wealth would more delight to perpetuate their memories than by seeking to have Congress follow in their cases the precedent which we are asked to set here to-day. This grand public building should not be converted into a series of memorial halls for those who may have the means to make costly donations to the Government.

Mr. President, I do not think the Library is intended for the perpetuation of the memory of any particular man unless it is somebody connected with the Library, either with its inauguration, or in the work of its construction, or in its organization, or in its superintendence, certainly of persons connected with the Government; and it should not be used for the purpose of gratifying the wish of private individuals who, through their opportunity and ability to make donations of this kind, may have their names linked with this great enterprise and this great public work.

Mr. President, this is a country in which there is a great deal of wealth. It is a country in which there is going to be more of wealth than there is now. It is most laudable on the part of those who possess wealth that they should make benefactions of this kind; but I desire that they shall do it in a way not to convert this public institution into what would be a very different establishment from what it was originally designed to be. We have in this city a most notable monument to the generosity of a most liberal benefactor in the case of the Corcoran Art Gallery. I should be more than delighted to see that precedent followed, but I hope that we will not by the passage of the pending joint resolution inaugurate that which will be followed in innumerable instances in perpetuating in the Congressional Library the memories of private citizens, or else we will have to make a distinction and say we will allow it in one case and not in another.

Now, if this collection or any other collection is sought to be donated to the Government, I am in favor of accepting it; but I am not in favor of accepting it upon the conditions prescribed in the joint resolution, that it shall not only be placed in the public Library, but that a part of the public Library shall be set apart and known by the name of the party whose donation and personality are thus sought to be made perpetual and famous through all time.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, if this collection should be taken to the national gallery it would be inevitably called and known everywhere as the Hubbard collection. It is a very wonderful collection of costly etchings and they are of the very highest merit. I have had the honor to look over the collection to some extent. I did not endeavor to examine all of its treasures. It ought to be in the national gallery, and if it goes there it will have a name. People will instinctively call it the Hubbard collection. They will want to know where it is, so that they can go and examine those etchings, some of which are of great historical interest. I do not care about calling it the Hubbard gallery or anything of that sort, but I would be perfectly willing to accept it as the Hubbard collection of etchings.

Mr. SPOONER. I rose to suggest to my friend from Connecticut that years ago there was accepted from Dr. Toner——

Mr. HAWLEY. I used that name just now by mistake, thinking of the Toner collection.

Mr. SPOONER. I beg pardon. I did not know the Senator had it in mind.

Mr. HAWLEY. Dr. Toner was a distinguished physician here who expended large sums of money, and had made it a study to collect, along with other matter, medical works of all sorts, those of the ancient and a newer time. He gave his collection to the Government, and every lover of books and of libraries, and all men in the medical profession especially, were grateful to him. That collection was placed in the Library of Congress.

I think it a very excellent thing to tempt men of wealth, men who have spent lives upon what you may call fads, to bestow such gifts upon some State or national gallery. The national gallery may as well enter into the field of competition with the other institutions that are very glad to welcome such bequests. Put above the collection a bust, if you choose, and let them call it a collection or anything of the sort. We could not escape calling it a collection if it should be given to the Government without any condition whatever.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this collection contains, among other things, the finest collection in the world of prints illustrating the life of Napoleon, I dare say Senators may have seen the account of a very small part of this collection in one of the magazines lately. It was not only interesting in the history of art, but a great deal of it was entirely new to the public, illustrating the life and history of Napoleon. It is of great historic value. There are in the collection, I believe, a very large number of Rembrandts. In some of the schools the collection is wonderfully rich. I wish I had the report which the expert made about the treasures and the value of the collection.

This nation is distinguished from all others in the fact that what is done by public beneficence elsewhere is done by private munificence here. We have no great state university. We have no state churches. The Smithsonian Institution is the result of the private benefaction of an Englishman, and we call it by his name.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator be satisfied simply with the name being applied to the collection and not to a gallery?

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me there is very little difference in the two things. It is the phrase which will occur to anyone.

Mr. CULLOM. I know; but as there is no such gallery, simply give the individual name to the collection.

Mr. HOAR. One of the hundred square apartments, it is proposed by the Librarian and the Library Committee, shall be set apart for that purpose, and it will inevitably have that name. The people of this country pour out their wealth like water in some of these directions. It seems to me that it is a small recognition of so sumptuous and magnificent and unparalleled an example to the benefactors of the country to give a name to a small portion of that building in honor of this deceased gentleman whom we all knew.

Mr. Hubbard's life was a life of public benefaction. A number of things his wisdom and business ability have made practical. He took the telephone, the product of the genius of his son-in-law, introduced it to the world, and made it the instrument of civilization and of commerce in bringing mankind close together. He took what was almost a mere fancy, the teaching of the dumb articulate speech, and over every obstacle (his plan was dismissed from the Massachusetts legislature on the ground that it was a mere fad) he carried into effect that wonderful process which has opened a new avenue to the soul of the dumb. He was the builder of the first street railroad in this country, with a single exception, I think. He was one of the earliest men in introducing gas lighting into cities. So great an organizer was he that at the meeting held in his honor there were some eight or ten of the gentlemen, who were representatives of great leading institutions of charity and of education, each making a separate address setting forth the great services that Mr. Hubbard had rendered to the departments under their special charge. He died at the age of 77, working himself to death and breaking down, losing his life as a martyr in his devotion to the success of the great southern exposition at Nashville.

Perhaps if the proposition had been made otherwise it would have made no difference; but when this magnificent gift comes with the suggestion that an apartment be set apart for this collection where others will be gathered, and that it shall be called the Hubbard gallery, it seems to me it would be a great pity to interpose with a suggestion of a change or an amendment or a criticism. Within the few days since this letter was written and communicated to the chairman of the Committee on the Library this excellent lady has spent hundreds of dollars in increasing the value of the collection.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts from whom does this proposition come?

Mr. HOAR. It comes from Mrs. Hubbard.

Mr. GRAY. The widow?

Mr. HOAR. The widow of Gardiner G. Hubbard.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not depreciate in any manner the value of this gift, nor do I desire to be understood as unappreciative of the generosity of the donor, but I am earnest in the belief that it would be a most egregious error on the part of the Government of the United States to accept a donation of this kind from anyone, whatever may be the value of it, upon the terms and conditions which are imposed. We have to accept this donation with the conditions or not at all, unless the conditions are voluntarily changed by the donor.

I am perfectly willing that this collection should be accepted by the Government, and that we should agree to place it in the Public Library, and I am perfectly willing that it should be known as the Hubbard collection; but I am utterly unwilling (and I trust the Senate will come to the same conclusion) that a portion of that building shall be set apart in the name of any man, living or dead, now or for any time in the future. And yet that is the condition upon which it is proposed to make this donation.

Mr. HAWLEY. What does the Senator say to the Smithsonian Institution, where the whole institution was given upon conditions?
